The third article stipulates that communiques issued and to be issued, decisions and laws passed and to be passed and the policies implemented and to be implemented by the NATOite pro-American junta cannot be considered unconstitutional even if they are contradictory to the 1961 Constitution. The article in question eliminates de facto the authorities of the Constitutional Court and the Council of State. The fourth, fifth and sixth articles of the law ban requests for repeals of decision and [words indistinct] made by the junta and its Ulusu government even if they are contrary to the Constitution and existing laws. These decisions are automatically considered as constitutional or legal amendments.

This so-called temporary constitution prepared by the Evren junta in order to clearly establish a military dictatorship has been described—even by the press and propaganda tools of the imperialist countries that extend financial and moral support to the junta—as a law of dictatorship. On 27 October the BBC made the following commentary: The military administration has decreed a law granting itself unlimited authorities in governing Turkey. With this new law which renders invalid de facto the 1961 Constitution, the authorities of the Constitutional Court and the Council of State are eliminated. There will be no objection to the decisions and activities of the generals.

EUROPEAN COMMUNITY

EUROPEAN COMMUNITY SLACKESS AGRICULTURAL EMBARGO ON USSR

LD281406 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 28 Oct 80 p 18

[Text] Brussels (VWD)—European Community exporters can again export agricultural products to the USSR. Against the resistance of the Federal Republic and Great Britain, the European Community Commission has created opportunities for exporting to the USSR by increasing reimbursements for butter and powdered milk and by an invitation to offer tenders for barley. Council circles say that both member states have protested against that decision. The European Community's foreign ministers will probably discuss the slackening of the 15 January embargo against the USSR, imposed because of the occupation of Afghanistan, at a 24 November meeting.

France and Ireland advocated a slackening of the export embargo. They claim that the good export possibilities resulting from the poor Soviet harvest must not pass unexploited. A slackening of the embargo will depend first of all on the stance of the United States. Member states agree that the embargo policy has not had much of an effect. According to available information, the USSR managed to dodge the embargoes with the help of other countries.

According to provisional data, the USSR has made record agricultural imports in the current year. Despite the embargo, in the first 6 months the European Community shipped through so-called free licenses 576,000 tons of wheat, some 220,900 tons of barley and 127,000 tons of wheat flour. The European Community Commission, in a confidential report on the development of agricultural trade with the USSR, estimates that the average wheat export to the USSR amounts to 1.7 million tons and to 206,700 tons of barley, whereas in 1978 more than 400,000 tons were exported. Exports to the USSR experience considerable ups and downs. In the first 7 months of 1980 exports from the European Community amounted to 79,500 tons of butter, some 31,300 tons of butter oil and 20,000 tons of powdered milk. Last year the USSR obtained 134,600 tons of European Community butter. As regards beef, exports in the first half year amounted to 61,800 tons, while the total for the year before amounted to 55,400 tons. As regards poultry, some 31,700 tons were exported in the first half year as opposed to 77,100 tons in 1979.

LE MONDE CITES LUNS ON USSR SANCTIONS, FRENCH DETERRENT

[Unattributed report: "Luns Condemns 'Relative Inconsistency' of Economic Sanctions Against USSR"]

[Text] Speaking at a seminar at Crospierres (Ardeche) Saturday 25 October NATO Secretary General Luns condemned the "relative inconsistency" of the economic sanctions taken against the USSR after the invasion of Afghanistan. "The Soviet Union," he said, "continued to enjoy large amounts of credit which the Western countries are granting it on terms far more favorable than those they offer to individuals and private enterprises in their own countries.... It also seems that the flow of advanced technology exported to the East by at least some Western countries has not suffered any noticeable reduction despite everything that has been said in favor of sanctions."

In addition, while denying that he wishes to alter the North Atlantic Treaty, Mr Luns emphasized the importance of extending its zone of operation. "The alliance will no longer be able to limit its attention to the geographical zone defined in this treaty," he said, "if it wishes to continue to protect its members' vital interests as it has succeeded in doing in the past."

Finally, the NATO secretary general expressed the view that France has a "real deterrent force with a capacity for immediately responding to any attack, which will make the Soviets think twice." Similarly, on the naval plane, "thanks to the French fleet there is not too much to worry about in the Mediterranean."

SCHMIDT CONGRATULATES TIKHONOV ON APPOINTMENT

LD301400 Hamburg DPA in Germany 1345 GMT 30 Oct 80

[Text] Bonn, (DPA)--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt congratulated today Nikolay A. Tikhonov, the new Soviet premier, on his appointment as Aleksey Kosygin's successor. In the telegram Schmidt also expressed the hope that during Tikhonov's period in office relations between both countries "might be consistently expanded and deepened to the mutual advantage of and in the interests of the continuation of the policy of cooperation between East and West." In this connection the federal chancellor recalled Tikhonov's 4-year work as chairman of the Soviet delegation in the Joint Commission for Economic and Scientific-Technological Cooperation and his several visits to the Federal Republic.

AGREEMENT SIGNED WITH PRC ON ENERGY DEVELOPMENT

LD300500 Hamburg DPA in German 1148 GMT 30 Oct 80

[Excerpt] Bonn, 29 Oct (DPA)--The Federal Republic and the PRC want to cooperate also in the development and testing of systems for the utilization of solar energy, windpower and biomass in rural districts. An agreement to this effect was signed on Wednesday by the delegation leaders of the Joint Commission for Scientific-Technological Cooperation. The commission, set up in 1979, met in Bonn for its first meeting.

According to the Federal Research Ministry the pilot project in the sphere of recycled energy sources is specifically planned for the supply of electricity for rural brigades and peasant families. It will take place in a village of about 200 houses which by 1982 will be built in the vicinity of Beijing. China wants to work primarily with German firms in evaluating the results.

The commission, led by Bonn State Secretary Hans-Hilger Haunschild and Zhao Dongwan, deputy chairman of the State Commission for Science and Technology, had before that dealt with the state and further development of numerous cooperation projects in the sphere of science and technology. They stretch from energy and raw materials research to questions of research planning.

According to the Research Ministry, Haunschild and the leader of the Chinese delegation were in agreement that scientific-technological cooperation played an important role as "a pioneer for economic-industrial cooperation." Haunschild stressed that the Federal Government undertook to use its efficiency in science and technology for cooperation with countries which were in the developing stage.

Zhao Dongwan and Haunschild emphasized that the interests of the two countries complemented each other well. The Federal Republic is a highly industrialized country short of raw materials. China has large deposits of raw materials and wants to use them more and better. Seen thus the scientific-technological cooperation with the People's Republic is also a contribution toward safeguarding the supply of raw materials for Germany, said the state secretary. The Federal Government also proceeds from the premise that German firms will be given preference in the economic utilization of raw materials opened up with the assistance of German scientists and engineers.

PRESS VIEWS RECENT DEVELOPMENTS CONCERNING POLAND

BW1159 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0605 GMT 30 Oct 80

[Press review on USSR concern about developments in Poland]

[Text] The KONSTANZ SUEDKURIER writes: The phase in which the Soviet Union watched developments in Poland in a critically temporizing manner seems to be over.

The demand for the Warsaw party and government leadership to come to Moscow, declared as an invitation, cannot be understood in any other way. The Kremlin obviously fears that Kania and Pinkowski no longer have developments in their country under control. The triggering element was probably the renewed conflict with the new trade union Solidarity which demanded talks with the Polish Government in the form of an ultimatum. The people surrounding Brezhnev probably harbor no illusions about the fact that the Solidarity movement in Poland is not the work of individuals but is supported by the broad mass of the people.

NEUE OSNABRUECKER ZEITUNG makes the following comment: The circumstances under which the meeting on the Moskva River will be held today indicate a dramatic development. The official announcement of the visit reveals that the Poles will have to answer to the CPSU Central Committee and to the members of the government. This is a highly political affair which must be viewed in context with the constantly intensifying campaign of the fraternal parties against the independent Polish trade union movement. Owing to the latest events in the People's Republic the situation in the East bloc has grown to be as tense as it was at the time of the Prague Spring. The parallel to Dubcek's fateful trip to Moscow becomes clearly evident. Kania and Pinkowski will probably not be received with much friendship, says NEUE OSNABRUECKER ZEITUNG.

MANNHEIMER MORGEN views the situation as follows: The situation in Warsaw grows constantly more critical now that the mass of the trade union members is obviously not prepared to accept the statute censorship exercised by the Warsaw court. On various occasions attention has been drawn to the fact that developments in Warsaw already show a similarity with the Prague Spring. It was only after some hesitation then as well that Moscow intervened in Prague. The barrage now coming from the GDR and from Czechoslovakia heralds evil.

SCHWAEBISCHE ZEITUNG of Leutkirch notes: Developments in Poland are approaching a climax. The U.S. presidential election constitutes the deadline beyond which Moscow and its clientel presumably plan to delay any political action. Developments in Poland per se promise little good, because they are threatening to get out control. The SCHWAEBISCHE ZEITUNG continues elsewhere in the editorial by saying that men like Walesa, however, are threatening to call a general strike; nevertheless they are trying to avert confrontation. The latest example is that 12 November has been picked for the threatened general strike—a workfree national holiday. The cat and mouse game they are playing with each other reveals wisdom and a feeling of responsibility, but there is a hitch to the affair: Revolutionary transformations develop dynamics of their own. Growing disunity is already becoming evident in the new trade union. Those who do not like the completely new trend continue their presence in the party anyway. Walesa or Kania, or both, might tumble from the tightrope walk between demonstrations of power and pliancy. What would occur in that case would be chaos in which Brezhnev, Honecker and their comrades would issue marching orders for the restoration of law and order, summoned once again by brothers allegedly needing help.

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE Editorial

DW301246 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 30 Oct 80 p 1

[Ernst-Otto Metzke editorial: "Aggravation at the Elbe and the Vistula"]

[Text] It only costs the ruling communist parties a shrug of the shoulders to delimit themselves more sharply from their class enemy in the West; the alleged axiom that "no alternative" exists to detente does not pertain to them. But as soon as the East Berlin leadership, in agreement with Moscow, isolates itself vis-a-vis a socialist neighbor country by ending visa-free travel to Poland, something grave and ominous has happened that creates a serious situation, particularly if the measure is caused by "the wish of the GDR," accompanied by commentaries mentioning "stabilization" in the neighboring country. The disruption of visa-free travel is a violation of socialist manners. Seen that way it is nothing less than the sharpest aggravation of the Polish crisis so far.

The consequences are as equally dangerous for the GDR as for Poland. Prerequisites for an intervention are being made step by step; arguments and instruments are being prepared. It is already being said in East Berlin that the "true Polish patriots" can count on "unlimited GDR support" for strengthening socialism. It has been indicated throughout the entire past month that such support could also be meant militarily.

In the first week of October the GDR papers suddenly reported on the joint training of Polish and GDR air forces; a Polish major, an exchange graduate of the Dresden Military Academy, said about his officer comrades of the National Peoples Army: "We have often met in the air to protect our states wing to wing."

This time that does not imply a Western threat. In the second week of October the minister of the GDR Armed Forces made a most unusual inspection trip of the Oder area, stating thereafter at the GDR's eastern border that his soldiers would protect socialism and peace at any time at the side of the Soviet Army and of other fraternal armies.

At the beginning of the fourth week in October, the annual graduation ceremony of the Dresden Military Academy was turned into a demonstrative East German-Polish brothers-in-arms meeting. On that occasion Peoples Army officers greeted the "dear Soviet and Polish brothers-in-arms," and a Polish lieutenant thanked them with a toast that could lead right away to carnage:

"We are profoundly convinced that our party and workers class are capable of leading our country on the course of further development of stabilization and of jettisoning all that is at odds with the Polish state and with socialism."

The transition from warnings to threats was smooth. This will all appear familiar to older Polish citizens who can still hear the voices from the Berlin of 1939. But unfortunately two things are new: The officer corps of the Polish Armed Forces—not so much they themselves nor perhaps their supreme military leadership—has been cemented rather solidly into the "brotherhood in arms" of the Warsaw Pact armies.

Now also Poland can be completely isolated and besieged by three member states of the alliance which simultaneously are the most doctrinaire ones. In 1939 many Poles still had the option of escaping to Romania; this time the entire Polish people is trapped.

But not just the Polish people. The Germans in the GDR are hardly in a more favorable situation. For a decade they afforded themselves the luxury of nursing resentments against their Polish neighbors because the latter have swooped down on the GDR like grasshoppers and cleared the stores of goods since 1971 when visa-free travel began. The fact that the open socialist border gave the GDR people some freedom of movement and even a breath of spiritual freedom—they were able to read Western newspapers in Polish towns—was not properly appreciated. Now the barriers on the Oder and Neisse rivers are as good as closed again, and contacts with relatives and friends in the West were impaired immediately. The GDR is a largely isolated territory again, a zone, a pressure boiler, and nobody over there can know whether things will soon grow even worse.

On Moscow's instructions the GDR leadership is playing with two fires instead of just one. By delimiting itself toward Poland it attracts Polish hatred; by its delimitation toward the Federal Republic it turns its own people against itself. Apparently East Berlin and Moscow assess the situation in such a way that this does not matter. This is the very circumstance which is the most menacing of all. They neither seek a defusing of the situation nor envisage it as an option. The Polish crisis is constantly being escalated. There is a bad winter ahead.

DIE WELT Commentary

DW301344 Bonn DIE WELT in German 30 Oct 80 p 6

[Commentary signed CGS.: "A Wall Eastward as Well"]

[Text] Nothing could make any plainer the "two-front psychosis" into which the East Berlin leadership is working itself now than the travel curbs promulgated between the "GDR" and Poland. In the future Polish citizens will no longer be allowed to visit to visit the "GDR" without a special invitation by relatives--the same applying to "GDR" inhabitants wanting to go to Poland. The uncontrolled, visa-free traffic of visitors has thus been discontinued--and the SED declares that this will last until the situation in Poland is "stable" again.

We cannot help but gain the impression that the East Berlin leadership intends to fan anti-Polish sentiments among the people. The Poles have been accused for a long time of having bought out the "GDR" during their visits. A strange difference comes to light here: In the West people are eager to induce foreign guests to make purchases. In the socialist East bloc, however, the purchases of a socialist brother who has no Western currency are considered attempts on one's own economy. In this case, after all, it is impossible to speak of malicious capitalist currency manipulations as they do in "justification" of the increase in the exchange quotas for Western currencies--and yet the zloty is not in demand.

But what matters by far is no longer the exchange of goods in this or that form. What alarms the SED leadership much more is the exchange of ideas and opinions. During the papal visit last year thousands of young Germans from the "GDR" went to Poland. Maybe Honecker is afraid that his subjects might make pilgrimages to Lech Walesa in the near future as well. And the Soviets already threaten that they will cause the Madrid CSCE conference to fail. Who dares speak of detente in the face of that?

REAGAN-CARTER TELEVISION DEBATE OUTCOME ASSESSED

[Commentary signed Ein.: "The Great Duel"]

[Text] War and peace were the main issues of the television duel between Carter and Reagan even though the American nation has completely different problems. The people suffer from unemployment and inflation, uncertainty over the future and rapidly increasing prices for their daily bread, but the millions living on welfare saw only a little of that reality when they viewed the competition of words on their television screens. The hostage drama only played a minor role. Ronald Reagan was unable to launch a frontal attack on the economic policy, the unstable security policy and the doubtful Iranian policy of the government whose time in office is running out. As the challenger only gloomy issues offered themselves to him; but Carter knew how to avoid such a discussion.

The President followed the advice of his team and concentrated on making his competitor appear to lack credibility. In a mild tone, sometimes directly and sometimes camouflaged, he repeated his reproaches of recent days, saying that Reagan was actually dangerous, thus implying that he means war and Carter means peace. To the surprise of all the experts, the former governor of California was caught in that trap. He lost quite a few points in the exchange of blows, but Carter did not knock his adversary down with words. Ronald Reagan may be intellectually inferior to Carter, but as an old hand he has learned his lesson. He managed to come up with some wonderful parries, particularly at the end of the debate. In addition, he knows from 40 years of experience as an actor how to make the audience feel at ease.

This appearance of the matadors was not pure show. The listener was flooded with statistics. The normal consumer only heard contradictions, but finally the facts outlined by each party formed a clear picture. The black and white of the candidates faded for history into a common grey of the present. America is not only poor, it is also rich. The country does not completely lag behind militarily, but it does not stand alone at the pinnacle of power either. In the end the question will be to whom the voter will give his confidence on 4 November. If those are right who say that only he can become president who makes a presidential impression on the television screen--because only appearance and not the word counts on TV--Reagan would be the next master of the White House, but this interpretation is too simple. It contains all the skepticism, however, with which one should view such discussions.

'Credibility Gap' Seen Emerging

[Thomas Kielinger editorial: "The Jury in the Living Room"]

[Text] They started out not to lose this fight, a goal, at least, they accomplished. Carter and Reagan can shelve the Cleveland TV debate with the superficially mollifying certainty of not having committed any grave mistake and of having properly sold their election campaign credo. If we believe the enthusiasm of a Hamilton Jordan, who can call himself President Carter's most important adviser, then the President won "in substance as well as in style."

Well, one would not wish to have the gentleman from Georgia pass judgement on questions of style. How should a President be assessed who quotes daughter Amy as chief witness on the "disarmament" topic who allegedly told him just a few days prior to the debate that the curbing of nuclear weapons is the most important task of our era? Obviously the President has a new security adviser now, a commentator remarked laconically. One could express this in even unfriendlier terms.

Le style est l'homme. He who mobilizes children for a platitude on our time, hoping to thereby hit his adversary particularly hard, is in the very middle of the "overkill" crisis, which ends up for the most part as a festival for the cartoonists. Behind the facade of strained coldness Jimmy Carter indeed looked like a man in a crisis. His choice of vocabulary was revealing: six times the term "dangerous", just as often the word "alarming", all of them quite emphatically pronounced in the direction of his adversary.

But in the reality of the living rooms the latterlooked anything but dangerous and alarming. Ronald Reagan appeared to be relaxed, admonishing in a paternal way, full of humor and well packaged into a lifejacket of commonsense. Consequently a considerable credibility gap existed between the phrases of the President, which were intended to paint a gloomy picture of the whole situation, and the appearance of his Republican challenger--and it is this credibility gap, especially in the attacks against Reagan, which will probably cause Jimmy Carter a lot of trouble on 4 November. Reagan said so in his strikingly simple way: To him the President looks like a medicine man who is exicited because a doctor has appeared who has a better cure.

The contrast was particularly clear on the SALT topic: For Carter it was a case of Reagan's carelessness, for Reagan a case of arguments. The Republican said it was not he who would retract SALT II--it is the Senate which is rejecting the treaty. The treaty, he said, is illegal because it violates the commandment of equality for the systems, prescribed by the Senate after SALT I. While the U.S. B-52 bombers are counted under SALT II, the Russian "Backfire" bomber remains exempt. Thus, we saw a Reagan who not only smiled telegenically, but who is also able to present facts objectively.

The fact that such signals reach the voter is due to the very medium which some prophets of doom castigate as the very end of democracy, if not the end of the human ability to think: television. En route from the podium in Cleveland to the living room of millions most of what is pure political propaganda becomes relative. The final recipient is not the mass of human beings--which public opinion pollers often overlook--but the individual in his more of less threatened home. There he sits comfortably, drinking a can of beer, and seeing exactly what hollow pathos an embarrassed evasion is and what a sure answer is. The political debates on commercial television do not spare the candidates. In the first part of the Cleveland debate the journalists had the right to a followup question, while in the latter part the candidates were allowed to press each other hard with followup and final summations with the dispute increasingly approaching the character of a genuine debate. There is no interruption or intervention by an omnipotent moderator, just an occasional sarcastic remark by one of the interviewing journalists, for example, that the two candidates had just failed to answer a question at all. The press is the "fourth estate" and the living room is the grand jury. In this manner a free society at decisive moments avails itself of television as a medium for forming an independent judgement. The prerequisite for this is a profession of journalists which is not subjected to political tutelage and a television which is independent of the public and therefore forced to produce journalistic quality.

After Cleveland the Americans are aware that they are dealing with a President who is very ill at ease and paltry in stature; at his side the challenger appears easy going and sure of himself, just as he, after a strenous appearance, laughingly countered in answer to the question whether the presence of the President intimidated him: "No, why should it? I have even been on stage with John Wayne." Actually Ronald Reagan is much more deeply rooted in the American nature than is Jimmy Carter. His philosophy of less government internally and more authority abroad does not spring from the Republican credo alone but from an old American longing. The question next Tuesday is whether the voters still dare avow it in the new decade or whether the man from Georgia has already lulled them to sleep in world political terms on the smallest common denominator.

SPD-FDP COALITION TALKS CONCENTRATE ON ECONOMY

DW311044 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0605 GMT 31 Oct 80

[Press review on SPD-FDP talks in Bonn]

[Text] LUBECKER NACHRICHTEN stresses: The coalition negotiations between the SPD and the FDP on government policy for the next 4 years will presumably last longer than orginally planned. This is not surprising, as after all what is at stake is the difficult question of what the people may, or must, be asked to put up with in view of a zero growth rate in the economy. It is beyond doubt that the era of an increase in prosperity each year is approaching its end. Possibly we will learn from Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's government statement on 24 November what will ultimately emerge in the way of painful measures. But one thing is definite even now: All of us must tighten our belts.

NEUE OSNABRUECKER ZEITUNG notes: The round of coalition talks is aggravated by the need to submit a budget which can be balanced only through new debts, even though the planned budget increase amounts to about a mere 4 percent. Thus the negotiations in part turned as anticipated into discussions on the 1981 budget and on medium-term finance planning. Limitations on the budget increase and on the increase in indebtedness, as announced, look like mere cosmetic corrections. In reality the Federal Government has no alternative but to shift its own payment responsibilities to others such as the equalization payments of the pension insurance to the unemployment insurance, or to task the Federal Bank, the Federal Postal Service and the Federal Railroad so as to avoid additional debts. Once this budget is up for debate in the Bundestag it will become evident what this inventory is really like. Until then the coalition parties should be glad that they are able to satisfy their own followings at the moment.

FRANCOIS-PONCET COMMENTS ON IRAN-IRAQ CONFLICT, AFGHANISTAN

NC302112 Paris AFP in English 2103 GMT 30 Oct 80

[Text] Paris, 30 Oct (AFP)--Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet called here today for negotiations under the United Nations Security Council to end the Iraqi-Iranian war. Speaking as host at a dinner for Moroccan Foreign and Cooperation Minister M'hamed Boucetta, Mr Francois-Poncet noted that France had backed the attempt by the Islamic Conference to mediate between Iraq and Iran.

On Afghanistan, Mr Francois-Poncet said that the Soviet intervention had modified the trust "on which peace rests." There were "grave dangers" to peace, he said, and France and Morocco, "by their understanding, are determined to face these dangers together and jointly meet the challenge."

On the war in the Western Sahara, Mr Francois-Poncet said it could be settled through a "patient search for a political settlement among the states concerned." France, he said, would contribute to this if asked and if the situation warranted.

MINE WARFARE TASK FORCE TO BE STATIONED IN DJIBOUTI

[Jacques Isnard report: "Mine Defense Force Sent by France Will Be Stationed in Djibouti"]

[Excerpt] At the president's initiative the French Naval General Staff has decided to send a mine warfare task force to the Indian Ocean which will be commanded by Rear Adm Philippe Lejeune, commander of French Naval Forces in that region, and will be based in Djibouti.

This naval force will comprise two minehunters (Cantho and Vinh-Long) weighing 780 tons each fully loaded, three minesweepers (Verseau, Capella and Capricorne) each weighing 440 tons fully loaded and a logistic support vessel (Loire) weighing 21.45 tons fully loaded. The two minehunters are usually based at Toulon (Var) and the three minesweepers at Cherbourg (Manche) and the logistic support vessel at Brest (Finistere).

There is reason to think that France's decision is a response to fears among Western countries and Persian Gulf, Gulf of Oman and Indian Ocean states that one of the warring factions in the current conflict between Iraq and Iran will decide to mine the Strait of Hormuz through which 60 percent of European oil passes.

LE MONDE: POLAND TO RECEIVE NEW CREDIT FROM FRANCE

LD301609 Paris LE MONDE in French 30 Oct 80 p 8

[Paul Fabra report: "Warsaw To Be Granted New Credit Facilities"]

[Excerpts] One aspect of the Polish crisis which is well known in principle but not in detail is the country's very large debts to Western banks and states. French Treasury Director Haberer recently went to Warsaw to negotiate what has to be called a partial rescheduling of the Polish debt to France.

In the fall of 1979 Warsaw asked the French Government to grant it a credit of some Fr3 billion to aid its balance of payments. An agreement was reached at the beginning of this year for a Fr1.25 billion loan for 8 years with a 4-year moratorium before beginning repayment. That operation was intended to enable Poland to meet its "purchasing credit" repayment obligations. The big French banks supplied the necessary sums but 95 percent of them are guaranteed by COFACE [French Insurance Company for Foreign Trade].

All the indications are that another operation of the same type has just been agreed. It could be worth around Fri.7 billion since the export credits carrying a COFACE guarantee which Poland is due to pay back next year total that amount.

LE MONDE ANALYZES DIFFERENCES BETWEEN CARTER, REAGAN

[Editorial: "Two Outlooks"]

[Text] The great debate between Carter and Reagan will not have revealed anything basically new to their fellow citizens who have already been watching their perfectly polished performances for several months. While not teaching the Americans anything, it does give the Europeans a chance to form some idea of what is at stake on 4 November.

Far from seeking to conceal their differences, the outgoing President and his Republican challenger emphasised them, first in the economic and social policy sphere and, second, in foreign policy. However traditional they might be, these differences deserve to be analyzed if only because they concern the entire world.

In Mr Reagan's view there is only one remedy for the many crises which the United States has been passing through for more than 10 years now (race riots, Vietnam war, Watergate scandal, economic recession): the voluntarist prescription. The United States stands to gain nothing from thinking about its problems; what it needs, and all its needs, is the will to be strong, to return to the position of the world's undisputed leading power. The days of concessions, dialogue and moderation have gone on too long both on the overseas and domestic planes.

Although he did tone down his statements to a reasonable extent Tuesday evening, the former governor of California did make his views particularly clear and made no secret of his view that the United States has been far too reluctant to resort to force in the past few years. Despite all Mr Carter's vacillations in the hostage affair, you cannot help wondering what would have happened between Washington and Tehran in the past year if Mr Reagan had been at the helm. The same question should be asked not so much with regard to Soviet-U.S. relations—the protagonists' margin for maneuver is relatively narrow in that they know that their survival is at stake—but with regard to other peripheral crises: Cuba, Panama, Nicaragua and the Israel-Arab conflict, to mention only a few.

Similarly, in the domestic policy sphere, Mr Reagan portrayed himself as an ardent defender of free enterprise. According to him, he wants to win power in order to exercise it as little as possible, to erode as much as possible of the fragile system of social guarantees laboriously established: Tax cuts, cuts in federal aid, reduction in the minimum wage, indirect attack on social security and medical assistance—these are the ingredients of this traditionalist Republican cure-all. In these circumstances it is not surprising that Mr Carter strongly attacked his rival on all these questions which affect several tens of millions of underprivileged people whose numbers are constantly growing thanks to the economic crisis.

When talking of Mr Reagan it is wrong to portray him as an extreme reactionary, if not a neofascist, dreaming of picking quarrels overseas as well as inside the U.S. borders. He is not as exceptional as that and is part of an old U.S. tradition; during his two terms of office as governor of California he also proved that he can be realistic when he is opposed.

Nonetheless we are justified in asking whether this is the man the United States need to continue a very difficult adaptation to a changing world. His simplistic reactions and his gut "Cartierism," [French journalist who opposed aid to Third World] his inability to understand social and national movements are all elements which could get out of hand in a way which might have extremely serious consequences not only for the United States.

LE FIGARO CLAIMS U.S. 'MACHIAVELLIAN' PLAN FOR HOSTAGE RELEASE

LD301709 Paris LE FIGARO in French 29 Oct 80 pp 1-2

[Serge Maffert article: "Hostages: The Great American Game"]

[Text] In his major speech yesterday the Imam Khomeyni made no reference to the eventual freeing of the U.S. hostages. The Iranian parliament (the Majlis) is this morning resuming in principle the debate on them under way since Sunday. For their part, the Washington authorities are guarding increasingly against any premature optimism. However, there is every reason to believe that the United States and Iran have been in agreement for several days now. The freeing of the hostages--allowing for a last minute accident en route--is planned for the final days of the election campaign: On 4 November Mr Carter will be able to present himself before the voters with a triumph which will ensure his reelection.

The U.S. maneuver which we are going to relate here, with a few conditional clauses, was set in motion several months ago in the greatest secrecy and has been remarkably Machiavellian, Machiavellian in the sense that, whatever happened, Washington would be the winner.

The whole affair can be summed up effectively in an extremely skillful instigation designed to embroil Saddam Husayn and Iraq in a war against Iran. If Baghdad won, Iran would be destabilized, the Islamic regime dismantled and a pro-Western government set up. If, as foreseen, Iraq failed, the United States could appear to be Iran's defender and cash in on giving it assistance. We outlined this U.S. strategy back on 10 October.

The affair really began last June. Mr Brzezinski, who was in Jordan, a country very closely linked with Iraq, met Mr Saddam Husayn in person on the border between the two countries. He assured the latter of King Husayn's total support and above all made it clear to him that the United States would not oppose Iraqi ambitions toward the Shatt al-Arab and toward an eventual republic of Arabistan (Iranian Khuzestan).

In the summer Mr Shahpur Bakhtiar and General Oveysi, the two Iranian emigre leaders, were invited to Baghdad where they were told essentially that they could begin preparing to set up a free Iranian government.

At the same time and in a roundabout way (essentially through Saudi Arabia and Kuwait), the Americans, that is probably the CIA, sent Iraq "information" that, as soon as Iraqi troops appeared, there would be a general rising of the whole Arab population of Khuzestan, Iran's total collapse and a rapid disintegration of what remained of the Iranian Army.

Toward mid-September Dubai, which had served since the Western embargo as a transit port for Iranian imports, suddenly shut itself off to this traffic. On 20 September Mr Shahpur Bakhtiar, who was increasing his trips and contacts, announced according to certain sources that on 23 September he would be ringing a school bell inside Iran. On 22 September, after a week of sporadic harassment, Iraqi forces crossed the Iranian border in force.

This was the big surprise (although maybe not for everybody): The prestigious Iraqi Army, well equipped and trained in the dual tradition of Sandhurst--the British equivalent of Santi-Cyr--and the Moscow military academy, was rapidly halted. Their heavy armored units reportedly operated as if they were in central Europe rather than the desert, where they got bogged down. The quartermaster service--meaning logistical support--did not follow.

On the other hand, the national unity reflex came into play immediately. The foreign army and emigres showing up in their trucks (like the 1792 events in France), rallied Iran around Khomeyni and Bani-Sadr and miraculously revived the shah's prestigious army—or at least part of it. The young Prince Reza announced from Cairo that he was ready to join this army as an ordinary soldier.

While the Iraqi forces were marking time outside Khorramshahr, the Iranian political operations conducted from abroad rapidly collapsed. Bakhtiar and Oveysi now seem completely isolated.

It was at this point that the American maneuvering got into full stride. On 3 October Iranian-U.S. contacts got discreetly underway again, partially through Algerian mediation. Mr Carter sent three successive letters to President Bani-Sadr, on 7, 11 and 23 October. He confirmed Washington's acceptance "without reservations" of all the Iranian conditions for the release of the hostages and gave his consent to the resumption of deliveries of military materiel. A letter emanating from the Congress in mid-October confirmed the American intentions:

Unfreezing of all Iranian assets frozen in the United States;

Abandonment of all possible obstacles to future court actions to recover the Pahlavis' fortune;

Resumption of deliveries of military materiel ordered before the embargo.

When Iranian Premier Raja'i arrived at the United Nations on 17 October, the whole financial package was all ready to be exchanged for the hostages' freedom, having been settled following the Iranian Central Bank vice chairman's stay in Washington.

So the Iran-Iraq war gave the Tehran government the occasion and the opportunity finally to rid itself of the hostages and Mr Carter the chance successfully to complete an efficient, if not glorious diplomatic operation.

Finally, we should note one of the most curious aspects of this whole affair: the objective alliance between Washington and Moscow to secure the American hostages' release. According to highly reliable Western sources, the Soviets used all their influence to that end. In particular, apparently, they interceded with the Tudeh--the Iranian Communist Party, which is gradually gaining in strength in Khomeyni's shadow--to aid that release by setting free those of the hostages who were in its care.

This attitude clarifies two points:

1. The growing role of the Tudeh, which aspires to the part of a safe haven in the Iranian disorder and is making ready for a future which may not be very far off.

2. The USSR's clear wish to mediate in the Middle East, which applies in Iran as much as in Syria and, ultimately, in Iraq.

The American hostages will undoubtedly soon be released, but the price paid by Mr Carter will have been increased.

MALTESE GROUP CLAIMS BOMBING OF LIBYAN GUNBOAT IN GENOA

NC311105 Paris AFP in English 1006 GMT 31 Oct 80

[Text] Rome, 31 Oct (AFP)--An anonymous caller today claimed responsibility on behalf of the Maltese Liberation Front for a bomb attack on a Libyan gunboat in the northern Italian port of Genoa.

The bomb was placed between the boat's hull and the quay on Wednesday apparently by frogmen. Police are examining air bottles and straps found under the vessel.

Responsibility was claimed for the front in a telephone call to AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE here.

"We will continue our action until Malta is free of imperialist companies from Libya," the anonymous caller said.

POSTPONEMENT OF PAPAL VISIT TO FRG FORESEEN

DW301438 Hamburg DIE ZEIT in German 31 Oct 80 p 13

[Karl Joseph Hefele article: "Papal Visit Will Be Postponed"]

[Text] Cologne-Rome--According to information from well-informed quarters of the Vatican and the German episcopacy, Pope John Paul II's visit to the Federal Republic, envisaged for mid-November, will be postponed suddenly. The official announcement of this decision by the Vatican is expected at the beginning of next week.

John Paul II, known for his way of not handling the Vatican bureaucracy particularly gently, reportedly decided on this course of action after he had seen the official itinerary. Obviously the supreme Catholic prelate is dissatisfied with the program that had been mapped out under considerable German influence.

Granted, places of pilgrimage such as Altoetting are central sites of the Catholic creed, yet the pope is not visiting the Federal Republic as a pilgrim; he instead wishes in his capacity as the bishop of Rome and the head of the entire Catholic Church to get to know to the best degree possible the German branch of the church, its role in the world, its significance for society and policy but also its specific problems. This is why he intends primarily to listen and to do less representing.

John Paul II fails to see in the envisaged itinerary any meetings or talks with the strongly critical wing of German Catholicism, with theologians such as Rahner, Nell-Breuning, Kueng, Metz, Greinacher and Haag, nor could the head of the Catholic Church travel to the Federal Republic in 1080 without making a stopover in Tuebingen, from whence the Protestant and later also the Catholic theology was influenced decisively for centuries.

Yet this is exactly what influential Vatican circles and some German bishops wanted to avoid, because they were afraid of a potential upgrading of the progressive theologians as a result. Yet in the very country whose media has most vehemently criticized the "Vatican tourism," the pope wants to demonstrate that the open dialogue with people of a different mind is an essential characteristic feature of his interpretation of his office.

This is why the head of the Catholic Church does not consider the envisaged 1-hour talk with representatives of the Evangelical Church of Germany adequate. He wants to devote much more time to the pressing problems of the Christian church. The program planning recently has been the target of sharp Protestant criticism, especially on the part of Prof Helmut Thielicke.

What John Paul II likewise wishes to do under any circumstance is to hold mass in the former concentration camp at Dachau. A half-hour meeting planned with representatives of the Jews in Osnabrueck is not sufficient as far as he is concerned. In a time of reviving anti-Semitism, the supreme Catholic prelate wishes to demonstrate a clear attitude during an outstanding event on the itinerary, considering the relationship between the church and the Jews wich has been historically burdened anyway.

The pope also wants to visit the grave of Ignaz Doellinger in Munich to pray there for the unity of the divided Christians. After the first Vatican Council Doellinger had founded the old Catholic Church in protest against the dogma of infallibility.

It has also been learned that Cardinals Hoeffner and Ratzinger tried on the occasion of the bishops's conference in Rome to change the mind of John Paul II. They are afraid that the postponement of the visit will greatly disappoint German Catholics, yet the pope upheld his decision. The credibility of the supreme Catholic prelate and of the entire Catholic Church cannot be strengthened by simply leaving aside during such a visit the problems that obviously exist.

It has been learned from informed quarters that in some singular cases displeasure over the visit by the pope had also been voiced within the German episcopacy. In the opinion of some bishops, the chairman of the bishop's conference, Cologne Cardinal Hoeffner, railroaded the program through in undue haste and nearly all on his own.

Reportedly the papal visit to the Federal Republic will be postponed until April 1981.

SOARES ADVISES AGAINST SUPPORTING EANES IN ELECTION

LD302334 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2300 GMT 30 Oct 80

[Text] Speaking on Portuguese television tonight, Mario Soares accused General Ramalho Eanes of having breached the written agreement he signed with the Socialist Party concerning the 7 December presidential elections. Stressing that he will not back Eanes' presidential campaign or recommend a vote for any candidate, Mario Soares criticized the decision taken by the national committee to back the president of the republic's reelection bid, describing such a decision as a political mistake.

The secretary general of the Socialist Party challenged the view that only by reelecting Eanes can democracy be defended, arguing instead that rather, it is through the political parties that democracy can be defended.

Soares Statement

LD310504 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 0001 GMT 31 Oct 80

[Excerpt] Mario Soares appeared on Portuguese television last night where he explained the reasons that led him to withdraw his support from General Ramalho Eanes' reelection bid:

[Begin Soares recording] My decision was based on moral and political grounds. With regard to the former, I would simply like to say that the Socialists as a whole and the left—even the non-Socialist left—felt General Ramalho Eanes' news conference was a sort of slap in the face. During the election campaign, Socialist militants and Republican and Socialist Front sympathizers cheered the name of General Ramalho Eanes wherever they went, believing that there was a political solidarity—and they had reasons to feel that way—between themselves and General Ramalho Eanes, in view of the stands adopted by the latter and view of the fact that he had accepted to seek reelection following a complex process of negotiations in which I took part on behalf of the Socialist Party. Consequently, when they realized that this solidarity had been broken, they felt vexed, humiliated and indignant. I sensed this immediate reaction which subsequently grew in its proportions, and naturally as the party's secretary general and as a private citizen I felt that—after a difficult and painful period of reflection—I should embody this movement of deep discontent, revolt and indignation toward the stand adopted by General Ramalho Eanes.

In my view, the stand adopted by General Ramalho Eanes was not some kind of overnight or involuntary blunder since the news conference had been prepared several days beforehand. All the questions had been anticipated and the whole event had been carefully prepared, as obvious during the course of the news conference. It was therefore a premeditated act on the part of General Ramalho Eanes. This is the moral aspect of the matter.

There is, however, a political aspect to it as well, and it is no less important. I felt that after the negotiations we held there was a break in President Eanes' solidarity with us. This process of negotiations lasted 3 months. It was not easy for my party—where there was both an important current favorable to General Eanes and strong opponents to a candidacy of that kind—to conduct these negotiations. They were lengthy and in depth but a conclusion was reached in the end, and this conclusion was put down on a written and signed document. It was on that basis—on the basis of a political agreement—that I came before my party, my party's national committee and the country at large, the guarantor, so to speak, of my party's support for General Ramalho Eanes.

Since, however, in my view, this political agreement was breached immediately after an election in which we were defeated and following which there was that unpleasant feeling that General Eanes was now simply ignoring the defeated and seeking to jump onto the victors' bandwagon, I felt that politically I should react in the manner that I deemed most appropriate. [end recording]

NEW PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE TO RUN IN ELECTION

PCP NOMINATES CARLAS BRITO FOR PRESIDENT

LD291606 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1230 GMT 29 Oct 80

[Excerpts] On a proposal from its Central Committee, the Portuguese Communist Party decided at its national conference yesterday to nominate Carlos Brito as the party candidate in the forthcoming presidential elections, but the PCP did not decide whether his nomination should remain in effect till the end of the election campaign or whether it should be withdrawn in favor of another candidate.

The PCP has no illusions of victory in these elections because of the unlikelihood of winning. In Alvaro Cunhal's view, Ramalho Eanes is the candidate closest to the democratic regime and defense of liberties but, he said, his past and some of his performance as the president of the republic do not provide sufficient grounds for him to secure PCP's backing at the outset—backing which, incidentally, has never been expressly requested by Ramalho Eanes.

Eanes's past is linked with 25 November [1975, when Eanes masterminded the suppression of an alleged communist-inspired military takeover attempt] and, Cunhal said, his presidential record included the appointment of Mota Pinto as prime minister and the promulgation of some pieces of legislation such as the amendments of agrarian reform act.

At the PCP conference criticism was leveled at Mario Soares for his attitude toward Eanes's reelection bid, and at presidential candidates Airas Rodrigues and Otelo Saraiva de Carvalho who, in the PCP's view, work for the right.

Meanwhile, reactions to the nomination were not slow in coming. Major Otelo Saraiva de Carvalho, a presidential candidate of the Popular Unity Force, said Carlos Brito's nomination was a diversionary tactic.

EL PAIS: ISSUE OF ENTRY INTO NATO NOT TO BE RAISED IN 1981

LD310955 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 28 Oct 80 p 11

[EUROPA PRESS report: "According to Union of the Democratic Center Spain Will Not Join NATO in 1981"]

[Text] Center Party parliamentary circles connected with foreign policy have announced that the issue of Spain's entry into the Atlantic alliance will not be raised in 1981, despite a statement ot the contrary made to EL PAIS some months ago by then Foreign Minister Marcelino Oreja, according to EUROPA PRESS.

The same sources have said that there is no intention of linking EEC membership to NATO membership and that there is no connection between Oreja's pro-NATO remarks and the remarks made shortly before that by French head of state Valery Giscard d'Estaing, barring Spain's path to EEC membership.

They also stated that the NATO issue must not be used as a method for exerting pressure on Europe, since the EEC countries are not particularly concerned about Spain's entry into the Atlantic alliance (though they would readily accept it) but are clearly worried, however, about the economic cost involved in a new member joining the EEC.

CSCE DELEGATES CONTINUE TALKS ON SCHEDULING

LD301636 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1400 GMT 30 Oct 80

[Text] Soviet delegate Yuriy Dubinin broke the ice this morning at the preparatory meeting for the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe. In a mild tone of voice he said that his country is ready to accept the allocation of the time of the conference, taking 11 November to 5 March as a basis. Many countries spoke advocating that at least a point of agreement on the conference should be established. Nevertheless, the Polish delegate later spoke, saying that the study of the proposals for the future should be divided into a series of stages, which complicates the matter. The Western delegates then began to react: more addresses by both sides, until finally head of the U.S. delegation Max Kampelman, in whom a certain fear that there is some trap in the new Soviet stance is discernible, said that given the good will of all this afternoon they will continue to talk to see if they can reach a solution to this problem which has kept the preparatory meeting in suspense for weeks.

AGREEMENT ON ANDALUSIAN AUTONOMY ISSUE REACHED

LD301305 Madrid YA in Spanish 23 Oct 80 p 11

[Unattributed report: "Andalusian Autonomy Problem Resolved"]

[Text] The full Congress of Deputies will today debate the examination of the two bills of an organic nature unblocking the Andalusian autonomy process, following intensive talks and negotiations among the various parliamentary political forces which have taken place over the last few days and which yesterday culminated in the prime minister's meetings with Socialist leader Felipe Gonzalez, Andalusian Socialist Party [PSA] leader Alejandro Rojas Marcos and a Council of Andalusia delegation. For his part, Felipe Gonzalez had personal and private meetings with political leaders Manuel Fraga and Santiago Carrillo to the same end in the congress yesterday afternoon.

All these meetings an negotiations have had a successful political conclusion: Unanimous agreement was reached.

According to reliable sources consulted by YA, the agreement consists of two bills of an organic nature. One of them amends two sections of the organic law on various referendum procedures in order to allow an autonomy initiative in accordance with article 151 of the Constitution for the seven provinces in which there was a vote in favor exceeding 50 percent of the electorate in the referendum held on 28 February. The other bill, also of an organic nature, which will be signed by the Almeria parliamentarians and those groups which wish to join them, requests that the congress replace the autonomy initiative which failed in Almeria on 28 February for reasons "of national interest," as mentioned in Title VIII (on the territorial organization of the state). That is, it does not mention article 144, which is the one which refers to reasons of national interest, but it does mention Title VIII, which is the one which governs the autonomy issue as a whole.

In this way Almeria takes part in the drafting of the statute from the very outset and does not have to repeat the autonomy initiative referendum, but like the other Andalusian provinces will take part in the referendum ratifying the statute. In short, the opposition's approach is accepted in part, but also that of the government, since although Article 144 is not mentioned as the government wished, the referendum will not be repeated, nor will the bills which the opposition had submitted and was supporting be handled.

The two bills, which will be handled in accordance with the emergency procedure once they have been accepted by the full congress today, will make it possible for the assembly of Andalusian parliamentarians to be convened soon--in about 1 month--to draft the statute and for this to be submitted next to the congress' constitutional committee, which in joint session with a delegation of the assembly of Andalusian parliamentarians will debate, express an opinion on and approve the statute. This entire process could be resolved by the end of the year, if the political groups prove to be in agreement on the basic issues raised by the Andalusian statute.

In the morning the prime minister received Felipe Gonzalez, and the agreement on Andalusian autonomy was finalized during the meeting. The Socialist leader told the press that he would inform the parliamentary groups on the contents of the agreement in the afternoon. Felipe Gonzalez' meeting with PCE Secretary General Santiago Carrillo lasted 1 hour. At its conclusion the latter told journalists that the important thing is that there should be an agreement in principle which will respect the 28 February referendum results.

Felipe Gonzalez met for 20 minutes with Democratic Coalition spokesman Fraga. At its conclusion Fraga told the press that he felt satisfaction at finding that the course of allowing the amending of the organic law on referendum procedures had been opted for. He added that he had also been informed by the government about this agreement through the minister of territorial administration.

A third meeting held by Felipe Gonzalez was with former Minister Manuel Clavero Arevalo, who later stated that he was satisfied because he had ascertained that the agreement conducted Andalusian autonomy in accordance with Article 151 of the constitution. "In this way," he said, "What Andalusia demanded on 28 February is achieved, and this confirms our stance."

For his part, the prime minister received PSA leader Alejandro Rojas Marcos for 2 hours in the afternoon in the presence of Union of the Democratic Center Secretary General Rafael Calvo Ortega. "A formula has been found," Rojas Marcos, said, "which safeguards the interests of all the political parties, and the government's agreement with the PSA in connection with the vote of confidence still stands. There has been no backtracking; rather, a step forward has been taken. There are no victors or vanquished."

The prime minister next met with a Council of Andalusia delegation, and explained to them the agreed formula. Council Chairman Rafael Escuredo had been toasted with champagne by deputies and senators in the congress a few hours earlier because of the unblocking of the Andalusian autonomy issue.

The agreement reached will be signed this morning at a meeting of the committee of spokesmen of the parliamentary groups, at which the two organic bills which will be submitted to the full chamber in the afternoon will be submitted.

BASQUE LEADER SPEAKS ON VIOLENCE, AUTONOMY ISSUES

[Patxo Unzueta report: "Pessimistic Speech by Garaikoetxea on Prospects for Pacification"]

[Text] The emphasis placed on the issue of violence, whose persistence "could put an end to the expectations of democratic consolidation and economic recovery," and with respect to which "the prospects of negotiation are increasingly unlikely," was the most prominent aspect of the speech with which [Basque country premier] Carlos Garaikoetxea yesterday began the debate in the Basque Parliament on the program submitted by his government. The "lendakari" once more reviewed the three "interrelated aims," which constitute the essential parts of the Basque Government's program: The institutionalization of autonomy through the full implementation of the statute; the struggle against unemployment; and the crisis and pacification. This last-mentioned aim, of historic scope, is of the greater importance in view of the influence which it exercises over the other two, because "if anything is clear, it is the desire of the perpetrators of the outrages to provoke an authoritarian regression," as well as the impact of their actions on the deterioration of the economic situation.

In Garaikoetxea's opinion, this very importance would justify a "supreme effort of reconciliation, which would have to be approached, not from an immediate perspective but with a historical viewpoint." But it is no less true that "these prospects of negotiation are increasingly slight," so that to an increasing extent "the sole and unpleasant path left open to us is that of enforcing the law." "The opportunity for reconciliation," the "lendakari" emphasized, "could pass, and we will not remain inpassive, of course, when confronted with such unspeakable actions as those which are occurring." In this connection, according to Garaikoetxea, the suspicions of those who believe that "we will be weak or irresolute or that the Basque police will prove ineffective or un reliable," are unfounded. But since in fact the problem of violence "will only be surmounted through action by society, which will generate its own antibodies," the Basque Government will seek "the cooperation of the social sectors which could have a particular influence on society as a whole, instilling the men and women of this people with horror for violence and using whatever means make it possible to isolate this social calamity."

In addition, the Basque country premier reiterated his explanations about the additional difficulty entailed for his government by not knowing exactly what resources it will have, this explaining in turn the lack of quantification of the undertakings laid down in the program. Late last night the various parliamentary groups were beginning their round of critical speeches on the program, which will continue today.

EL PAIS Interview

LD301441 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 28 Oct 80 p 19

[Unattributed report on EFE interview with Basque country Premier Carlos Garaikoetxea: "Carlos Garaikoetxea Describes Post of Governor General as a 'Stab in the Back'"]

[Text] Basque country Premier Carlos Garaikoetxea has granted an interview to EFE on the first anniversary of the Guernica Statute in which he analyzes the development of autonomy, the peace process and the economic crisis and describes the term "governor general" applied to Marcelino Oreja, the government's representative in the Basque country, as "a stab in the back."

Asked whether Marcelino Oreja's recent appointment as governor general of the Basque country could make a political contribution to better understanding between Madrid and the Basque Government and eventually to the implementation of the statute, Garaikoetxea says that "it can and must contribute to it, but it has got off to a very bad start. With all due respect and leaving aside the personal regard that Marcelino Oreja deserves, the term 'governor general' is a stab in the back, bearing in mind that we were not even consulted about the term--which in the relevant law appears as 'delegate' of the central administration--while we were advocating the elimination of civil governments."

"Does it seem logical," Garaikoetxea asks, "to put the heading 'governor general of the Basque country' or of Catalonia on a document which should be attributed to the government's representative? What are they trying to do? To create confusion or to give the impression that the state apparatus is growing here? We have already seen reactions such as those of the Catalan premier, who refuses to attend functions attended by Mr Melia, and we shall see what is the reaction of the Basque institutions, which are examining the issue calmly but steadfastly, having asked the central administracion's top representatives in a respectful and friendly manner to provide a legal or de facto remedy to it. Be that as it may, this situation is a demonstration of the narrow-minded and politically insensitive attitude with which such delicate situations are approached."

The Basque country premier also answers the question whether he believes that the present Union of the Democratic Center Government and more particularly Prime Minister Suarez are really determined to implement the statute. "Suarez has given us innumerable assurances of this determination," he says. "The fact is that we all sometimes have different ideas of what is meant by doing things promptly and properly. I am afraid that the sometimes artificial extension of the autonomy issue to regions where the issue does not arise has considerably complicated the problem. But this does not imply an underestimation of anyone's problems: The fact is that these problems differ. We might have a Basque national awareness with historical roots, which inevitably demands self government; others might have an endemic problem of economic underdevelopment, for instance, to which we must all devote ourselves with a real spirit of solidarity, and both issues are equally serious. What might prove dangerous would be a single approach to both issues, because such an approach would imply reasons or pretexts that would render a generic solution impossible."

Garaikoetxea opines that the Basque people must be made "fully aware of the horror of violence, and the Basque Government, provided with the means essential to its police force, must vigorously direct an entire people's will by rigorously implementing the law" and sees the opportuneness of "achieving peace subject to a cessation of violence" without going through an increasingly difficult "long and painful process." The Basque premier opines that there have been too many opportunist statements, such as those made by Txiki Benegas, urging the government to shoulder its responsibilities, and calls on the Spanish Socialist Workers Party to "help us once and for all to take control of our own policing, to do more to this end in Madrid, where their party is well represented, and to make fewer pronouncements in the Basque country."

GALLUP POLL REVEALS PESSIMISM ABOUT DEFENSE CAPABILITIES

LD301331 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 15 Oct 80 Part 1 p 10

[Editorial: "Faith in Defense"]

[Text] The results of a Gallup poll published today provide quite a telling and serious indication of the population's view of the defense forces. The poll draws a picture of a people which has no confidence that Denmark can defned itself and which has great doubts that it is possible for our allies to come to the country's aid in a crisis situation. It is not a people unwilling to defend itself, but a people without much faith that Denmark can be held against an attack from the Warsaw Pact's forces, if war should come.

It is not a defeatist people seeking refuge in illusions of neutrality. This opinion poll builds on the fact that has been demonstrated in a number of opinion polls, that much more than half the Danish population supports the Atlantic Pact and NATO, while the opposition to Danish membership swings between 10 and 12 percent. But today's poll shows that the skeptical view of defense capability runs deep even in those groups of the population which have the most positive approach to active Danish involvement and are most willing to pay the price of fulfilling our commitments. The overwhelming view seems to be that Denmark's security is part and parcel of its NATO membership, in the sense that it is joint Western defense readiness and, in the final analysis, the balance of terror which ensure that war does not come; and, if it did come, the Danish defense forces would not be able to make much difference one way or the other.

Half of the country's population admits that we are not living up to our commitments in NATO cooperation, and while 1/3 are of the opinion that we should do so, there are considerably more who would prefer to be uncommitted, because they do not believe that it would serve any purpose. This is hardly surprising when the population is led by a government that does all it can to run away from its commitments. An opinion poll such as this is to a certain extent a popular reflection of the position that the government confers on the country. And while Gallup went around with its questions in the latter half of September, the people were being told that the government's reaction to the U.S. defense secretary's penetrating letters was a proposal for new defense plans which would halve Sjaelland's defenses and those of the capital and concentrate forces on defending the airfields on the Jutland ridge. This was in no way a message which would be able to convince the population of the usefulness and necessity of maintaining a defense force that could hold out until help arrived.

KOSYGIN RETIREMENT LEAVES GAP IN RELATIONS WITH USSR

LD291121 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 25 Oct 80 p 2

[Editorial: "Changing the Guard in the Soviet Union"

[Text] Now that Alekseyy Nikolayevich Kosygin is retiring from the post of chairman of the Council of Ministers—prime minister—in the Soviet Union, the announcement does not come unexpectedly. For a number of years, reports of his deteriorating health have been in circulation. In 1979 he was out of the public eye for several months, and it was said that it was highly unlikely that he would resume work. However, he reappeared at the elections to the Supreme Soviet at the end of last winter and showed himself at the Olympic Games in Moscow. Thus Kosygin is being pensioned off for the usual reasons of poor health, and no one has even tried to speculate on the political reasons for his departure.

Kosygin had a technical education—as a young man he worked in the textile industry—and his image to the outside world has been that of a technocrat and assiduous worker. Even though Brezhnev drew up the main political guidelines and grew increasingly to dominate the duumvirate, which remained after the "troika" disappeared following Podgornyy's fall, it is surely to undervalue Kosygin to describe him "only" as a prominent administrator. During the sixties especially, but also on later occasions, he was used for important diplomatic missions, and he is considered a skillful and judicious politician.

Alekseyy Kosygin hailed from Leningrad and he had the reputation of being the man who kept the arms industry going during the siege of the city. However, he had also occupied various posts in the central administration ever since 1939, when he was appointed to his first ministerial post. He had sat at the center of power since 1964, the year when Khrushchev was removed and the "troika" came into existence. He had also been chairman of the Council of Ministers since then.

The changing of the guard in the government neither means that the much-discussed change of generation in the Kremlin is brought nearer nor that major political changes are to be expected. Kosygin's successor, Nikolay Tikhonov, a 76-year-old with roots in the Ukraine like Brezhnev himself, had been first deputy prime minister since Kosygin's first attack of illness in 1976 and had obviously taken care of Kosygin's functions for long periods. Like his predecessor, he is a technical and economic specialist. The leadership change has no direct connection with the economic difficulties that are also being discussed now in the Soviet Union, but it is easy to imagine that a fully able-bodied man is needed in a period when it is necessary to roll up the shirt sleeves to get the planned economy to function.

What we in Finland have special reason to draw attention to is Kosygin's role in Finnish-Soviet relations. High-level contacts have in practice largely rested on his person. He has visited Finland six times and met our political leaders considerably more times on Soviet soil. Kosygin's wide-ranging powers and his knowledge of technical and economic questions have made swift and smooth decisions possible, especially concerning the major construction projects on the other side of the border, but also in many other questions.

With Kosygin leaving his post, a really significant link in Finnish-Soviet relations is disappearing. At the highest political level in the Soviet Union there is probably only one real "Finland expert" left, Foreign Trade Minister Nikolay Patolichev. It is thus extremely important that new personal contacts be created, which in time will be able to fill the gap that has now appeared.

HUFVUDSTADSBLADET REPORTS MUNICIPAL ELECTION RESULTS

[Unattributed report: "Election Result Supports Government; Finnish People's Democratic League Reviews Situation"]

[Excerpt] No immediate consequences for national politics, but possibly in the long term: This is a possible assessment of the largely expected outcome of the municipal elections, which means a tangible loss of ground for the People's Democrats and successes for the other government parties. The Social Democratic Party, the Center Party and the Swedish People's Party see the election result more or less as a vote of confidence in the government coalition, and the Finnish People's Democratic League does not seem to know how to react.

For the Finnish People's Democratic League, the trend in the most recent elections has been clearly downward and we can therefore look forward to attempts from that quarter to toughen their political line. In the long term, this could even have an effect on cooperation within the present government.

Finnish Communist Party Chief Aarne Saarinen said yesterday that the People's Democratic and Communist movement will first analyze the results and the reasons why things went as they did. Only then will conclusions be drawn. Saarinen said, however, that he does not think that there will be any "general political consequences" from the election outcome in the near future.

Election results for the whole country in percent:

	1980 Municipal Election	1979 Diet Election	1976 Municipal Election
National Coalition Party	23.1	21.7	20.9
Center Party	18.7	17.3	18.4
Swedish People's Party	4.7	4.2	4.7
Liberal People's Party	3.2	3.7	4.8
Finnish Christian League	3.7	4.8	3.2
Finnish Rural Party	3.0	4.6	2.1
Constitutional People's Party	0.5	1.2	0.9
People's Unification Party	0.1	0.3	0.5
Others	0.6	0.3	0.8
Nonsocialist Total	57.7	58.1	56.1
Social Democrats	25.6	23.9	24.8
Finnish People's Democratic League	16.7	17.9	18.5
Socialist Total	42.3	41.8	43.4

Analysis of Election Results

LD290921 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 22 Oct 80 p 2

[Editorial: "A Stabilizing Election"]

[Text] Four years ago we entitled our commentary on the municipal elections "The Moderate Protest." That was after the National Coalition Party's great triumph. This year the picture is different. It is not dominated by the National Coalition Party's successes alone. It is instead possible to speak of an election with a politically stabilizing effect.

The main reason for this is that the votes were concentrated on the major parties. Three of the four traditional leading party formations strengthened their positions; the fourth, the People's Democrats, suffered defeats completely in line with the predictions. The Finland Swedish sector was "normalized" through a successful election for the Swedish People's Party. The "splinter parties", to which the Liberals must now also be added, were generally weakened in comparison with the last Riksdag election.

If we look at the more important parties individually, we first see that the Social Democratic Party which was the great loser in 1976 has now recuperated some of its losses although it still has a long way to go before it reaches the level it was at in 1972. According to the figures available, the pullback seems to have taken place in larger towns and urban areas, exactly the places where they were hardest hit by losses 4 years ago.

As far as the Social Democrats are concerned, we note a special circumstance. The Gallup poll carried out in September this year predicted for the most part the large parties' share of the vote with great exactness, with a margin of error under 0.5 percent. It is only of the Social Democrats that this was not true; their election gains were much larger than expected. We can ask ourselves if there was not some factor which affected their number of votes at the last minute. It is not impossible that Koivisto's popularity and the recent opinion poll on the presidency gave them an extra few percentage points, as Ulf Sundqvist put it on election night. But it is just as likely that they took over more Communist voters than expected. In any case, the Social Democratic Party is well established as Finland's largest party and keeps its lead over the National Coalition Party.

It is perhaps not so much fun to be proclaimed the election winner by the pollsters months in advance; it takes away part of the psychological effect of the success when it finally becomes reality. In actual fact, the National Coalition Party's victory was both massive and convincing, and also somewhat larger than the Gallup polls had been able to predict. Between 1972 and 1976, the National Coalition Party gained 2.8 percentage points, and between 1976 and 1980 its support has grown by 2.1 percent. If we want to, we can also take this as a indication that the party will eventually grow to dominant size. But for the time being there is plenty of room for it to grow. If we also remember that its growth has been fairly steady (from around 14 percent in 1966 to around 23 percent now) regardless of whether its leader was Rihtniemi, Holkeri or Suominen, there is the strong impression that the National Coalition Party's gains have been based on solid social realities.

The Center Party also surprised us with somewhat greater successes than estimated. This is a positive development from a general political viewpoint, not the least because the Center Party's fear of ending up on the downward slope has meant that it has followed a somewhat irregular course. The victory also gives the new leadership team a more secure position and greater authority.

The People's Democrats-Communists had been pointed out in advance as the losers and the predictions were confirmed almost exactly. We have already touched on the reasons for this, but they must be repeated; the internal dissension (which has, sometimes on certain earlier occasions led to increased electoral support), events in Poland and Afghanistan and possible dissatisfaction with the party's involvement in government (ministerial liability" according to Saarinen).

What is especially striking is the unfavorable long-term trend that has characterized the Communists' electoral support. If we go as far back as 1958 we find that the Finnish People's Democratic League collected over 23 percent of votes, and now their support is down to under 17 percent. This is a situation which gives rise to the question whether communism will in the long term be able to remain a broad popular movement in our ideological and social climate.

In the majority of countries, a decrease in electoral support for the communists could be immediately construed as a stabilizing factor. In Finland the matter is not so clear-cut. There are few who believe that the Finnish People's Democratic League will leave the government, despite all the threats. Saarinen and Aalto have bound the majority wing's policies to government cooperation. But in the field, in the trade unions and in the government, the party will be more refractory and unpredictable than in the past. This will be put to the test in the immediate future over the director general question [of Finnish State Railroads, a new appointment that the communists object to] which has set the party's nerves on edge.

We wrote in a preliminary commentary yesterday that the Swedish People's Party finds itself in a class by itself, even more obviously than in the past. In comparison with the "splinter parties", the Swedish People's Party appears as a "medium-sized" party. This is not only due to its respectable electoral support, but perhaps even more to its stable political base which is striking particularly in the municipal context. Such a position is of course a strength, but it also means trials since it involves the necessity of playing among the big parties on their terms.

The weekend's election was a pleasing success for the Swedish People's Party. It had a good showing in the three large centers--Helsinki, Turu and Vaasa. It had unexpected gains in the overspill municipalities around the capital, such as Espoo and Kauniainen. In Uusimaa outside the region of the capital, there were net gains of nine seats. In various places in Osterbotten, the trend was a little negative, but we are here dealing with a purely marginal phenomenon in a provice where the Swedish People's Party retains undisputed hegemony in the majority of communes.

Without doubt, the Swedish People's Party benefitted from a certain return of votes from the "splinter parties", in southern Finland especially. However, the foundation of the party's success lies in the general renaissance of Swedishness. No party has been so strengthened by peoples' search for their "roots" and their cultural identity. The large numbers of young Swedish People's Party candidates--many of them elected--show that the party today is in tune with the times. This needs to be stated clearly, even though no one imagines that the Swedish People's Party's future is entirely without its problems.

KHARAVYI REPORTS PRESENCE OF U.S. WARSHIPS IN LIMASSOL

NC311121 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 31 Oct 80 p 1

[Text] Limassol 30 Oct--Two U.S. warships with the markings of A-486 and A-76 have been anchored in the open water of the old Limassol harbor for the past 2-3 days. The vessels carry helicopters, and it is believed that war materiel has been transported to the British bases.

Public opinion is vividly concerned and indignant about the "visit" of the U.S. vessels and poses many questions about the aims of the U.S. military presence in the open waters of Cyprus.

ANTI-TURKISH PROPAGANDA SHOWN IN NORTH CYPRUS PLO EXHIBITION

NC310806 Istanbul GUNAYDIN in Turkish 30 Oct 80 p 5

[Text] Nicosia--Magazines containing anti-Turkish propaganda brought over from the Greek Cypriot side by PLO representatives were distributed to the people at the "The Struggle of the Palestinian People" exhibition opened in the TFSC the other day. When the TFSC authorities became aware of the contents of the magazines, they had them all collected.

Although the Turkish Cypriots, desiring to lend their support to the just cause of the Palestinians, arranged this exhibition despite their limited propaganda budget, the PLO representative on the Greek Cypriot side failed to show up. Instead, he send his secretary. Three of the pages of the magazine brought by the Palestinian secretary to the exhibition were filled with anti-Turkish propaganda.

DENKTAS DISCUSSES GUARANTEES WITH GREEK JOURNALISTS

TA302120 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1930 GMT 30 Oct 80

[Text] President Rauf Denktas said that the Turkish troops are in Cyprus not as NATO troops but as part of a national army and as guarantors.

Today Denktas received the members of the Greek Foreign Journalists Union, who were visiting the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus, and replied to their questions. Replying to a question on the guarantees, Denktas noted that the Greek Cypriots do not want the guarantees to prevent them from realizing enosis and annihilating the Turkish Cypriot community and said: However, the guarantee agreement was aimed at preventing the two communities from annihilating each other and at preventing enosis and division. This is how we look at it, and when we look at it this way, we see that the guarantee agreement and Turkey's right to intervene constituted the sole factor that protected the existence of the Turkish Cypriot community and maintained the independence of the republic.

When a journalist claimed that the Greek Cypriots had renounced enosis, Denktas said that, if the Greek Cypriots had renounced enosis, then they should not oppose the continuation of guarantees (?designed) to prevent enosis. He noted that these guarantees only [words indistinct] against enosis of the annihilation of the Turkish Cypriot community for the sake of enosis. Denktas said: The fact that the Greek Cypriots are evading these guarantee agreements is causing us concern and [word indistinct] us.

In reply to a question on the intercommunal talks, Denktas pointed out that the Turkish Cypriot side sat at the negotiating table in a bid to reach a bizonal, federal solution in good will. He said: It is not possible to say when the talks will be concluded. The important issue is the continuation of the talks. However, we have received information that the Greek Cypriot leader (?intends) to participate in the nonaligned countries' conference, and this is why [words indistinct] our cause.

When a journalist remarked that the resolutions of the nonaligned countries' conference and the United Nations have no effect whatever, asked why these resolutions are so [word indistinct] and noted that the important thing is that the two communities should reach an agreement, Denktas replied: We have agreed that we will either negotiate at the table with good will or we will not negotiate at all. We have not agreed to conduct negotiations at the table with good will and at the same time continue at the international level to wage a struggle that is entirely opposed to these negotiations.

Replying to a question on the subject of Maras [Varosha], Denktas said: The Turkish Cypriot community has lost (?105) settlement areas. Every Turkish Cypriot house in these settlement areas was--to the owner of that house--equivalent to a big apartment in Maras. We were deprived of these houses and areas for 11 years and no one said a word. This is how we view Maras. It is a settlement area and it has stayed [word indistinct]. We wanted the people to return to Maras, but they did not return. Our proposals have been submitted and they are being studied. However, we do not accept the viewpoint that Maras is the key to the settlement of the Cyprus problem. The whole problem should be solved as a package. The package cannot be divided.

In his answer to a question on whether or not a nonaligned policy is being followed in Cyprus, Denktas said that Kiprianou's frequent demands that the United States intervene in settling the Cyprus problem, the rights and privileges secretly granted by Kiprianou to the Americans on the British bases, his similar stands and his continued policy to eliminate Cyprus' independence do not indicate that a nonaligned policy is being pursued in southern Cyprus.

In reply to the question, can you say you are nonaligned as long as NATO--Turkish--troops are on the island, Denktas said: The Turkish troops in Cyprus came to Cyprus as a part of a national army outside NATO and as guarantors. They are not here in the capacity of NATO. If they had not come, there would not have been an independent and nonaligned Cyprus today.

RIZOSPASTIS CONDEMNS GOVERNMENT'S ATLANTIC POLICY

AT301150 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 30 Oct 80 p 2

[From the "Radical" column: "No to the Bases"]

[Text] After our country's reintegration within NATO we now have a speeding up of the process for signing the agreement on U.S. bases in our country. Washington even lets it be understood that it envisages no obstacle against strengthening and perpetuating the status of military installations and other multifaceted facilities it has in Greece. This is also shared by the government which, in any case, set the signing of the agreement on the bases as a prerequisite for our return to military NATO.

In this way it now proceeds toward an absolute reliance by our country upon the U.S.-NATO imperialists. This is why the government is now being congratulated for its "demonstrated insistence (to return to the alliance) despite resistence from the left wing."

Most certainly the government of the right knows full well all the consequences to our national independence and the dangers inherent for our people and the nation from the operation of U.S. bases, particularly under the general situation prevailing in our broader area. Blinded by its Atlantic policy, it now accepts a new national humiliation as well as those inherent dangers.

In an effort to cover things up and to cut down—as it believes—the people's severe reaction, it now once again makes use of an improved version of the myth of "national command" over the bases. It states that under the new agreement it will try to improve the status of extraterritorial rights, to cut down foreign personnel serving on the various installations and to request for higher military "aid" in order to restore the "balance" between Greece and Turkey.

Part from the fact that the very existence of foreign bases means restrictions of national independence and is a factor for foreign intervention in the country's political life, it is also a common secret that the Americans will attempt to expand the role of their installations so that they can become suitable for new buccaneering adventures in the areas of the east Mediterranean and southeast Asia. They believe they will be able to do this because it has been proved that the government of the right does not have the strength to resist any "demand" from its protectors. The burden of resistance entirely rests—as in every instance of national danger—upon the shoulders of the people and their democratic forces. The people will once again resist the modern colonialists.

This was stressed by authoritative sources in the Ministry of National Defense and the Ministry of Public Order which also affirm that there is no U.S. military material, the existence of which is not known to responsible Greek authorities, in any part of Greece.

ANATOLIA REPORTS ECEVIT RESIGNATION FROM RPP LEADERSHIP

TA301231 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1225 GMT 30 Oct 80

[Text] Ankara, 30 Oct (AA)—Republican People's Party [RPP] (main opposition party suspended since the military intervention of Sep 12 along with other political parties) leader Bulent Ecevit, a former prime minister, announced today his resignation from party leadership saying: "It seems my departure will be compulsory. I consider it more useful to do so now." Noting that since the activities of the political parties had been banned and he could not possibly fulfill his duties, his resignation would not cause any administrative problems within the party the members of which would "thus have time to ponder the issue of electing a new party leader by the time party activities will be authorized and a RPP convention will be staged."

Ecevit thanked his fellow party workers "aware of Ataturk's heritage," citizens who supported the RPP and his voters in Zonguldak and Ankara. "I wish to the members of the Turkish nation regardless of their ways of thinking and the political parties they support, happiness, health and success and freedom."

SECURITY COUNCIL CENSORS ECEVIT RESIGNATION STATEMENT

TA301747 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 30 Oct 80

[Text] Bulent Ecevit has announced his resignation from the RPP leadership. Meanwhile, the National Security Council Secretariat General has issued a communique as follows:

This is an announcement from the National Security Council Secretariat General. The Secretariat General found it necessary to issue a statement on 29 October and explain the actual situation following inaccurate and misleading reports and headlines in various press organs regarding the reply given by the National Security Council secretary general to questions from foreign correspondents on 28 October 1980 on the future political activities of the leaders of the RPP and the JP, parties whose activities have been banned. Following this statement, Bulent Ecevit attempted to announce his resignation from the party leadership with a statement having political motives. Since all political activities were suspended with communique No 1 issued on 12 September 1980, the National Security Council has deemed unsuitable—from the viewpoint of the tranquillity needed in the country—the release of this statement, which exceeds the aim of announcing a personal resignation, because it will inevitably make a subject for discussion Ecevit's statements and activities in the light of the course of events preceding 12 September 1980.

HURRIYET: DEMIREL, ECEVIT TO BE TRIED IN CRIMINAL COURT

BK310753 Istanbul HURRIYET in Turkish 30 Oct 80 pp 1, 9

[Excerpts] Ankara (HURRIYET)—The republican prosecutor, convinced that RPP leader Bulent Ecevit and JP leader Suleyman Demirel attached in their various speeches the moral identity of the governments that they were leading, has decided to prosecute both leaders before the criminal court.

According to article 159 of the Turkish penal code, the prosecutor will demand a prison term of 1 to 6 years for Ecevit and Demirel. Article 159 of the Turkish penal code is as follows: "Those who openly insult or hold in contempt the Turkish race, the republic, the Grand National Assembly, the moral identity of the government, the ministries, the military, the security and the protective forces of the state or the moral identity of the judiciary, and those who commit aggressive acts calculated to prejudice the legality of the Grand National Assembly, are liable to a prison term of 1 to 6 years."

ANATOLIA REPORTS COUNCIL COMMUNIQUE ON POLITICAL ACTIVITY

LD301352 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1140 GMT 30 Oct 80

["National Security Council Communique on Political Parties"—ANATOLIA headline]

[Text] Ankara, 30 Oct (ANATOLIA)—A National Security Council issued Wednesday evening said the Council intended to amend the political parties law in a way to prevent party leaders from remaining in office for prolonged periods, dispelling press speculation that Bulent Ecevit and Suleyman Demirel (leaders of the two main political parties suspended since the Sep 12 military takeover) could reenter the political arena as party presidents when the temporary ban on the activities on political parties is lifted. The Council stressed when the ban is lifted, Demirel and Ecevit could resume their political activities "just as other citizens," but, Council Secretary General Haydar Saltik's statement during a recent interview with foreign journalists from which originated the press speculation did not include any promise that "they would resume it as leaders of certain political parties."

The communique added that the fact that the democratic parliamentary mechanism was blocked was among the important reasons for the takeover. Parliamentarians had tended to be totally dominated by decisions of their party leaders causing the National Assembly and the Senate to be "irresponsibly inactive," it stressed.

OUR RADIO DISCUSSES OPPOSITION PARTY LEADERS' RESIGNATIONS

TA311016 (Clandestine) Our Radio in Turkish to Turkey 0700 GMT 31 Oct 80

[Text] The junta has amended its previous statement and has thus revealed its real aim. On the one hand, the pro-American junta is resorting to demagogy under the banner of "Return to democracy" in order to deceive our people and the progressive democratic forces and, on the other hand, it is taking steps toward forming puppet parties loyal to the junta. Therefore, pressure on party leaders is constantly being increased. They are being forced to resign under the shadow of bayonets and preparations are underway to place parties under the influence of the junta. This attitude does not constitute a change in the basic policy pursued by the junta. The junta, which has abolished democratic rights and freedoms, is trying to (Téléguiser) its dictatorship with temporary constitutions, is placing the political parties under the shadow of bayonets to prevent any future reaction from them, and is taking steps to consolidate its sovereignty.

The junta's decision to remove Ecevit and Demirel from the political arena reveals the pro-American junta's preparations to form parties loyal to the junta. Remaining silent in the face of this blatant interference and oppression is tantamount to strengthening the dictatorship. These developments once more confirm the necessity for the unity of all forces opposed by the junta. Citizens: Unite against the junta, the enemy of democracy!.

COUNCIL SECRETARY SALTIK VIEWS GREEK RETURN TO NATO

TA301242 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1235 GMT 30 Oct 80

[Excerpt] New York, (ANADOLU AJANSI correspondent), 30 Oct (AA)--National Security Council Secretary General Haydar Saltik said Greek return to NATO's military wing enabled re-establishment of stability and efficiency in the alliance's southeastern wing and expressed his hope that during future talks with Turkey, Greece would adopt an understanding stance.

Interviewed by "New York TIMES" correspondent in Ankara, General Saltik said, in brief, Turkey was deeply worried about the ongoing war between Iran and Iraq. Turkey would make a mediation effort only if both sides seek and no such call had been received from Iran, General Saltik stressed. Referring to the issue of American hostages in Iran, he said in the past Turkey aided evacuation of foreign nationals from Iran on humanitarian grounds but for the time being the National Security Council was not in touch with the U.S. on this issue.

VOTCP DISPUTES GEN SALTIK'S NEWS CONFERENCE STATEMENTS

TA300749 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 30 Oct 80

[Excerpts] Junta member Gen Haydar Saltik has claimed that some 11,500 persons have been detained since the military coup. General Saltik, the general secretary of the pro-American and NATOite junta, who is increasingly becoming influential, held a news conference for foreign correspondents the day before Turkey's National Day.

Pointing out that the activities of political parties in Turkey were banned after the military coup of 12 September, General Saltik said the ban is still in effect and a political truce is reigning in Turkey. He said that when the ban is lifted both Demirel and Ecevit can return to active political life if they so desire.

In the face of growing reaction both in Turkish and world public opinion against mass arrests, detentions and tortures by the junta, General Saltik was forced to make certain clarifications. According to the general, out of some 11,500 persons detained since the 12 September military coup, 6,900 were arrested and legal action was taken against them; 3,900 others are still being detained. But the total number of persons detained as announced by various regional martial law commands is already well over the number supplied by General Saltik. The general said that, in addition, military courts had tried and convicted 746 persons. However, the general concluded, we can still not claim that we have been completely successful on this subject. We cannot say that violence has been eradicated.

The fact that during his news conference General Saltik, a ring leader of the junta, did not supply any figures on those killed since 12 September in security forces operations, in attempts at genocide--particularly in Turkish Kurdistan--under the guise of military exercises and as a result of tortures carried out in detention houses and concentration camps of the martial law commands as well as in police stations, did not arouse the attention of the foreign correspondents at the new conference. General Saltik refrained from answering questions on this subject. It will be recalled that various sources estimated the number of those killed in Turkey since 12 September under the excuse of engaging in armed clashes with the security forces or of not obeying orders to halt at about 400. They added that to date three persons have been sent to the gallows.

HONECKER DEPARTS; COMMUNIQUE ON DETENTE ISSUED

AU131820 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1700 GMT 13 Nov 80

[Text] GDR head of state Erich Honecker has concluded his visit to Austria and has left Salzburg to begin his return trip to East Berlin. In a joint communique Austria and the GDR display their interest in a continuation of the detente process.

Steel Order Concluded

AU131103 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 13 Nov 80 p 9

[DIE PRESSE special report by "MT"]

[Excerpts] Linz--The order placed with the Voest Steel Corporation to build a new steel works in Eisenhuettenstadt (GDR) was at the center of yesterday's visit by GDR State Council Chairman Erich Honecker to the Linz works of the Voest-Alpine Corporation. As Honecker stressed, the basic decision in favor of that company was motivated by the already existing business relations and primarily the high quality of the plants already supplied and built--Voest-Alpine is participating in the construction of 12 projects in the GDR. The contract conditions and details regarding delivery and financing of the 10-12 billion schilling project still have to be negotiated.

State Secretary Nussbaumer declared in Vienna, in commenting on this order, that Voest-Alpine had not necessarily submitted the best bid and the cheapest financing. The order was an expression of gratitude for Austria's having made Honecker respectable [salonfaehig] in the West, the state secretary said.

KREISKY LEAVES FOR SOCIALIST INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS

[Text] Vienna (APA)--The congress of the Socialist International has nothing to do with the CSCE followup conference that is being held simultaneously in the same city. This was stated by Chancellor Bruno Kreisky, chairman of the Austrian Socialist Party [SPOe] on Wednesday before his departure by air for Madrid.

He added that this was a coincidence of time and place with which he was not very happy.

The SPOe delegation to the Socialist International congress also included Science Minister Firnberg, SPOe parliamentary floor leader Fischer, Vienna Mayor Gratz, Carinthian Governor Wagner, SPOe Central Secretaries Blecha and Marsch, SPOe International Secretary Hacker, and Women's Secretary Demuth.

DEFENSE BUDGET MAY NOT MEET NATO COMMITMENT

[Text] Bonn, 31 Oct (DPA)--It is most likely that the Federal Republic will no longer be able to fulfill its obligation to NATO to increase its defense budget by 3 percent in real terms. DPA learned today from reliable sources that it was noted during the coalition talks between the SPD and FDP that even for the defense budget there could be "no sacred cows".

Defense Minister Hans Apel made it clear that the NATO allies must be more concerned to have--in the medium and long term--an economically stable Federal Republic as a partner. Both sides agreed during the coalition talks to "make many cuts" in defense. However, Apel pointed out that the social and personal programs in the Bundeswehr must not suffer severe cuts under the economic measures. The problems within the armed forces must in some respects be viewed somewhat differently from those in civilian life as the Bundeswehr has a special task.

Agreement was reached during the coalition talks, it was learned, that in certain spheres things must be "stretched and cut" in the armed forces. Weapons systems already ordered are not to be introduced within the planned time but over a longer period. This could apply especially to the multipurpose Tornado aircraft--which is held mainly responsible for the large financial gap--and for the Leopard II tank. It is possible that planning for the successor to the Phantom, the tactical fighter TKF, and for a joint German-French development of a new battle tank will be dropped.

Informed circles assume that tensions will arise with the Americans as a result of the new financial development. They have already implied that they expect higher defense efforts from Bonn. Walter Stoessel, U.S. ambassador in Bonn, is due to pay a visit to the Defense Ministry next Tuesday.

At a federal press conference today, Government Spokesman Klaus Boelling was evasive in his replies to questions about German NATO commitments. It was his belief that it would not be worthwhile to discuss this subject again. As could be seen for a whole decade, said Boelling, defense and security policy had been given priority by the social-liberal coalition. He also made it clear that the defense budget would be dealt with during the budget discussions in December. "It is common knowledge that we are faced with a tight budget situation." Boelling stressed that "we have always made the necessary priorities clear."

TALKS ON NATO DIVISION OF LABOR PREVIEWED

DW301439 Bonn DIE WELT in German 30 Oct 80 p 6

[Commentary signed Kem.: "Division of Labor"]

[Text] The "division of labor" between the Americans and the Germans in the assumption of extra burdens and contributions toward joint security is taking concrete shape, notably beyond what Bonn has been justly interpreting as the special FRG contribution which has already been made for strengthening the alliance: the aid to Turkey and the fulfillment of defense effort plans--something unique in Europe. There need be no shame involved when it comes to the Bundeswehr or to the expensive logistical and financial support in a strategically important region. Compared with other NATO partners who are playing it coy overtly or covertly, Bonn has shouldered its burden in keeping with the spirit and the mission of the community.

And yet this and the hint about empty coffers and declining German economic balance sheets cannot constitute the comprehensive answer when U.S. Ambassador Walter Stoessel presents to the federal defense minister in the near future the ideas of his government concerning the additional German contribution to the alliance which is needed.

Washington's initiative does not come out of the clear blue sky; in its substance it has been under discussion in NATO for nearly a year now. It instead makes allowances for the German demand for an "overall concept" of the division of labor from the American viewpoint which has been missing up to now. This includes the--definitely costly--improvement in logistics supply for the strategic stockpiles for the U.S. troops in Germany and thus of their combat effectiveness at the expense of the budget of the host nation.

It will be necessary to discuss this soberly and with due regard for what is necessary and for the limits in capability, to discuss it without time pressure and without political emotions which an often undifferentiated complaint by U.S. congressional quarters about German "shirking" might carry into the dialogue. By the same token Bonn will be unable to dodge the finding now advanced by Washington that the Germans in the eighties will be asked to put up much more for the alliance than they are contributing, in the proper proportion, right now. We are not the pursers of the alliance, but neither will we be able to afford tying our security to the performance index of other, unwilling or incapable partners.

BRANDT RECOMMENDS VACANCY FOR FRG POST IN EAST BERLIN

LD012020 Hamburg DPA in German 1833 GMT 1 Nov 80

[Text] Bonn, 1 Nov (DPA)--In the view of SPD Chairman Willy Brandt, the post of the Federal Republic's permanent representative in East Berlin should remain vacant for the present. As DPA learned from political quarters in Bonn this evening, Brandt wishes to have this step construed as a warning addressed to East Berlin. Brandt was said to be deeply disappointed and annoyed by the latest GDR measure of doubling the compulsory currency exchange requirement for visitors from the West.

Commenting on a report to this effect in BILD AM SONNTAG, SPD Presidium spokesman Lothar Schwartz said that the sensationally formulated report goes beyond the actual issue. What is involved is a legitimate consideration of when the post of the Federal Republic's permanent representative in the GDR should be filled again. The newspaper reports that Brandt is no longer willing to take GDR harassment lying down. According to the newspaper, Brandt said to the SPD deputies: "It will not do, we cannot swallow everything." Brandt has declared to a small circle of deputies that the post should only be filled when it makes sense to do so. The current holder, Guenter Gaus, is to finish his mission at the end of the year, and Government Spokesman Klaus Boelling is to succeed him. The newspaper adds that Brandt does not suggest that the staff of the permanent mission should be reduced. The agenda should be handled by the second-in-command "as long as the political malaise between the Federal Republic and East Berlin persists."

Brandt TV Interview

LD022210 Hamburg DPA in German 1935 GMT 2 Nov 80

[Text] Hamburg (DPA)--SPD Chairman Willy Brandt reaffirmed today that he believes that the post of the FRG permanent representative in East Berlin should be left vacant for the time being. He said in a television interview in Berlin that in view of the doubling of the exchange requirement for Western visitors "the other side should realize that things cannot just go on in this way." Brandt said that it is moreover not unusual internationally to leave a post of this sort vacant for several months and have a deputy take over.

In Monday's edition of the WESTFAELISCHER RUNDSCHAU, Brandt said that with such a "pause for thought" there can be work on affairs, thus "our partner the GDR" will learn that "we want to clarify affairs once again in their relationship with one another."

This should not mean merely examining questions of how West German protests are to be formulated or expressed. Brandt said that "especially in a difficult situation" initiatives ought to be taken in spheres "where there can in addition be political results."

PRESS COMMENTS ON POLISH LEADERS' VISIT TO MOSCOW

DW311109 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0605 GMT 31 Oct 80

[Press review on Polish developments party officials' visit to Moscow]

[Excerpts] ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG of Mainz writes: The discussion held by the top echelon Polish party officials was as short as the preparations for the short visit were quick. Brezhnev may have made requests of his Warsaw visitors, but he has left some time to continue the dialogue with the liberal trade union forces. The fact that yesterday's communique stresses the determination to protect the dissoluble fraternal ties between the two people clearly shows the limits the Kremlin has drawn for the top Polish leadership. At the same time it is a curtailment of Brezhnev's generous offer that the Poles be allowed to solve their problems themselves. Moscow obviously wants to avoid everything that could dramatize Moscow-Warsaw relations in the eyes of the world public.

STUTTGARTER ZEITUNG asks: Are all fears in connection with the quick visit by the two Poles to big brother unfounded? Are comparisons which arise with regard to the last days of the short Dubcek era in the CSSR 12 years ago uncalled for? The paper goes on to say: Kania and Pinkowski are not Dubcek and Smrkowsky. They are not reformers, they are much rather the victims of reformers, of those who forced them through strikes to permit the organization of independent trade unions. The fact that Kania expressly recognized the concessions made to the workers before going to Moscow honors and endangers him simultaneously. If he did not yield in the Kremlin, then he is more clearly than before in the same boat with Lech Walesa.

The daily DIE WELT comments: Should Kania succeed in making the Kremlin leaders accept Polish pluralism in even a limited way it would constitute a second "miracle on the Vistula." Even if the Soviets are prepared for pragmatic reasons to permit the Poles to have a pluralist special status with regard to trade unions--similar to the acceptance of the special status of Polish Catholicism--the question would arise immediately: Can such pluralism, such deviation, exist at all in an ideologically and politically closed system such as the Soviet "real socialism" without the movement involving other fraternal states? Moscow will try everything to make Kania reestablish the system of the Polish United Workers Party in such a way that it will fit into the framework of the bloc's discipline. The question is now whether there will be a compromise in line with the Russian saying that the wolf is satiated without eating the Polish herd. Kania must try to achieve the impossible.

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG notes: The new Polish leadership was granted its own crisis management 2 months ago. The fact that it must put up with strike threats from the self-confident new Solidarity trade union, and that it must yield to discussions under such pressure causes the people in power in the neighboring fraternal countries to be more and more nervous. The basic benevolence of Poland's allies vis-a-vis Kania because of his dogmatic steadfastness does not help him much. The others are afraid of becoming infected by the Polish trade union bacillus and they demand a remedy. It looks as if he will be given a reprieve, but it will not last very long.

SUEDDEUTUSCHE ZEITUNG wonders: Will the Polish summer end up in a cold winter after a transitory fall? The paper goes on to say: Lech Walesa's independent trade union Solidarity now has 7 million members, yet nobody dares contend any longer that it scored a victory when it forced the party and the government to recognize the demands of the striking workers 2 months ago. Walesa is no longer the undisputed leader of the independent trade union, despite the embraces by Cardinal Wyszynski; groups displaying a sharper attitude against the party and the government have formed, groups which resist a long march into impotence.

DELIVERY OF MIRAGES TO IRAQ MAY START IN DECEMBER

NC011148 Paris AFP in English 1132 GMT 1 Nov 80

[Excerpt] Paris, 1 Nov (AFP)--France may start delivery next month of 60 Mirage F-1 fighter planes ordered by Iraq in 1977 and 1979, according to the French news magazine LE POINT.

Production had been speeded up at the Breguet-Dassault works, makers of the advanced supersonic jet plane, LE POINT reported, "so as to gain three months on first deliveries originally scheduled to begin in early February."

The company had issued specific instructions to the effect that "the first machines be on the banks of (Iraq's) Tigris River during the first days of December," the news magazine said.

No official confirmation could be obtained from government sources.

GISCARD CITED ON POLICIES FOR FUTURE

LD031051 Paris LE MONDE in French 2-3 Nov 80 p 6

[Excerpts] The following are the main points drawn from the speech delivered by Valery Giscard d'Estaing at Autun on Friday afternoon, 31 October.

The head of the state began by recalling that Autun faces Bibracte, a fortified city. "It was from there," he said, "that the first national unity movement began around Arverne--I mean Auvergnat--Vercingetorix." He then turned to the France of fall 1980: "A France which is active for security and peace in the world; a government which is governing; French women and men who are working responsibly and in some cases working very hard to preserve the present and prepare for the future." Mr Giscard d'Estaing added: "For his part the president of the republic is working for and is concerned with France's interests. His only task is to try to ensure France's present and prepare its future. That is his role in keeping with the mandate you have given him."

The president of the republic then explained that his recent visit to China led him to ask questions about "the changing world." "In face of this intelligent multitude who are going to work a great deal...what are we going to do? Are we going to build a new Maginot line?.... That is not France's attitude. It must look at the world as it is and accept what it will become... We must not look back but must look ahead:; 5, 10 or 20 years ahead."

Reviewing the situation in the world after the oil shocks, the head of state noted: "When you hear people going on about French resignation, tell yourself that France is the country in the world with the most complete and effective energy policy thanks to the population's good sense and discipline." He continued: "This energy policy is 6 years old; it is beginning to be productive. It takes time to prepare for the future: This is the first lesson which I have learned from my office. It is never too early to plan for the future! It is the president of the republic whom the nation is asking to keep out of the present agitation and plan for the future."

LE MONDE ON AIMS OF INTERIOR MINISTER'S SAUDI VISIT

[Text] Interior Minister Christian Bonnet started a 4-day visit to Saudi Arabia on Friday, 31 October.

Although the French Interior Ministry has merely stated that Mr Bonnet, who is accompanied by his principal private secretary and by National Police Director General Maurice Lambert, is repaying the visit made to Paris last year by his Saudi counterpart Nayif Ibn 'Abd al-'Aziz, some observers think that this visit could in fact lead to Franco-Saudi cooperation agreements on police and internal security matters. The Saudi leaders could in particular ask France for aid in training officers and in supplying special equipment.

MICHEL TATU VIEWS RESULTS OF U.S. MIDEAST PRESENCE

LD310947 Paris LE MONDE in French 30 Oct 80 pp 1, 6

[Michel Tatu article: "Redeployment in the Gulf"]

[Text] Whatever solution is found to the hostage problem, or, more precisely, whenever they are released, the 52 U.S. captives will for once have been useful to Iran and not only as pawns on the chessboard of the internal power struggle. Without their presence in Tehran's prisons and elsewhere, the United States would very probably not have leaned so far toward Iran in its conflict with Iraq.

At the risk of deviating from the officially proclaimed neutrality, Mr Carter went so far as to describe Iraq as the aggressor and to warn against any attack on its victim's territorial integrity. Washington's denials of the idea of trading the "hostages for spare parts" were not very convincing. One of the conditions set by Imam Khomeyni for the hostages' release--the release of Iranian assets in the United States--will in fact enable Tehran to recover not only the funds it has in the banks but also military supplies worth some $400 million already ordered from U.S. suppliers and paid for. Therefore it is not without good reason that Iraq has just denounced, through its foreign minister, the U.S. intention to contribute to the Iranian war effort.

Strangely enough this rapprochement has gone hand-in-hand with a series of gestures which could have been interpreted a short while ago, not only by Iran but by several other states in the region, as provocations. The strengthening of the U.S. military presence in the Indian Ocean has not been the subject of spectacular proclamations but it cannot be underestimated.

There is a veritable armada of 30 U.S. ships (including 2 nuclear-powered aircraft carriers) cruising in the region, in other words the biggest naval force ever deployed in the Indian Ocean, as Mr Muskie said. The decision to send marines on board some vessels in this squadron, the ground forces sent to Egypt to take part in exercises there, the agreement recently reached with Oman, Kenya and Somalia on the use of ground "facilities," the supply of AWACS radar aircraft to Saudi Arabia: all increase the importance of this force and the "credibility" of its possible use.

In the longer term the speeding up of the positioning of the rapid deployment force (seven ships loaded with equipment are already "prepositioned" in the Indian Ocean) and the measures taken to reduce the time taken for a possible intervention by mobilizing means of transport--and the U.S. air transport capacity far outstrips that of the USSR--confirms that the Americans, forgetting the "Vietnamese trauma," are preparing for a "large-scale and long-term" effort, to quote Mr Brzezinski, to assert their presence in what Mr Carter's adviser calls the "third strategic zone" of U.S. interests after the efforts made in Europe and the Far East in the past 30 years.

In the short term Washington has made a more discreet but important gesture by increasing the small contingent of ships patrolling directly in the Strait of Hormuz from three to five vessels. This is a way of demonstrating its real intention to maintain freedom of navigation in the Gulf at any cost, an intention which is shared by the entire West.

The EC countries have said this quite clearly, and France has gone so far as to strengthen its Indian Ocean fleet at the same time and without any apparent consultation with the U.S. ally. Even though the United States has had to abandon the plan for a joint "task force" which it cherished at first, it can flatter itself that it has finally exercised the leadership which is exalted so much in its election debates; it only encountered some difficulty with Australia, which has refused to take part in joint maneuvers.

This same intention has been impressed upon the protagonists and principal spectators in the Iran-Iraq conflict, helping to limit its effects and extent better than might first have been hoped. Iraq has abandoned attempts to spread the war in the Gulf and to draw support from the Emirates in order to win back the three islands seized by the shah in 1971.

Saudi Arabia has abandoned its former attitude which led it to hope for distant and discreet U.S. protection ("from a distance"): Not only has it obtained the AWACS aircraft, which led to an open break with Libya, but it has requested antiaircraft missiles and other weapons from Washington. The United States is in a difficult position for satisfying those requests at present, in view of pressures from Israel (the installation of "offensive" equipment on the F-15 aircraft previously ordered by Riyadh is the subject of a quarrel which still has not been settled): but the Pentagon is already thinking of establishing backup points on Saudi soil which would look very like military bases. Such a development may have been inevitable sooner or later; but the Iranian-Iraqi conflict has accelerated it by crystallizing latent leanings: a leaning to the West by Saudi Arabia and the other moderate Arab countries and to the East by Syria and Libya.

However, the Soviet Union is not in a very good position to exploit this situation, at least in the short term. Faced with the Western armada which the conflict has brought to the Gulf of Oman it can do nothing but make verbal protests since its naval means are much too inadequate and since its navy, unlike the U.S. navy, does not have access to the Gulf and its ports. Since Iran is of more "interest" to it than Iraq, the Kremlin is making advances to Tehran, as is the White House, but without any more success than its rival. Being unable to bend the Islamic leaders' hostility to the USSR, it has no reason to make such a radical break with Baghdad as it did with Somalia a few years ago to Ethiopia's advantage. Therefore although it has allowed Libya to come to Iran's aid, the Kremlin is continuing to supply military equipment to Iraq, notably via East European countries, according to Mr Brzezinski.

All the Kremlin can hope is that the U.S. redeployment in the region will ultimately spark off upheavals which could be exploited in the societies concerned. For the United States the main risk is that of sparking off, by too obvious a presence in Saudi Arabia, a rejection similar to the one which led to the shah's fall on the other side of the Gulf. However, after what happened in Afghanistan, it is becoming more difficult for the Soviet leaders to exploit the popular resentment against the "other devil."

DEFENSE COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS NUCLEAR MODERNIZATION

[Text] Over the past 20 years France has spent Fr222 billion (at 1980 values) on its strategic and tactical nuclear weapons and it must plan to devote an additional Fr122 billion to modernizing this arsenal in the next 20 years. That is the conclusion drawn by the information report on "the state and modernization of the French nuclear forces" published this Friday, 17 October, by Raymond Tourrain, RPR deputy for Doubs on behalf of the National Assembly Defense Committee.

The report's author notes that nuclear weapons constituted "a constant, priority effort" in General de Gaulle's presidency and "a continued priority despite the more limited means" in Georges Pompidou's presidency.

He points to "a relaxation in priorities despite increased means" under President Giscard d'Estaing. Since 1960 the share of the defense budget devoted to nuclear spending fell on average each year from 24 percent between 1964 and 1969 to 17 percent between 1969 and 1974 and to 14 percent between 1974 and 1980.

"The Fifth Republic's military past clearly shows that the financial effort made during the last 20 years can be calculated at about Fr220 billion at 1980 values, which has in no way affected the French people's standard of living or a high rate of economic expansion," Mr Tourrain writes in particular. "Since Georges Pompidou's death no really important new measure has been taken in the sphere of developing our nuclear weapons. Decisions will have to be made quickly."

In his report, approved by most deputies on the defense committee, Mr Tourrain puts forward a series of proposals for modernizing the nuclear force between now and the year 2000. The cost of the projects chosen is estimated at Fr80 billion, to which must be added Fr42.2 million for carrying out current nuclear programs.

"Priority must be given to missile submarines," the report's author writes, suggesting improvements in the ships' undetectability, detection powers (being able to listen without being heard), navigational accuracy, communications, speed, diving ability and missiles. In particular, Mr Tourrain calls for the development of a MIRVed missile with a range of 7,000 km (4,000 km for the M-4 missile which will be ready in 1985). In all, two new submarines should be built between 1985 and 1991 and three more between 1992 and 2000. France could therefore have 10 or 11 missile submarines at the end of the century, depending on whether the Redoutable is still in service or not.

Furthermore the report's author calls for qualitative modernization of the missiles kept underground on the Albion Plateau in Haute-Provence and he suggested making operational silos out of three of the four experimental silos at present used for developing "vehicles" at the Landes test center. Mr Tourrain calls for the construction of around 50 twin-jet, two-seater bombers capable of firing a long-range air-to-surface missile.

The report's author, like the majority of the committee, advocates the construction of a mobile surface-to-surface ballistic missile in preference to a cruise missile. Some 100 such missiles, known as SX missiles, would be necessary.

In the tactical nuclear arms sphere, Mr Tourrain proposes that the Pluton missiles be replaced by a missile with a longer range (300 km) and mounted on a double carrier on a truck. In this way 200 missiles would be installed on the 100 vehicles forming the weapons system known as Hades. Finally, the report's author thinks that, while there can be no question of giving it priority, "the enhanced-radiation weapon (otherwise known as the neutron bomb--LE MONDE note) should be integrated into the tactical nuclear arsenal as a complementary element, reserving the possibilities of further technological developments."

According to the author's estimates, such a modernization program assumes that France will devote around 5 percent of the gross domestic product to its defense in 1988 instead of 3.85 percent in 1981.

"Defense and independence have no price," the RPR deputy for Doubs concludes. "France must immediately start thinking of its defense so that it could possibly be given a European dimension, though the nuclear aspect should continue to be pursued alone. By around 1990 France will have a nuclear potential of around 600 warheads and around 100 megatons. The French nuclear weapons are Europe's good fortune."

L'HUMANITE SCORES GISCARD VIEWS EXPRESSED IN PRC VISIT

LD311425 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 27 Oct 80 pp 1,8

[Andre Carrel article: "Return From Beijing"]

[Text] I have just spent several days in China. On my return I read the various commentaries on the French-Chinese talks, and I think it is worth discussing them again for one basic reason. In my opinion the press, radio and television have glossed over what strikes me as essential: a real and dangerous rapprochement between Giscard d'Estaing's positions and those of the Chinese leaders--in the overseas sphere of course.

Nuances do of course remain. Essentially, however, as the president of the republic said, "there is a broad similarity of views between the two countries." Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang used the same expression in our presence. So what does this mean in practical terms?

First, broad approval for Chinese theories on the world's evolution in 1980. Let us recall these although they are well-known. One danger is threatening the world: hegemonism. For hegemonism read the Soviet Union; hence the need to resist and the approval given, from the first day of the Beijing talks, to all measures to strengthen France's military potential, including, we can assume, the development of the neutron bomb.

Giscard d'Estaing, for his part, illustrated the same idea in a different way by stressing the need for a multipolar world based notably on China and the European Nine. In any case, that presupposes support from U.S. imperialism, although this was not stated, at least not officially.

This is demonstrated by the emphasis with which Giscard d'Estaing, in his speeches, portrayed himself as the spokesman for "little Europe." Nobody can be unaware, least of all Giscard d'Estaing, of how that Europe is increasingly an integral part of Washington's strategy. Military integration plans, such as the deployment of new U.S. missiles, are key points in that strategy.

Consequently, invoking the European Nine's independence in these circumstances to justify a "multipolar world" is a sham intended to hide the existence of real convergence--the convergence on the Chinese ideas. This runs counter to the world's evolution in the past 10 years and encourages war psychosis and an escalation in arms production.

The tour of Beijing's nuclear shelters organized for journalists the same day as a new Chinese nuclear test was carried out, was, so to speak, a curious indication of this state of mind.

Giscard d'Estaing's meeting with Sihanouk also demonstrated the part taken by Europe in China's major maneuvers to call Kampuchea's revival into question and to launch an equally virulent attack on Vietnam which has been facing the attacks of colonialism and imperialism for the past 30 years.

This is particularly true if this meeting is connected with the UN vote. By its abstention France helped the people who assassinated millions of Kampucheans to remain in the seat which should go to the legal Phnom Penh government.

Of course, Giscard d'Estaing during his visit to China did speak of peace, culture and even...of the right to happiness for the young people of the world. From this viewpoint the speech he delivered at Shanghai's Fudan University typifies the genre.

Perhaps, having just descended from Xizang's high plateaux, he mistook himself for Jean Jaures [French Socialist who died in 1914]. The scene did have a certain piquancy. You should have seen big capital's man lecturing to the Chinese students. I have taken this gem from his speech in which flattery vied with demagoguery: "We must respond to the passionate challenge from the young people of the world. My generation's main task is to prepare your generation's future well."

I do not know how the Chinese students reacted privately once the ceremony was over but I am sure that young French people, facing these tragic times and anxious about the future, will judge the head of state's cynicism as it deserves.

Clearly it is a good thing that the president of the republic should visit other states, especially a country with 1 billion inhabitants which has achieved in 30 years what others accomplished in 200 years. However, writing that does not prevent me from making a lucid and anxious commentary on the political results of Giscard d'Estaing's visit to China.

In addition it cannot make us forget that, beyond the serious differences of opinion we have with Beijing over its foreign policy, China is a socialist society showing radically new characteristics, engaged in deep changes, and having its own laws of development.

PCF, FLN TALK ON INTERNATIONAL SITUATION, PARTY TIES

LD030941 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 30 Oct 80 p 11

The delegation's visit is part of the regular meetings between the two parties. Its aim is to provide an opportunity for a broad exchange of views on the international situation, particularly the problems of peace and security in the Mediterranean, the West Sahara question, relations between France and Algeria and, finally, the development of relations between the PCF and the FLN party.

The talks began Wednesday afternoon with a PCF delegation headed by Politburo member and Central Committee Security Maxime Gremetz; they will be continued all day Thursday.

PS NATIONAL COMMITTEE COMMUNIQUE SUPPORTS SOARES

LD311549 Lisbon DIARIO DE NOTICIAS in Portuguese 27 Oct 80 p 3

[Excerpt] The Socialist Party [PS] National Committee reiterated last night in the final communique on its 2-day meeting held at the Largo do Rato offices "its full political solidarity" with Mario Soares, emphasizing that, "over and above the specific differences which are always possible in a democratic party, it is around him that party unity should be consolidated."

In addition to this assertion, it states that in the field of the decisons made following the reiteration of the stances adopted by the PS secretary general, the National Committee decided to appoint a delegation to resume the dialogue with General Ramalho Eanes within the context of the already confirmed support for his candidacy for a second term of office as president of the republic, and with a view to resolving the ambiguities and clarifying the manner of the Socialists' cooperation in his election campaign.

In fact the National Committee yesterday morning undertook a "thorough and thoughtful" analysis of the lengthy statement made by Mario Soares on the previous day. The debate led, of course, to conclusions, and these were reflected in the decisions made by the Socialist leaders and disclosed in the final communique.

However, this stage in the proceedings was disturbed by the resignation of Maldonado Gonelha as party National Secretariat member. The explanation given by him for this action could in fact lift a corner of the veil with respect to the severe tensions experienced in the PS during these 2 days, without the conviction existing that all the issues have been surmounted.

Maldonado Gonelha based his decision on two reasons: "One of consistency and the other of integrity, such as I understand it." "This is a personal matter," he stressed, adding: "it is not the presidential issues which are involved, but the stance of the Secretariat itself, which was elected at the Oporto congress by a list put forward by Comrade Mario Soares. Now if it was the secretary general who put it forward, it enjoyed his confidence. Once the secretary general adopted the stance which he adopted, I deemed it highly desirable for the National Secretariat also to lay down its duties out of political and ethical solidarity and thus to allow a caretaker committee to lead the party until the elections."

The Socialist leader then pointed out that "the Secretariat decided yesterday, contrary to what its spokesman stated on television Monday, to do the reverse and accept a vote by the National Committee, which was done merely to confirm it and give it confidence."

This was the initial reply, with respect to consistency, given by Maldonado Gonelha; the second, concerning integrity, is connected with the presidential elections: "It is not sufficient to say that support for General Eanes was reaffirmed. It is necessary to specify that support and to set conditions for it. It is necessary to know clearly what political stances he will adopt as a candidate, and the forces supporting him must be consulted in advance, and this was not the case with the press conference."

Following a question about the setting up of the political committee supporting General Eanes, which, in his opinion, should include PS personalities, Gonelha finally emphasized:

"In addition, it is necessary to examine carefully how the campaign will proceed and decide who will campaign for General Eanes and attend rallies at his side on behalf of the party, and call on the latter to vote--and the PS has 1.6 million people to vote for General Ramalho Eanes."

Although the process of support for General Ramalho Eanes' candidacy was not reopened with respect to a possible reappraisal of the opposition adopted, the issue was broached again, however, with respect to the methods to be adopted by the Socialists. In fact there were criticisms of the "unconditional way" in which the National Committee decided to support the current president of the republic's candidacy for a second term, and there will be an attempt to correct this to some extent through negotiations whose scope for maneuver therefore seems particularly narrow.

For this reason, Socialist sources intimated that in his statement the day before yesterday Mario Soares accepted the possibility of a renegotiation of the agreement already reached with Eanes, so as to recover for the Socialists possible political benefits from a victory for that candidate in the 7 December elections.

There will clearly be an attempt to basically establisn the ideological border between the PS and Ramalho Eanes, clearly marking out each side's areas. This would explain Mario Soares' intransigent refusal to support the current head of state in light of what is deemed to be the ambiguous situation to which the National Committee's unconditional stance would lead if it persisted, even after the vote of the evening before last (which produced 101 votes in favor of the previous stances and 34 against) for full support for Eanes' candidacy.

However, Maldonado Gonelha's statements yesterday morning seemed to confirm the previous day's rumors according to which Soares' intransigence stems from antagonism toward the majority group, led by Salgado Zenha and supported by the former Socialist intervention group members and by some "historicals"--although for different but ultimately converging reasons--which allegedly intends to direct the party toward a "presidentialist tendency," running counter to the Social Democratic, European and Laborite formula advocated and upheld by Mario Soares. Together with the youngest wing of the Socialists, in which Vitor Constancio and Antonio Guterres allegedly play an important role.

Yesterday afternoon some attempts to reconcile the two currents apparently took shape with some success, judging by the text of the final communique, all the more so since unconfirmed reports reached the Largo do Rato of the existence of an atmosphere of commotion among the party's grassroots, which were not prepared to accept the secretary general's withdrawal, and of a decision to hold demonstrations in the area of the meeting as a means of exerting pressure and with the aim of inducing the National Committee to reappraise its stances.

A leader of a section of the Lisbon urban area federation even told the DIARIO DE NOTICIAS that "the grassroots will not allow Mario Soares to leave. If they believe that, they are greatly mistaken."

OLESEN RESPONDS TO CRITICISMS OF AID TO THIRD WORLD

LD311453 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 15 Oct 80 Part 1 p 1

[Dan Axel report: "More Effective Third World Aid"]

[Text] Foreign Minister Kjeld Olesen has taken the criticism of Danish aid to the Third World seriously. He now wants to appoint a commission to investigate in greater detail Denmark's combined aid to the developing nations.

This will happen against the background of the report published by former Federal Chancellor Willy Brandt—together with Swedish professor Gunnar Myrdal's views—and other contributions to the wider debate. The object of the commission's work is to clarify how Denmark can contribute most effectively to the development of the Third World.

"It is clear that special difficulties are involved in carrying out planned projects in societies that are characterized by poor economies, weak administration, untrained planning organs and unwieldy decision-making processes," Kjeld Olesen said in his comments on the National Accounting and Audit Bureau's criticisms.

In its report the National Accounting and Audit Bureau has shown that Finance Committee Chairman Kristian Albertsen has on several occasions given permission for overstepping the conditions that the committee has laid down for projects in developing countries.

Finance Committee Deputy Chairman Bertel Haarder (Liberal): "This is of course indefensible. We are now demanding that in the future the finance committee chairman informs the committee of such things. Either Kristian Albertsen has misled ministers by giving permission without the support of the committee, or he has abused his position."

FRYDENLUND SPEAKS ON MILITARY BALANCE, MIDEAST ISSUES

LD030959 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 28 Oct 80 p 4

[Text] The background to NATO's long-term defense program is to be found in the systematic priority given to military expansion with a real growth rate in spending of 4 to 5 percent over more than 10 years on the part of Soviet Russia. Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund made this statement in a speech on the international situation to the Oslo Military Society Monday [27 October].

Frydenlund stated that oil has gradually become the central factor in international politics, and he pointed out that if oil exports from the Gulf area were to stop entirely we would be faced with a truly catastrophic situation.

The foreign minister used a large part of his speech to examine the arms situation in the world and the possibilities of disarmament.

"There are no obvious measures we could adopt and implement which could cut through the deadlocked situations and get the disarmament process moving. As in other foreign policy fields, tireless work with details, plans and negotiations is needed here before we can make progress," Frydenlund said.

The foreign minister asserted that the departure point for progress toward detente, arms control and disarmament is security from attack, and such security presupposes the existence of an approximate military balance.

"There are sectors of Europe and areas within the military forces where there exist imblances which form the basic for real concern, but the total situation seems more or less balanced. What do give cause for concern are the trends. If these continue unchanged, NATO will come to face considerable problems. This is the background to the long-term defense program within the alliance. The reasons for this are to be found in the systematic priority given to military expansion with a real growth rate in spending of 4 to 5 percent in the Soviet Union for more than the last 10 years. A sort of shortfall has been created in strength development which is worrying and which must be halted," Frydenlund said. He expressed the hope that the political circumstances in international politics could be changed as quickly as possible to enable the SALT II agreement to be ratified and implemented as soon as possible.

However, the foreign minister also expressed cautious optimism in his appraisal of the current arms situation. "A major element is that we are now standing on the threshold of possible breakthroughs in a number of important areas," Frydenlund said. "If these breakthroughs take place more or less simultaneously, they can create the possibility of mutually reinforcing effects that could in their turn contribute to a powerful movement toward arms reduction and limitation. If it does turn out to be possible to start such a movement, this in itself would be able to give the policy of detente new impetus," the foreign minister said.

In his appraisal of an international energy policy Frydenlund pointed out that Western nations must reduce the proportion of oil in their total energy consumption if these nations are to master their serious adjustment problems. If this does not happen the Western nations will grow increasingly dependent on the situation and developments in the leading oil-producing countries, primarily Saudi Arabia.

After pointing out that a halt in oil exports from the Gulf region would face us with a catastrophic situation, Frydenlund stressed that in the present inflammable sitation it is especially important that East-West rivalry for influence in the Middle East is limited by the realization of the dangers inherent in measures which could threaten the other's vital interests and, as a result, the stability between the two blocs.

In an evaluation of the Middle East situation Frydenlund pointed out that it is impossible--apart from through negotiations involving all parties--to get any clear picture of what real possibilities exist to create a solution which both guarantees Israel's right to safe, recognized borders and which at the same time includes a solution to the Palestinian question.

"It is only in the negotiating process with its concessions and counterconcessions that one can count on the parties departing from their present maximum demands in any significant way. A key question in the immediate future will therefore be the expansion of the negotiating base and the participation in future negotiations. If there is success in finding an acceptable negotiating base which includes Syria, Jordan and the Palestinians, this would promote the consolidation of the Egyptian-Israeli peace agreement," Frydenlund said.

PAPAIOANNOU QUERIES GOVERNMENT ON NEW ROUND OF EXPLOSIONS

NC020958 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 2 Nov 80 p 16

[Text] Due to the recent wave of bomb explosions in Nicosia and Limassol, AKEL Secretary General Papaionnou, in a question at the House of Representatives session [30 October] denounced the threat of a new round of criminal undermining actions and simultaneously stressed the need to take immediate action in finding all unlawful arms.

Papaioannou's question is as follows: "Lately there have been bomb explosions in both Nicosia and Limassol. Fortunately, there have been no victims, but only material damage. Bullets went off after a fire in the Pyrgos area in Limassol, and it was ascertained that there were hidden ammunition boxes in a certain ravine.

"On the other hand, known coupist circles have circulated rumors that 'they will resume soon.' Without clearly stating what exactly they will resume, it is very evident that they mean they will assume the same procoup traitorous, criminal role they did in the past.

"Because unlawful weapons are in the hands of coupists and, possibly, the number of weapons has also increased, the Cypriot people, who have been betrayed, smeared with blood and turned into refugees, are justifiably concerned about the whole situation and ask whether the explosions that took place are not an attempt to instigate a new round of criminal undermining activities.

"This is the reason why the competent ministry is being asked to inform the house body why it is delaying action to find all unlawful arms and punish the culprits as an example when, since 1978, it has repeatedly warned that such action would be taken. How does the competent ministry assess the recent bomb explosions and what is being said by the coupists?"

LIBYAN EMBASSY CONVERTED INTO PEOPLE'S BUREAU 1 NOV

NC011328 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 1 Nov 80

[Text] Libyan citizens residing in Cyprus took over the Libyan Embassy in Nicosia today, established a people's committee and converted the embassy into a people's bureau. A people's committee statement said that the takeover was carried out in conjunction with Libyan leader Colonel al-Qadhdhafi's instructions for the takeover and conversion of embassies into people's bureaus. The statement adds that the committee would spare no efforts in further developing Libyan-Cypriot relations.

After the occupation of the Libyan Embassy, the secretary of the designated people's committee, Dr 'Abdallah Zubaydi, convened a press conference. In response to correspondents' questions Mr Zubaydi said that Mr al-Zabi, the present charge d'affairs, was asked to return to Libya. He also said that the Cypriot Government will be accordingly informed of the Libyan citizens' action and of the fact that the bureau is not a diplomatic mission. He also said that the status of the bureau will be discussed later with the Cypriot Government and that the people's bureau will issue visas as usual.

Mr Zubaydi recently came to Cyprus to attend the international conference of solidarity with the national liberation movements and the people of the Arabian Gulf against imperialism. He is a professor of the Fatah University in Libya.

Speaking before the meeting, the UN special representative in Cyprus, Mr Gobbi, the Turkish Cypriot interlocutor, Mr Onan, and the Greek Cypriot representative, Mr Ioannidhis, all expressed hope for the continuation of the talks. Kiprianou Comments to Press

NC311839 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1730 GMT 31 Oct 80

[Text] President Kiprianou has stressed that the Greek Cypriot side and the Government of Cyprus are viewing the intercommunal talks with an open mind and good will with the aim of finding a lasting and viable Cyprus solution. Speaking to members of the Union of Foreign Correspondents in Greece, who visited him at the Presidential Palace this morning, President Kiprianou said the talks are at a preliminary stage and it is premature to make any forecast about their outcome. The president expressed the hope, however, that with good will progress can be made and that the talks will enter into a more substantive discussion at a later stage. He added: It is expected that after the end of the second round of talks, the procedure will be speeded up and by the end of November we will know where things stand. He stressed: We look to a solution that would safeguard the absolute independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity and unity of Cyprus, because unity of the state also means unity of the people.

Replying to a question on the Famagusta issue, President Kiprianou said that this issue is not the entire Cyprus problem, but it is one of the issues that has priority.

Answering another question, Mr Kiprianou said there is no question of enosis. He stressed: We are seeking a solution of full independence. He further said that means should be found for the reunification of the two communities. He added: The best security is created when the people are united and have common interests. We do not have any feelings of hatred toward the Turkish Cypriots. Concerning the question of social insurance for the Turkish Cypriots, President Kiprianou said that the government will pay the benefits and that the exact method of payment was to be discussed at today's meeting of the intercommunal talks.

The foreign correspondents also met today with Turkish Cypriot leader Denktas, who said in his statement that Varosha is not the key to the solution of the Cyprus problem, which he said, can only be solved through a package deal.

Participants' Statements Reported

NC311942 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1730 GMT 31 Oct 80

The next meeting of the intercommunal talks will be held Wednesday afternoon, 5 November, and will continue the discussion of the question concerning the constitutional aspects.

In a statement prior to the meeting, UN Secretary General's Special Representative in Cyprus Gobbi said that he had meetings with Rolandhis, Onan and Atakol to whom he submitted some suggestions from UN Secretary General Waldheim and added that a least common denominator was established. Gobbi added that both sides told him they were in favor of the inter-Cypriot talks, they believed the development of the inter-Cypriot talks was the proper one and the pace followed was the most realistic, and Gobbi expressed his satisfaction over this position. Asked about the content of the suggestions he had conveyed, Gobbi said he could not talk about them without the approval of the parties concerned.

Answering another question on whether there has been any other specific development since the latest meeting, Gobbi said there was nothing particular. Answering a question on the anticipated duration of the talks, Gobbi said: I have never promised early results. With regard to today's meeting, he said he was not expecting miracles. He added: We are at the beginning. He also reiterated that, following the statements made by the two parties, he had the view that, for the time being, there was a least common denominator which could raise hopes in the future.

Mr Ioannidhis, representative of the Greek Cypriot side at the talks, said in his statement that at today's meeting he expected to have a useful discussion on the proposals by the two sides concerning the initial practical measures. He added: It is too early yet, but we hope that with patience, good will and, above all, with constant efforts it will be possible to enter a substantive dialogue.

Replying to a question on the contents of the UN secretary general's messages, Mr Ioannidhis said that Mr Waldheim recommends that we should go ahead with the dialogue. This is a message that both sides have in mind. We are interested in a constructive dialogue, and we are pursuing it; the UN secretary general looks to a constructive and meaningful dialogue.

Finally, Mr Ioannidhis said that the payment of social insurance benefits to eligible Turkish Cypriots, which has been announced by the Cyprus Government, was among the subjects of today's meeting.

At the same time, Mr Onan, representative of the Turkish Cypriot side, said in his statement that at today's meeting he expected the comments and proposals of the Greek Cypriot side on the question of initial practical measures. In any case, he added, we will answer to anything that may be raised by the Greek-Cypriot side.

Answering a question whether, following the UN secretary general's messages, the prospects are better, Mr Onan said that messages are always received in Cyprus. He added: We welcome any message if it is productive.

Rolandhis' Comments to Reporters

NC021007 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 1 Nov 80

[Excerpts] Today, Foreign Minister Rolandhis, Finance Minister Avxendiou and Commerce Minister Kittis briefed the visiting members of the foreign correspondents association in Greece.

Among other things, the foreign minister said that the relations between the two communities and the possibilities of finding a solution to the Cyprus issue are better today than at any time since the 1974 events. He also said that the intercommunal dialogue is more meaningful and is being held in a constructive, cordial atmosphere. However, Mr Rolandhis added that, at this moment, there are not many facts that might justify optimism. He said that there are only a few favorable signs and indications that Turkey and the Turkish Cypriots may see the Cyprus issue from a new angle. Finally he said that the Greek Cypriots' will for a Cyprus solution has always been vivid.

Atakol Expresses Optimism

TA302125 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1930 GMT 30 Oct 80

[Text] Foreign Affairs, Defense and Tourism Minister Kenan Atakol has expressed optimism about the settlement of the problems in Cyprus. Speaking at a dinner in honor of the members of the Greek Foreign Journalists Union, who are visiting the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus, Atakol said that it is not difficult for peace to be reestablished in Cyprus. He noted that if good will is displayed in favor of a solution compatible with the realities of the island, peace can be realized rapidly.

Recalling that the Greek Cypriot side is benefiting from all economic opportunities and assistance, Atakol stressed that under these circumstances it is the Turkish Cypriot community that is more interested in securing peace.

The journalists later visited the mass graves in Murataga [Maratha], Sandallar [Sandalaris] and Atlilar [Aloa].

WALDHEIM INVITES ATAKOL, ROLANDHIS FOR SPECIAL TALKS

TA020950 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 0900 GMT 2 Nov 80

[Text] UN Secretary General Kurt Waldheim has invited Foreign, Defense and Tourism Minister Kenan Atakol and Greek Cypriot Foreign Minister Nikos Rolandhis to New York. The UN secretary general's special envoy in Cyprus, Hugo Gobbi, called on Atakol and Rolandhis separately last Friday and conveyed to them a message from the secretary general.

The Turkish News Agency in Cyprus reports that Waldheim invited Atakol and Rolandhis to discuss the 5th and 6th articles of the 19 May 1979 agreement signed between Denktas and Kiprianou. The 5th article of the agreement is on the issue of Maras [Varosha] and the 6th article is on the measures to be taken to ensure good will, mutual confidence and normalization between the two communities. In his message, Waldheim invited Atakol and Rolandhis to be in New York on 17 and 18 November. Atakol confirmed the invitation and said that the issue was being discussed by the government. He said that the decision would be conveyed to the United Nations.

Meanwhile, the Greek Cypriot press says that the aim of the move by the United Nations is to take certain aspects of the Cyprus problem out of the framework of the intercommunal talks and raise it to a level between the two states [as heard], and that therefore the invitation will not be accepted by the Greek Cypriot side.

Waldheim Invitation Rejected

NC021832 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1730 GMT 2 Nov 80

[Text] The following official statement was issued tonight in connection with separate talks in New York on the Cyprus issue: Last Friday, 31 October, UN Secretary General's Special Representative in Cyprus Gobbi visited the foreign minister of the republic, Mr Rolandhis, and announced to him that UN Secretary General Waldheim is studying the possibility of separate talks in New York on 17 November 1980 with Foreign Minister Rolandhis and on 18 November 1980 with Turkish Cypriot Representative Atakol.

The purpose of the talks would be the discussion of subjects 5 and 6 of the Kiprianou-Denktas agreement; that is, of the questions concerning Varosha and the initial practical measures. Mr Gobbi stressed that this idea was of a preliminary nature.

Mr Rolandhis told Mr Gobbi that he would brief the president of the republic accordingly. His immediate reaction, however, was that such a procedure was not appropriate for the following reasons:

1. The talks being conducted in Cyprus between the representatives of the two communities are proceeding in a satisfactory manner. Usually, alternative solutions are considered when the existing arrangements pose problems.
2. It would not be right for the republic's foreign minister to participate in consultations in a common framework with the so-called foreign minister of Denktas. Something like this would give validity to Denktas' administration and would not serve any useful purpose.
3. The creation of a parallel bridge of communication in New York, at a time when a dialogue is going on in Cyprus, could only cause confusion.

Mr Rolandhis further said that he would be prepared to go to New York and meet with Mr Waldheim whenever the UN secretary general would deem this appropriate to discuss and promote any matter concerning the Cyprus problem.

ALITHIA Criticizes Rejection

NC031000 Nicosia ALITHIA in Greek 3 Nov 80 pp 1, 8

[Excerpts] A new initiative by UN Secretary General Waldheim in connection with the issue of Famagusta and the promotion of practical measures was received negatively by the Greek side, while the Turkish side has reserved itself to reply "in due time" as Bayrak Radio has reported.

The initiative is connected with an invitation to Foreign Minister Rolandhis and Turkish Cypriot Leader Atakol to proceed to New York on 17 November. [passage omitted]

Commenting on the government statement, political observers have pointed out the following:

1. The reasons cited in the statement rejecting Mr Waldheim's invitation are not sufficient. It is nowhere evident that with his invitation the UN secretary general has sought to give validity to the "Denktas administration."
2. The response to the UN secretary general's initiatives must be placed within the framework of the display of good will by the Greek side and must not a priori challenge Mr Waldheim's intentions.

The description of the contact with Mr Waldheim as a "parallel bridge that could only cause confusion" is unfounded and arbitrary and it offends the UN secretary general.
4. The linking of paragraphs 5 and 6 in the Kiprianou-Denktas agreement could not possibly have been made through consultations with only one side.
5. The last paragraph in the government statement that Mr Rolandhis is willing to proceed to New York whenever Mr Waldheim would deem this appropriate contradicts the previous excuses for the rejection of the invitation, as these excuses include reference to unfounded intentions.

The same observers expressed the view that the Cyprus Government has blundered again and wonder whether this question has been submitted to the National Council. The same observers expressed the view that a way must be found to rectify this fresh mistake and that it must be immediately stated that the Greek side is willing to send Mr Rolandhis to New York.

JOINT STATEMENT ISSUED ON KKE VISIT WITH AKEL

NC311315 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 31 Oct 80 pp 1,7

[Text of joint statement on visit of KKE and AKEL discussed, in the spirit of their parties' traditional fraternal relations, the situation in Greece and Cyprus, party activities, international problems and world communist movements.

The AKEL delegation expressed the Cypriot people's strong concern over Greece's reintegration into NATO's military wing, which will have negative and dangerous repercussions on Cyprus and on Greece's independence and sovereignty. The AKEL delegation also discussed the latest developments in the continuing inter-Cypriot talks, which are being held on the basis of UN resolutions and summit agreements, and it thanked the KKE for its hearty support of Cyprus' struggle.

The KKE delegation once again expressed their party's complete and unreserved solidarity and support for the brotherly Cypriot people, for a just and permanent solution to the Cypriot issue based on UN resolutions and for a Cyprus that will be independent, sovereign, territorially integral, democratic, nonaligned and demilitarized. The KKE delegation assured AKEL that it will staunchly support it and the Cypriot people until their struggle has been vindicated.

Regarding the situation in Greece, the KKE delegation stressed that the Greek people at this moment are upset by the general opposition and fight against the national underbidding of the rightwing government, namely, Greece's reintegration into the NATO military wing. This seriously undermines Greece's national independence, threatens its sovereign rights, embroils it in imperialism's adventurous, interfering plans in the Middle East and exposes it to a very serious threat--the threat of a NATOite solution to the Cypriot problem. The delegation stressed that the KKE, together with all Greek anti-imperialist, patriotic forces, will continue to strengthen its struggle for the support of national independence and democracy, for the withdrawal from aggressive NATO, for the abolition of U.S. bases and for an independent foreign policy of peace and friendship with all peoples. It will also struggle for the vital problems of the workers, for a substantive, democratic way of live in Greece and for its release from the rightwing's antipeople and antinational policy.

The two delegations stressed that the Cypriot cause is threatened by imperialism's intensified undermining activities, which are aimed at reaching a NATOite solution to the Cypriot issue, and its transformation of the island into a NATO base against the countries and peoples of the area.

The cause is even more threatened by the imposition of the military junta in Turkey and by the tension in the Near and Middle East with the Iraqi-Iranian war at its peak--which is being used by U.S. and NATO imperialists as a pretext to strengthen their positions and promote their more general strategic plans. The two delegations called on the patriotic forces and all the anti-imperilaist forces in Greece and Cyprus to increase their vigilance and coordinate their actions against the unlawful imperialist plans that are in radical opposition to the interests of the people of Greece and Cyprus. The two delegations also called on both peoples to struggle for the withdrawal of the Turkish and all other foreign troops, the abolition of all foreign military bases and the complete demilitarization of Cyprus. They stressed that the intercommunal talks under UN auspices and based on UN resolutions in finding a solution to the domestic aspects of the Cypriot issue, which would secure the peaceful life and cooperation of Greek and Turkish Cypriots, is the procedure that should be followed. They once again stressed the need for convening an international conference within the UN framework to solve the international aspects of the Cypriot issue.

The KKE and AKEL delegations decisively condemned the Turkish military coup that was imposed upon the people with the encouragement and support of the U.S.-NATOite imperialists in order to strike the popular anti-imperialist movement of Turkey and thus strengthen their strategic postions in Turkey and in the area. The two delegations expressed their struggling solidarity and support for the brotherly Turkish Communist Party and all the progressive and democratic forces and demanded the release of all political detainees, the restoration of democratic liberties and rights of the Turkish people.

The two parties stressed that the activities of U.S. imperialists and NATO in the eastern Mediterranean in transforming Cyprus into a NATO base, Greece's reincarceration into the military wing of NATO, as well as the imposition of the military dictatorship in Turkey are aimed at strengthening NATO's southeastern wing, particularly after its defeat in Iran, and its strategic positions in the eastern Mediterranean in order to carry out its adventurous plans in the Middle East, Persian Gulf and Indian Ocean. This intensified imperialist activity against the national interests of the peoples of Greece, Cyprus and the whole area has arisen from its more general aggressive cold war policy, its aggravation of the international situation by trampling the principles of peaceful coexistence and its acceleration of the arms race. It has tried to achieve a military-strategic superiority by pushing toward a nuclear holocaust in order to rebuild its lost positions and obstruct the course of humanity toward detente, peace and social progress.

I AVYI REPORTS SHIPMENT OF WAR SUPPLIES TO IRAN

AT021000 Athens I AVYI in Greek 2 Nov 80 p 1

["Exclusive" report on the shipment of war materiel from Volos to Iran]

[Text] Despite the government's denial that war materiel destined for Iran was moved through Greek territory, I AVYI reveals that a few days ago quantities of war materiel or essential spare parts were loaded at the port of Volos with their destination the port of Latakia in Syria for transhipment to Iran.

This report rebuts the official denials of the ministers of national defense and public order according to whom "not even the smallest quantity of war materiel earmarked for shipment either to Iran or Iraq is to be found in Greece." In addition this report also proves that the Greek Government indirectly is taking sides in the Persian Gulf confrontation between the two oil-producing countries in this way, perhaps contributing toward attainment of certain "allied" goals. In this way, however, it places our national and economic interests in jeopardy.

According to reports available to I AVYI, 42 medium-sized crates containing war materiel were loaded in Tuesday, 21 October, on the ferry boat which links Volos and Latakia, with Iran as their final destination. It is not known if other shipments with similar materiel followed, nor is there any confirmation that the materiel is from Greece or whether it was brought here so that it can be quietely transhipped.

GREEK 'COUNTERPLAN' ON U.S. BASES TO BE SUBMITTED

AT011540 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 1 Nov 80 p 1

[Text] The Greek Government will most probably reply with a counterplan to the plan of agreement proposal which the United States has submitted for its bases in Greece.

This was noted in authoritative reports which thus confirmed reports of the day before yesterday in I KATHIMERINI about "a number of Greek counterproposals on what the government considers beneficial within the framework of modernization of our defense infrastructure." The same reports foresee that the Greek-U.S. agreement on the bases will probably be signed by the end of the year (at the earliest).

This forecast regarding the duration of the negotiations was also related by Western diplomatic sources which expressed the conviction that negotiations will be completed and the relevant Greek-U.S. agreement will be signed by the end of the year or in early 1981.

The same sources added that, at least as far as the U.S. side is concerned, no great obstacles are foreseen which would make the smooth holding of negotiations difficult. This is because both governments want the negotiations to be completed without delay.

At this point Foreign Ministry sources noted that the Greek Government is prepared to sign the agreement quickly, provided of course that its terms are considered satisfactory by the Greek side. The same sources added that they consider the Greek-U.S. agreement which was initialed in 1977 and the U.S.-Turkish agreement that was signed in 1979 as the basis for the agreement under negotiation.

In addition, in accordance with authoritative reports by Western diplomatic circles, the U.S. Government has affirmed that the balance of U.S. military aid between Greece and Turkey will be maintained. After all, they clarified that this is a U.S. policy--an implementation of the relevant law that was passed by Congress--and that it is also the U.S. Government's conviction.

More specifically the same sources mentioned that the U.S. side does not intend to ask that the bases in Greece be used for purposes other than those defined in the agreement which was initialed in 1977. The bases will operate under Greek command and the Greek side will be regularly briefed on U.S. activities.

Finally it was learned that Greek-U.S. negotiations will be held between teams of experts from both sides. For this reason it is expected that three experts will arrive from Washington, two of whom had participated in the 1975-77 negotiations.

Editorial on Proposed Agreement

ATO11607 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 1 Nov 80 p 5

[Editorial: "Conditions and Limits"]

[Text] Following our country's return to the Atlantic alliance's military wing, ministry-level negotiations began between Greece and the United States on the settlement of the foreign bases' status in our country--a settlement which, when and if decided upon, will take the form of a Greek-U.S. defense agreement.

According to press reports, the relevant negotiations are expected to be rather tiring and slow-moving despite the Greek Government's intention to proceed at a fast clip with the settlement of this outstanding issue. This will happen because, as can be seen from press reports, some divergence of views and aims exists between the two sides in this initial stage; specifically, the Greek side has reservations regarding the plan that was presented by the U.S. side.

We know about neither the content of the U.S. proposals or the counterproposals which the Greek side intends to submit. Consequently, we cannot express specific opinions. However, we feel the need to make some basic ascertainments and express certain general thoughts on all the problems of the issue.

Naturally these problems are an organic part of the entire defense problem of the Greek area. It is well known from where the direct designs against this area emanate. Both the kinds and extent of the designs as well as the agent for them remain unchanged. Consequently--as we also noted a few days ago--the list of priorities regarding the dangers and needs which Hellenism is confronting remains unchanged.

This list of priorities cannot but be one of the main yardsticks for the settlement that will be finally agreed upon. Of course nobody doubts that the status of the foreign bases, the conditions for their operation, and the rights of the users will be such that the slightest possible "side effect" from their use on the defense and security of Greece (and of Hellenism, more generally) both in peacetime and--even more--in time of crisis will be precluded. We hope we are making ourselves clear.

Furthermore, the status of the bases should be such that Greece should be able to undertake their full control or deny their use to the...contracting party in case interests that are vital or of great significance to Hellenism demand it.

The problems extend to the role and destiny of the bases. Recent published reports have said that the U.S. side desires an expanded role and framework for use of the bases beyond the geographical limits and defense aims of the Atlantic alliance, that is, in conjunction with developments in the Middle East and central and south Asia and with U.S. aims in those places. We do not know if and to what extent these reports are true. What we do know is that the mission of the bases cannot, in any case, exceed the geographical limits and conventional defense aims of the Atlantic alliance or harm or oppose in any way, directly or indirectly, Greece's specific and special interests.

Greece cannot permit any, even an indirect (that is, by the use of bases on its soil) involvement in confrontations and clashes of forces and interests of international importance and scale, when these are--and they are--irrelevant to the specific interests of our country and exceed our country's "range". After all, Turkey also--wisely--restricted the role of foreign bases on its soil to such limits.

Finally, it is superfluous to stress--because it is evident and has already been reported--that the new status of the bases will not contain any of those elements of the past which demeaned our country's national sovereignty and dignity and which resulted from situations and mentalities that have finally been eliminated and whose revival would not only be unacceptable at present but objectively impossible. The past forms of dependence and subjugation, especially after the painful experiences of the last 15 years, have finally disappeared just as their objective and subjective denominators have disappeared or have completely changed.

Therefore, a few words to the wise....

ELEVTHEROTIPIA REPORTS NEW DEMANDS ON OPERATION OF BASES

AT311534 Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 31 Oct 80 p 4

[From the "Views" column: "The Bases and the Demands"]

[Text] Despite recent government denials, difficult Greek-U.S. meetings and negotiations on the bases issue have begun. The meeting the day before yesterday between the secretary general of the Foreign Ministry and the U.S. ambassador, which was announced officially, therefore, was not the first; there had been earlier meetings during which U.S. demands were bluntly expressed.

Responsible reports from a very authoritative source present the new U.S. demands as follows: The first demand is expansion of the responsibilities of the bases. On the basis of the old agreement the principal role of the bases was only to cover the needs of the NATO area of responsibility.

Now the Americans want to expand the responsibilities of their bases on Greek soil in the direction of the Persian Gulf and the Horn of Africa. They even express the specific demand for the right to ferry across their troops to these controversial areas through their bases on Greek soil--which are ultimately expected to number four.

There is also a third, equally tough condition whose implementation the Americans adamantly insist upon: Not only do they not accept a reduction in the number of Americans serving on the bases but, on the contrary, seek to significantly increase their number.

With these three expressed demands the Americans seek to increase the activities of the bases and turn them into strong supports for their aims in the Persian Gulf and Horn of Africa.

However, in this case what will remain of the much-touted multidimensional, friendly, peace-loving government policy toward all countries of the East and West which New Democracy has declared during the 6 years it has governed the country?

If a return to NATO is considered necessary for our defense protection (Papandreou clearly noted in the chamber what kind of protection would be provided by alliances against a nuclear calamity....) in no case can the same be said about the concession of strategic bases to one of the superpowers.

In addition to other things, the ceding of bases means the ceding of national soil on which foreigners can situate themselves in a manner that does not require accounting or control.

Do not let the government tell us that joint command of the bases by a Greek officer (which according to our reports is envisaged in the new agreement) constitutes a control safety valve because this will never happen in an area in which foreigners have everything in their hands and operate the equipment of the bases.

Mitsotakis Seeks Oil Supplies

AT011459 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 1 Nov 80 p 1

[Excerpt] Yesterday Foreign Minister K. Mitsotakis stated that uneasiness is not justified regarding adequate oil supplies for next year. He added that, on the average, there are guaranteed reserves for a longer period than in other countries.

Yesterday Mitsotakis discussed oil supplies with his Norwegian counterpart, Frydenlund, who has been visiting out country since yesterday.

At the political office yesterday, the Norwegian minister visited Prime Minister Y. Rallis who again raised with him the issue of oil supplies from the North Sea.

In a letter sent last year by the minister of coordination, Greece asked for 2 million tons of crude oil. Frydenlund replied that his government is studying the issue. North Sea oil is of the same good quality as Libyan oil, and the government has stated that it must use it in the capital area within the framework of its policy on protection of the monuments.

SECURITY COUNCIL SECRETARY SALTIK HOLDS PRESS CONFERENCE

Steps to Establish Democracy

TA011034 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1200 GMT 1 Nov 80

[Text] National Security Council Secretary General Gen Haydar Saltik has said that the new constitution will be prepared by the constituent assembly and will be presented to the people in a referendum. General Saltik said that party activities will be resumed after new parties are established in accordance with the new constitution and the political parties law, that general elections will be held in accordance with the new election law and that the parliament will begin its activities and that there will be a complete return to normal democratic political life.

Many Turkish and foreign correspondents attended the news conference General Saltik held in Ankara this morning. In his statement, General Saltik also gave information on the goals of the 12 September operation. He said: The reasons for and goals of the 12 September operation were announced to the Turkish and world public and the first section of law No 2324 deals with the reasons for and goals of this operation. The aims to be pursued with an unwavering determination by the Turkish Armed Forces that fully seized the administration--acting from a sense of historic duty and on behalf of the Turkish nation--within the framework of the chain of order and command are to defend the existence and independence of the Turkish state, to secure the integrity of the country and the nation, to secure the unity and solidarity of the Turkish people, to prevent destructive and divisive trends, to ensure the prevalence of Ataturkist views in the administration of the country and to restore the state authority which has been damaged and even eliminated. Constitutional measures to be taken to achieve these goals will be discussed before the public after the establishment of the constituent assembly. Tendencies and preferences will appear during the preparation and discussion of the new constitution of a democratic state of law at the constituent assembly and will be formed when the new constitution is submitted to a referendum.

Saltik summarized the guidelines of the program for a transition to a normal democratic system as follows: Securing the preconditions that will enable the establishment of a constituent assembly: the approval of the law that will be prepared as a supplement to law No 2324 dealing with the establishment, duties and authorities of the constituent assembly; the actual establishment of the constituent assembly; the assembly's commencement of activities and its preparation of a new constitution; the submission of the new constitution to the people with a referendum law and its approval; the preparation of a new political parties law and a new election law in accordance with the provisions of the new constitution approved by the people and their approval by the constituent assembly; the resumption of party activities taking into consideration the time needed to form and organize new parties in accordance with the new constitution and the new political parties law; the establishment of the parliament and the start of its activities following the general elections to be held in accordance with the new election law at the end of the suitable period which was mentioned; a full return to normal democratic political life after the existence and duties of the National Security Council and the constituent assembly have ended in accordance with the temporary provisions of the constitution. It is obvious that at this point it is impossible to fix exact dates for the phases described in this program.

General Saltik said that no void can give rise to hesitations regarding the duties and authority of the Constitutional Court and the Council of State.

Noting that laws not eliminated by the constitutional order law are fully in effect, Saltik ended by saying: Those who observe and understand the activities being carried out to establish and secure the functioning of the free democratic system, greatly favored by and inalienable to our people, will sooner or later appreciate the 12 September operation if they have no enmity toward the Turkish nation and the free democratic system. Efforts by the National Security Council to restore, as soon as possible, the state authority which had been destroyed, cannot be interpreted as moves to limit freedoms. The goals of the 12 September operation are clear and these goals will definitely be attained. The operation is advancing toward its goals through positive developments.

No doubt, a certain amount of time is needed to attain these goals. This time period can be shortened through positive contributions and efforts by the Turkish press which forms public opinion.

Steps To Form Constitution

TA011714 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 1 Nov 80

[Excerpts] Many Turkish and foreign correspondents attended the news conference General Saltik held today in Ankara. In his statement, General Saltik recalled that the legal basis for the 12 September operation was announced in communique No 1 issued on the first day of the operation and that the law on the constitutional order brought a complete clarification to the legal regulations. Pointing out that in his statement on 16 September, the head of state announced that as soon as the circumstances of the country would permit it a constituent assembly would be established, that a new constitution, a new political parties law and a new election law would be prepared by the assembly, General Saltik said that statements made on other occasions had left no doubt on that subject.

General Saltik later said: Under the present circumstances, our country has not yet reached the stage of establishing a constituent assembly. The approval of a law dealing with the establishment, duties and authority of the constituent assembly will solve all problems connected with this issue. General Saltik recalled that it had taken 7 months for a constituent assembly to be established following 27 May 1960 [military coup].

Noting that there were some questions on whether the law on constitutional order would be amended in the future and in what manner this would be carried out, Gen Saltik said: With communique No 4 issued on the first day of the operation, the composition of the National Security Council was made public, and with the law on constitutional order which took effect beginning 12 September, the rights and authority of the National Security Council were stated. The use of another method to exercise the legislative powers of the Council is out of the question. The legislative power to be used by the National Security Council for a transitional period is only natural and obligatory and in accordance with article 155 of the 1961 Constitution, which stipulates the right to amend the constitution. The article stipulates that such amendments are to be effected by law and that this right would be exercised in accordance with democratic requirements and goals.

Referring to the manner in which the new constitution will be prepared and what kind of system it will bring and what principles it would contain, General Saltik said: The reasons for and goals of the 12 September operation were announced to the Turkish and world public and were included in the introduction of the law on constitutional law.

The aims to be pursued with an unwavering determination by the Turkish Armed Forces that fully seized the administration--acting from a sense of historic duty and on behalf of the Turkish nation--within the framework of the chain of command and of order are to defend the existence and independence of the Turkish state, secure the integrity of the country and the nation, to secure the unity and solidarity of the Turkish people, prevent destructive and divisive trends, ensure the prevalence of Ataturkist views in the administration of the country and restore the state authority which has been damaged and even eliminated. Constitutional measures to be taken to achieve these goals will be discussed before the public after the establishment of the constituent assembly. During the preparation and discussion of the new constitution, tendencies toward and preferences for a democratic state of law at the constituent assembly will appear. They will also be formed when the new constitution is submitted to a referendum.

Speaking on the issue of how political activities would be conducted, General Saltik said: Various answers can be given to questions raised on this or similar subjects, taking into consideration and assessing incidents that preceded 12 September. However, the National Security Council does not desire to prejudice the probable content of the new constitution--to be urgently discussed by the constituent assembly as soon as it is established--and the law of political parties and the election law to be prepared as soon as the new constitution is ratified in a public referendum.

Pointing out that there were also questions on the issue of legislation passed in the wake of the 12 September operation once the new constitution takes effect and on whether the laws enacted then could be considered unconstitutional, General Saltik said: It might be necessary to include some provisional laws and regulations in a new constitution. Questions raised on this subject will be answered in the new constitution to be prepared by the constituent assembly and to be presented to the public in a referendum. Laws enacted in the wake of the 12 September operation which were not earmarked as provisional will also be valid in the future. In fact, laws enacted by the National Security Council are not provisional laws--legislation enacted during a provisional period. The legislative powers which the National Security Council is exercising, according to the law on constitutional order, until the constituent assembly is formed will be exercised after the assembly is actually established and begins functioning within the framework of the law that will stipulate its functions. During the period preceeding the establishment of the grand national assembly through elections--which will take place after the new constitution is approved in a public referendum--legislative powers will be exercised in accordance with provisional articles which will be included in the new constitution as I have already indicated.

General Saltik summarized the guidelines of the program for a transition to normal democratic system as follows: ensuring the preconditions that will permit the establishment of the constituent assembly; the ratification of legislation--to be annexed to the law on constitutional order--concerning the establishment, duties and authority of the constituent assembly; the actual establishment of the constituent assembly; the assembly's commencement of activities and its urgent preparation of a new constitution; the submission of the new constitution to the people through a referendum and its approval; the preparation of a new political parties law and a new election law in accordance with the provisions of the new constitution approved by the people and their approval by the constituent assembly; the resumption of party activities taking into consideration the time needed to form and organize new parties in accordance with the new constitution and the new political parties laws; the establishment of the parliament and its commencement of activities following the general elections to be held in accordance with the new election law at the end of the suitable period which I have mentioned; a full return to normal democratic political life after the existence of the National Security Council and the constituent assembly and their duties have ended in accordance with the temporary provisions of the constitution. Obviously, at this point it is impossible to fix exact dates for the phases described in this program.

In reply to questions of whether work being carried out by the National Security Council could be compared to that of a parliament and whether a presidential system was being used while exercising legislative power, General Saltik said: As is well known by the public, the Natioal Security Council has been established as the natural outcome of the action of the Turkish Armed Forces that fully seized the administration--acting from a sense of historic duty and on behalf of the Turkish nation--within the framework of the chain of command and of order. Its members were made public in communication No 4 released on the first day of the operation. The fact that the Council has been obliged to act as a legislative power is not a reason for comparing it to a parliament. Within the National Security Council there are no members of parliament either affiliated with a political party or not. There are no political parties or party groups. Therefore, it is out of question to allege that the Council is acting with a presidential system in its establishment and use of legislative powers or its judicial setup, or that its legislative work is like that of a parliament. The Council is the responsible organ of the 12 September operation and its work will be undertaken in accordance with its constitution, tasks and responsibilities.

Referring to the subject of what the duties and authority of the Constitutional Court and the State Council are today, General Saltik said: Both the Constitutional Court and the State Council have been established in accordance with the 1961 Constitution and other legislation regulating its internal rules and regulations. As was made clear in the introduction and provisions of the law on constitutional order in effect since 12 September, all laws that have not been amended or abolished are fully in effect. As a result, no void can give rise to hesitations with regard to the duties and authority of the Constitutional Court or the State Council. General Saltik added that it was only natural that appointments will be made by the Council when necessary to the vacancies existing in the Constitutional Court.

Recalling that the circumstances and conditions that led to the 12 September operation were stated once more in the introduction to the law on constitutional order, General Saltik said the following in the last part of his statement: I am firmly convinced that doubts felt in certain foreign circles because of an insufficient understanding of the circumstances prevailing in our country will dissipate as it becomes evident that the 12 September operation is progressing toward its noble goal without any tribulations.

VTCP REPORTS ON ECEVIT RESIGNATION STATEMENT

TA010733 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 1 Nov 80

[Excerpts] Bulent Ecevit has been forced to resign from the RPP leadership. Initially, the junta banned the release of part of Ecevit's resignation statement and then decided to ban the entire statement. On Thursday, Ecevit announced his compulsory resignation from the leadership of the RPP, whose activities were suspended by communique No 1 issued by the pro-American junta that seized power following the 12 September military coup. Ecevit explained the reasons for his resignation in a written statement.

Dear listeners, We are now reading to you that section of the statement banned by the junta:

"The RPP derives its strength not from individuals but from the principles of its founder, lofty Ataturk, from its history that has merged with the republic and democracy, and from the people to whose service the RPP has dedicated itself. After my resignation from the RPP leadership, I shall continue to consider as the most valuable duty working a lifetime for the continuation of the republic and the firm establishment of democracy in light of Ataturk principles and for the freedom and happiness of the Turkish people."

In his written statement sent to various news agencies, Ecevit explained the reasons for his resignation as being the ban on all party activities and therefore the impossibility of fulfilling his duties as party leader. Ecevit said: It seems my departure will be compulsory. I consider it more useful to do so now. Observers believe that the real reason for his resignation is revealed by these statements and especially by the word "compulsory." Observers also say that with these words Ecevit referred to the statement issued by the junta Secretariat General on Wednesday.

VOTCP CALLS FOR UNITED EFFORT AGAINST JUNTA

TA010912 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 1 Nov 80

[Station commentary: "The Junta's Democracy Mask Has Fallen, the Aim Is To Topple the Junta"]

[Excerpts] Reaction against the junta is increasing. The resignation of RPP leader Ecevit is a direct reaction against the junta generals. This is not an ordinary resignation but, as pointed out in Ecevit's resignation statement, an act of protest against the bayonetted pressure of the junta. The junta generals have taken a new turn since 12 September. The junta has now abandoned its promises for a return to democracy and has announced its dictatorship. Despite its promises for a return to democracy, the junta from the start paved its way toward dictatorship. One by one it removed all the obstacles in its way. First, it closed down class unions and democratic mass organizations in the name of the struggle against terrorism. It launched an extensive attack against the working class. There were mass arrests of the most ardent defenders of democracy and independence, communists, socialists, democrats and real patriots. The junta initiated an extensive intimidation operation against the Kurdish people. This was followed by the arrest of NSP members who underwent equal treatment with NAP members. Various circles, who were under the illusion that they would make the junta generals return to democracy, tolerated these developments. They were deceived by the temporary mask of democracy worn by the junta. However, not closing down the Constitutional Court and the Council of State promises for a temporary constitution and a constituent assembly and the formation of a so-called government were all part of the junta plan to divide the democratic forces.

Despite all efforts to conceal it, the real face of the junta has been revealed. This pro-American NATOite junta is against our people, primarily against the working class and all democratic forces, our national independence and our sovereignty. The junta is in the service of imperialism and the collaborationist monopolist bourgeoisie. Recent developments have proved TCP views to be true. It is now clear that democracy can not be restored without the overthrow of the junta. The junta is the archenemy of all forces in favor of democracy. The recent developments, the attack launched against the RPP and the JP leaders, the threats and blackmail used by the junta in reaction to Ecevit's statement to the effect that he will continue to struggle for the firm establishment of democracy and the freedom of the Turkish people, and attempts to make political parties an extension of the junta through the political parties law to be enacted prove that the junta is consolidating its military dictatorship. U.S. imperialism—which has activated the junta generals—is openely supporting this process of consolidation. Citizens whose parties may be dismantled, RPP and NSP members, Kemalists, religious patriots and patriots within the armed forces: Do not be deceived by the junta plots aimed at dividing the democratic forces. Unite against the junta. Listen to the voice of the Communists, Turkish and Kurdish toilers, Kurdish democrats and patriots; this is the day to unite against the junta. Democratic patriotic intellectuals: Do not tolerate junta pressure and terror, stand by the working class, cooperate with the Communists. All progressive, patriotic, democratic citizens; unite for democracy and independence against the junta generals. [word indistinct] Workers and toilers: victory depends upon your capacity to struggle and your ability to unite all democratic forces. The TCP will always be in the front lines of this struggle. The junta will be toppled and democracy will be restored.

BACKGROUND TO DEBATE ON DEFENSE BUDGET INCREASE

DW031450 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 1 Nov 80 pp 1,2
[Report by Bonn correspondent FY]

[Text] Bonn, 31 October--The federal chancellor is not in a position to fulfill his promise given to NATO with regard to annually increasing the Federal Republic's defense expenditures by a real 3 percent until 1986. Schmidt had agreed to a corresponding suggestion by President Carter in the course of the NATO summit meeting on 30 and 31 May 1978, promising the appropriate German defense efforts. It has been learned in Bonn on Friday that it turned out in the coalition negotiations between the SPD and the FDP Wednesday night on security and defense policies that the Federal Government will not keep its promise. That will have an effect not only on the Bundeswehr, which will have to reckon with considerable cuts and delays with regard to already ordered arms, but it is also obvious that this will directly influence German-American relations.

Shortly after the 5 October Bundestag elections, U.S. Secretary of State Muskie told Foreign Minister Genscher in a letter that the U.S. Government as before relies on the fulfillment of the German commitment to an annual real 3 percent growth in defense efforts, and that it is taking this into consideration with regard to its own security policy. Because of this letter it is inevitable that this issue will be a main subject of the talks the federal chancellor and the foreign minister are expected to hold in Washington on 19 and 20 November.

The issues to be discussed between U.S. Ambassador Stoessel and Defense Minister Apel on Tuesday indicate how much the Federal Republic's restraint on fulfilling the 3 percent commitment will touch on German-American relations as well American policy. It has been learned that among the subjects will be not only the American demand for an improvement and expansion of the "host nation supports," that is the Federal Republic making available a sufficient infrastructure for the American troops in Germany, but also other costly issues.

Of particular importance is the wish that the installations made available to the U.S. Army in the Federal Republic be developed and expanded in such a way that they could serve the U.S. forces as a stopover and as a basis for the transport of greater units to other regions, particularly to the Middle East. The fact that the U.S. Government voiced these demands in bilateral contacts with the Federal Government instead of in the framework of NATO Council meetings indicates that these are expenditures which are not necessarily identical with measures falling under the NATO treaty.

It has been heard that the U.S. Government simultaneously is also trying to achieve corresponding commitments by Great Britain in bilateral contacts. The U.S. establishment of bilateral contacts with Bonn and London in this matter that is so important for Washington indicates the special significance attributed by American policy to these two states in contrast to the other European Community states such as Denmark, the Netherlands and Belgium. It simultaneously shows the high politial importance the implementation of the 3 percent commitment by Bonn may have for German-American relations.

The cancellation of the commitment will have serious consequences for the Bundeswehr and its equipment with new arms. This holds true even more since it is still unknown whether next year's defense budget will have even a nominal increase to offset at least some part of the inflation rate. According to this information, Finance Minister Matthoefer indicated his intention in the coalition negotiations to leave next year's defense budget nominally at the same level as this year, that is some DM34 billion.

In view of an expected inflation rate of more than 3 percent next year, this is tantamount to a real cut in the defense budget by the level of the inflation rate. It was argued in the course of the negotiations that this intention is unrealistic and that it would lead to a supplementary budget because of the undeniable financial necessities. No decision was made with regard to the suggestion to anticipate that by increasing next year's defense budget by DM600 million.

It was learned that the discussion of problems pertaining to the field of defense has created a very depressed mood because financial problems are creating great difficulties in the light of the decided refusal to keep the 3 percent promise. It has been heard that the impression has been created among the participants that the Defense Ministry would not be in a position at present to solve the thus created problems by itself. This was also seen by the fact that setting up a body of parliamentarians, government members and independent experts has been considered. It would have the task of examining possibilities to change the structure of the armed forces in order to economize. A decision on this suggestion as well as on the size of the defense budget was postponed. One thing was clear, however: An increase of defense expenditures by a real 3 percent was not seriously discussed in the talks.

It is known in the relevant circles that without an increase of the defense budget the already ordered arms systems and other Bundeswehr orders cannot be paid for in the envisaged periods of time. In order to avoid a Bundeswehr insolvency, either additional means--they would exist if the 3 percent commitment were fulfilled--or considerable reductions of ordered arms systems are necessary. It has been learned in Bonn after a discussion of defense and security problems in the coalition round that a cut of the "Leopard II" tank program has particulary been considered. According to present planning, some 1,800 of this new arms system were to be introduced in the next years in the Bundeswehr to replace the several decades-old and technologically antiquated American M-48 tanks. Definite decisions on the cuts the Bundeswehr has to make to comply with its financial restrictions will be made in internal Defense Ministry talks slated by Defense Minister Apel for 19 November.

Coalition Dispute Alleged

DW031453 Hamburg DER SPIEGEL in German 3 Nov 80 pp 21-22

[Text] Defense Minister Apel has threatened twice to resign, involved are money and responsibilities.

Hans-Dietrich Genscher tried to mediate: "He just wants to help you, Mr Apel." But the defense minister, in a bad mood, remained stubborn.

He said in last Thursday's coalition negotiation in the chancellor's office that he would object to every attempt to curtail his responsibility. He and his experts--and nobody else--will decide in a closed session in the near future on the structure and arms of the Bundeswehr in the eighties.

Only once when Helmut Schmidt and Genscher made a compromise suggestion, did Apel give in reluctantly: as demanded by the FDP (SPIEGEL 44/1980), the cabinet will form early next year a commission of experts to discuss--independent of the Defense Ministry--alternative models for the organization and armament of the West German Armed Forces in the next decades. Ministers, deputies, military, finance and armament experts will belong to the body.

That compromise eliminated for the time being Apel's second threat to resign. The minister had uttered the first threat prior to the beginning of the coalition negotiations when he had learned about the curtailment suggestions of his finance colleagues.

Without informing Apel beforehand, Hans Matthoefer had not exempted the Defense Ministry from his austerity suggestions. After subtraction of an inflation rate of 3 to 4 percent, only a meager 0.2 percent emerged for the Defense Ministry. Apel said to his aides: "Then I will resign."

But Schmidt and Genscher quickly agreed that the radical cure ordered by Matthoefer could hardly be accepted politically. The government chief personally had committed himself in May 1978 at the NATO summit in Washington vis-a-vis President Jimmy Carter to increase defense expenditures annually by a real 3 percent.

But in the meantime this is by far not enough for the Americans anymore. On Tuesday of this week U.S. Ambassador Walter Stoessel wants to present new demands to the defense minister. The Germans are supposed to pay billions for the development of barracks and supply depots for those U.S. Armed Forces which will be flown from the United States to Europe in an emergency.

The coalition round maintained that because of domestic politics, too, Matthoefer's rigorous program of cuts could be hardly implemented. First, experience shows that the voters' demand for security increases if the East-West climate deteriorates. Second, the Bundeswehr top echelon does not know even now how it should pay for the arms ordered in past years, amounting to a total of more than DM55 billion. Matters look worse than George Leber predicted shortly before his resignation: "My successor can just pay for what I have ordered."

The minus figures Apel presented to the illustrious round were so depressing that Genscher formulated the following most undiplomatically: "The situation is shitty [beschissen]." The explosion of costs with regard to the multipurpose bomber Tornado, the F-122 frigate and the tanks has overthrown all calculations made so far.

The chief liberal did not want to accept Schmidt's and Apel's handling of the past. Whether this dilemma has been caused by Leber or Apel—it is a fact that the Defense Ministry has been headed by the Social Democrats since 1969, it does not help to lament now that the Hardthoehe ministry cannot be ruled.

Despite all arithmetical tricks the negotiators did not come up with a solution of the bungled situation. Top SPD and FDP politicaians agree that because of the budget situation a real 3 percent more cannot be spent on the 1981 defense budget, but still ought to be somewhat more than suggested by Matthoefer.

But that means trouble not merely with the Americans, who want to make their allies pay up considerably after the presidential elections. Carter as well as the advisers of his adversary Ronald Reagan have threatened repeatedly in past weeks that the United States would withdraw troops from Europe if the Europeans do not fulfill their commitments.

Apel maintains that only a small increase of the defense budget means that the Bundeswehr would "have to make do without many things." There will be neither a new fighter plane, nor a German-French tank, and the already ordered planes, tanks and ships would be given to the troops more slowly than planned.

The coalition round decided that the individual handling of this should be negotiated by the finance and the defense ministers. That means, however, that the next conflict has been already programmed in advance. Matthoefer and Apel hate each other like poison, not merely because the chancellor has treated them in public as suitable successors—next to Minister of Justice Hans Vogel. Matthoefer has been out for quite some time to pay back to his adversary and predecessor the negligent treatment he has given him.

When Research Minister Matthoefer once approached Finance Minister Apel with a request for a budget increase, the latter dismissed him with the following words: "Good day Hans, there will be no money. If you want to talk, go to your therapist."

GOVERNMENT DISAGREES WITH BRANDT PROPOSAL ON ENVOY TOGDR

[Excerpts] Bonn, 2 Nov (DPA)--The Federal Government today made it clear that it does not agree with the proposal made by SPD Chairman Willy Brandt that the post of Bonn's permanent representative in East Berlin not be occupied for the time being after Guenter Gaus' forthcoming departure. With reference to the Brandt proposal SED chief Erich Honecker said that the GDR could not be blackmailed. According to an AUSTRIAN PRESS AGENCY (APA) report, Honecker said in an interview with Austrian journalists in East Berlin on Monday that he did not believe that folly would triumph in Bonn. The GDR head of state went on to say that he continued to adhere in principle to a meeting with Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt. He had regretted the calling off of the visit at short notice.

Government Spokesman Klaus Boelling, speaking to the press in Bonn, recalled the statement made by the Federal Government following the increase in the minimum currency exchange requirements for Western visitors to the GDR that Bonn, for its part, did not intend responding in kind to a delimiting policy. Boelling spoke of "personal thought" by Brandt. He knew nothing of thoughts by the government about leaving the post of permanent representative unoccupied for any length of time. Boelling did not comment on reports of "irritation" in the Federal Government on account of Brandt's unexpected move, nor did he deny them. Government circles confirmed that Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and the top government leaders had failed to understand his move and had been amazed and irritated.

Brandt himself said in a Deutschlandfunk interview today with reference to his proposal that his idea had been to send the new permanent representative to his East Berlin post "with a revised program." Brandt's view, in the hardened situation between the two German states, was to create a "gap" in the changeover of the head of mission. He came out in favor of a wait-and-see attitude to the GDR in connection with its course of delimitation. He feels that what should be waited for are possible signals from Washington after the presidential election, developments in Poland and whether the Madrid CSCE followup meeting will come about at all. With some luck there will be a clearer picture in November, or one will have to state openly, as he is now doing, that one does not sufficiently know what was what.

In the opinion of CSU parliamentarian Hans Graf Huyn, SED chief Erich Honecker has indicated that he would only accept a new permanent Bonn representative as an ambassador, in order to force the Federal Government to give the GDR full international legal recognition. Government Spokesman Boelling said to this that he knew of no information that the GDR would only accept a new permanent representative as an ambassador. Boelling himself is the proposed successor to Gaus in East Berlin.

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE Comment

DW031421 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 3 Nov 80 p 1

[Commentary signed R.H.: "Brandt's Suggestions]

[Text] Brandt's suggestion has something to it at first glance, the suggestion not to fill the position of the Federal Republic's representative in East Berlin for the time being, which is an idea to retaliate the evil action of the GDR with a cool but defiant measure.

But since Brandt is the party chairman, our curiosity is awakened as to the motives and aims of that gesture. Is something to be repaired here after a more accurate analysis of the 5 October results?

Although one ought to forget the past election campaign as soon as possible, attention should be given to one experience. Soon after the Afghanistan crisis it looked as if world politics had entered a new state: Below the confrontation level of the two giants which became evident in its full rigidity again, it seemed that some states had achieved some freedom of movement as medium-size powers. Aside from France, they were particularly the Federal Republic of Germany and the GDR. The diplomats were surprised that there were more and more Eastern contacts offers, and Honecker's smiles in Belgrade were interpreted by journalists as a promising sign. Despite the thunderstorm between the West and the East, it seemed that the GDR had a special license to exchange as much friendliness as possible with the Federal Republic.

The events in Poland, however, prematurely have torn away that veil of illusions, but only after the Budestag elections has the whole volume of th East's decptive maneuver become clear. The indication turned out to be a fata morgana, namely that two "medium powers" could create good weather in central Europe below the level of the world political situation and despite the ideological enmity, a fata morgana arranged on the highest level in order to influence the elections in the Federal Republic. We do not want to state that everybody fell for it blindly, but one was to profit from the effects, and so far it seems obvious that a man who is considered a symbol of confidence in detente now is pondering dissociation.

But the means seems dubious: Why should we--although having a foot in the door with the permanent representative of the Federal Republic--renounce that position emotionally, thus complying with the wishes of the GDR leadership, than much rather coolly look after our interests of the spot, as Boelling plans to do?

DER SPIEGEL: GENSCHER CRITICAL OF SCHMIDT GERMAN POLICY

DW031451 Hamburg DER SPIEGEL in German 3 Nov 80 pp 25-27

[Text] Foreign Minister Genscher charges that the federal chancellor is not fully in control of German policy.

Vice Chancellor Hans-Dietrich Genscher criticized the government chief and his office in an unusually hard way. The FDP chairman was bitching in a confidential talk with party friends that he was doubting whether inter-German policy was in good hands in the chancellor's office. Grave mistakes have been made at least with regard to "handling" the matter.

The Free Democrat's criticism is less aimed at State Minister Gunter Huonker, who for just 1 year is responsible for German policy in government headquarters. With his criticism Genscher means much rather Helmut Schmidt for not following a clear line.

Genscher even said that Bonn's wrong action is also responsible for the GDR's rash return to its delimitation policy. He said that he was under the impression--after contacts with high-ranking Soviet partners--that the Moscow leaderership did not press East Berlin to dramatically increase the mandatory exchange rates for Western visitors and also to step up agitation against Bonn. The foreign minister maintained, however, that the action of the Federal Government exerted influence on the GDR leadership's change of course.

Genscher believes that one of the reasons for the hardening is the way Schmidt's visit to SED chief Honecker was canceled in August. It was not very skillful to justify the cancellation internally by saying, among other things, that the GDR had scratched a stroll Schmidt wanted to make through Rostock.

Similar reproaches had been cabled to the chancellor's office by Guenter Gaus, Bonn's permanent representative in East Berlin. On 5 September he sent a secret telegram warning against forthcoming hardening.

Gaus also held the chancellor's office in part responsible for the development. There was too petty quarreling on protocol matters in negotiations prior to the Schmidt visit. Instead of meeting the prestige-greedy GDR halfways, Bonn's negotiators had eventually haggled about the number of "white mice" [policemen on motorcycles]. East Berlin wanted to provide an escort of 13 police motorcycles, Bonn insited on 11.

According to Baus' report, Honecker was particularly irritated by Bonn's official justification of the postponement of Schmidt's visit.

News was passed by the chancellor's office that the SED chief has been relieved by the cancellation because of the unrest in Poland. Egon Franke, minister for German affairs, stated: "Just think of the endless masses of people in front of the hotel when Willy Brandt was in Erfurt. Jubilant calls such as 'Helmut, Helmut' could have the effect of a spark and cause an explosion of emotions."

In this way Honecker was made to appear as a politician who would have to reckon at any time with a revolt of the GDR populace against him. Gaus reports that the GDR statesman considered this an intentional insult and that he was accordingly irritated.

Foreign Ministry chief Genscher, who is always out to gain more control of this part of foreign relations handled by the chancellor's office, believes that the time has come for demanding more of a say: An end must be made to the interference of such outsiders in German policy as SPD faction chief Herbert Wehner and SPD Federal Manager Egon Bahr.

Genscher believes that Bahr particularly has created unfulfillable hopes in the GDR with regard to a gradual recognition of the state. Genscher's conclusion: Professionals must handle that in the future.

There is an exodus of them in the meantime. Gaus has been terminated already. Chancellor Schmidt, who was always on poor terms with his man in East Berlin, did not even consider it necessary to thank the state secretary in a personal talk for his 6 years of work in the GDR. Instead, however, Gaus received a short letter from the chancellor through his secretary, informing him that he will be replaced within a short time.

Genscher knew nothing of that letter. He had promised Gaus an important position as an ambassador by the end of next year.

Together with Gaus some more German policy experts will quit. Juergen Weichert, head of the German policy department in the Ministry for inner-German relations, will be pensioned because of his poor health. Hans-Otto Braeutigam, head of the German policy work staff in the chancellor's office, will go to the Foreign Ministry together with Gaus' deputy, Franz Bertele.

When the chancellor's close aide Klaus Boelling goes to East Berlin some time next spring, he can be certain of Genscher's critical attention. The GDR leadership is worried already that Boelling will be much more frequently than Gaus in Bonn than in Berlin--in order to take care of his close relations with Schmidt.

"The GDR can expect our man to be fully present there," criticizes a cabinet member, adding that "this is why he is called a permanent and not temporary representative."

SCHMIDT ENGINEERS 'SUCCESSFUL' COALITION PERSONNEL TALKS

DW031452 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 3 Nov 80 p 4

[Report by Bonn correspondent Klaus Dreher]

[Text] Bonn, 2 November--According to an old custom, personnel problems are discussed and decided at the end of coalition negotiations. The same will take place this time too. Since Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt does not intend to replace his ministers, and since just one new measure will take place on that level, namely the separation between the Post and Transport Ministries, more attention must be attributed to changes in other fields. It turns out that on the whole the chancellor is pursuing a rather successful personnel policy. He initiated it before the coalition partners got together for their first talk.

A "good choice"--from the chancellor's point of view--is the planned appointement of Kurt Becker as government spokesman. Schmidt has known Becker for a long time as well as his political stance. Becker will probably very quickly fulfill a function that belongs to the tasks of a government spokesman, namely not merely to announce the policy of the chancellor, but also to be involved in forming it. Since the idea seems to have been dropped in the meantime to appoint Becker only as a spokesman and leave the handling of the office to an official, he will, like his predecessors, have quite some power in his hands.

According to the present state of affairs, the FDP will have to accept that the positions of deputy spokesman and deputy chief of office will remain separated. The smaller coalition partner has always stood in a losing position (in governments together with the CDU/CSU as well) when placing people of confidence in the Federal Press and Information Office has been involved. This position--one may consider it a structural failure--is one-sidedly oriented toward the chancellor. Klaus Boelling was also mainly the mouthpiece of Chancellor Schmidt. At the coalition talks 4 years ago, the FDP wanted to install a third spokesman. When it did not succeed, it confined itself to the appointment of Gerhard Liebrecht as deputy office chief. This division did not produce much propagandistically for the FDP, but now it will be probably unable to change it out of its own interest.

Schmidt seems to return more than his predecessors to the old routine of Konrad Adenauer, consisting in more frequent changes in order to strengthen the influence exerted by the chancellor. The recipe is simple: People who have stood their test in the vicinity of the chancellor will be placed in other positions; talents of the department will be attached to the chancellor's office. Boelling is a man from the chancellor's closest circle; when he goes to East Berlin, he will still have the ear of the chancellor. Manfred Schueler, the chief of the chancellor's office, will become executive board spokesman of the Credit Institution for Reconstruction; he will be replaced by Manfred Lahnstein, the state secretary of the Finance Ministry, an excellent expert for the chancellor's office.

Lahnstein in turn will be replaced by Horst Schulmann, one of the closest advisers of the government chief. Adding the candidacy of "Schmidt's close aide" Hans-Juergen Wischnewski for the post of deputy SPD faction chairman, one will arrive at the result that the chancellor skillfully puts people of his choice in key positions.

SAUDI ARABIA TO SUPPLY OIL REPLACING IRAQI CRUDE

LD031645 Paris LE MONDE in French 1 Nov 80 p 29

[Text] The negotiations between representatives of Sofracop--a subsidiary company owned jointly by Elf-Aquitaine and the Compagnie Francaise des Petroles--and those of the Saudi Arabian national company Petrochim, which have been taking place in London, entered their "final" phase on 31 October. This means that the signing of an agreement, which was initially expected to take place on 30 October, is imminent.

According to well-informed circles, Saudi Arabia is to supply an additional 100,000-150,000 barrels per day to the two French companies (in excess of the 260,000 barrels already sold daily to Sofracop by Petromin). The agreement is to be limited to the fourth quarter (this means that 1,250,000-1,875,000 tons will be involved but will be renewable if the Iran-Iraq conflict continues). Furthermore, it appears that this oil is to be sold at a price similar to that of the Iraqi crude which it would replace--a $2 increase on the prices now charged by Riyadh.

FRANCOIS-PONCET, MOROCCO'S BOUCETTA SPEAK AT 30 OCT DINNER

[Text] "Serious threats now imperil peace: in Asia where the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan has impaired the confidence on which peace rests and also in the Middle East," Foreign Minister Francois-Poncet said at a dinner for his Moroccan counterpart on Thursday, 30 October. Mr Boucetta is heading Rabat's delegation to the grand commission on Franco-Moroccan cooperation now meeting in Paris.

After recalling France's position in the Israeli-Arab and Iraqi-Iranian conflicts, Mr Francois-Poncet added: "Peace is possibly now more than ever based on dialogue and on the development of regional initiatives. It is in the patient search for a political settlement among the states concerned that we will find the solution to the Western Sahara conflict. France ardently hopes this conflict will be settled; it will not refuse to make its contribution to that solution if its help is desired and if the situation lends itself to that."

Mr Boucetta expressed Morocco's "particular appreciation" for "the initiatives which France is taking within the European Community and at the international level in the search for a just and lasting settlement in the Middle East." "We think that Europe can and should play an important role in ending an unjust and tense situation which threatens to endanger world peace at any time," he added. "Hotbeds of tension persist on the African continent," Mr Boucetta also said. "Morocco is itself the target of a real aggression which it is facing with determination and tenacity."

While paying tribute to Franco-Moroccan cooperation, Mr Boucetta stressed the "great importance" which King Hassan II attaches to the situation of Moroccan workers in France. He stated: "I will make no secret of the fact that the latest measures being contemplated by the French to gradually reduce the foreign labor force in France are worrying us greatly. We are well aware of the reasons prompting the French Government to take such steps, however, I remain convinced that thanks to our mutual political will these measures can be applied, as is customary in France, while respecting human dignity and these workers' interests."

DEFENSE MINISTER ADDRESSES MILITARY STUDIES CENTER SESSION

LD311159 Rome AVANTI in Italian 24 Oct 80 p 2

[Text] Yesterday in Rome saw the opening of the 23d session of the CASM.

CASM Chairman Admiral Marulli explained that the academic activity of the current session will center on two general topics regarding "Women's military service in Italy" and "the evolution of Italian society in the nineties and its repercussions on military organization." The introduction of women's military service, Marulli said, is a topical issue that stems from several sources and one that will have to be carefully examined and analyzed so as to reach a solution capable of reconciling the ideological and political stances and opposing tendencies apparent in public opinion with the interests of defense. As for the second topic, the CASM chairman said, on the basis of current changes and evolutionary thrusts, the study must establish guidelines for the regenerative process within the armed forces and outline organizational and behavioral standards for military society capable of providing an answer to the man of the future, because it is above all to people that we must address our attention; that is, to the factor which guarantees the survival, efficiency and vigor of our institution and enables us to maintain unaltered its characteristics as an orderly and united instrument.

Defense Chief of General Staff Admiral Torrisi confirmed in his speech the validity of the path outlined by the special laws to bridge the most pressing gaps and to regenerate the instrument, and stressed the need to carry out with commitment and determination the plans laid down in them, emphasizing that the qualifications and technical and professional standards of our operational units are in no way inferior to those of the most advanced Western countries.

Defense Minister Lelio Lagorio stressed that we are experiencing a period of evolution in international politicomilitary strategy, and that changes are taking place in the concept of security. Security for us no longer signifies Europe alone with its divisions resulting from World War II; the concept of security now embraces other issues, such as energy resources, the economic development of our own country and of neighboring and more distant countries with which we have to coexist, and the very governability of politico-industrial systems. Furthermore, we are witnessing the emergence of a new U.S. nuclear strategy aimed at establishing a balance between the opposing powers by means of a deterrent against every possible form of attack at any level.

Therefore, the debate on conventional armed forces, whose role is essential, is very necessary and topical. So as far as we are concerned, our armed forces are not an expensive and superfluous luxury, but an instrument that contributes to maintaining peace and stability in the Mediterranean to enable Italy to implement its foreign policy of detente, cooperation and collaboration at all levels and with everyone. But for this to happen, our armed forces must be "credible," an efficient military instrument that can be integrated with the allied forces and is, above all, capable of guaranteeing and defending our independence by means of adequate levels of deterrence.

O AGON REPORTS ON REACTION TO WALDHEIM'S INVITATION

NC041039 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 4 Nov 80 pp 1, 8

[Excerpt] Authoritative circles have described the UN secretary general's recent proposal for separate talks in New York--with Foreign Minister Nikos Rolandhis on 17 November and with Mr Atakol, Denktas' so-called foreign minister, on 18 November--as strange and inexplicable and as tantamount to a trap.

The same circles said they could not explain the UN secretary general's action or his motives, particularly since the climate at the talks is good and the course of the talks smooth. These circles did not rule out the possibility of the whole matter being a "misunderstanding."

The authoritative circles observed that the Turks have internationally exploited Mr Waldheim's proposal, as the proposal regarded Foreign Minister Rolandhis and Mr Atakol equally and thus raised the level of the Turkish Cypriot administration. The same circles even wondered why the invitation was not extended to the two interlocutors.

The same circles observed that the UN secretary general was wrong in linking points 5 and 6 of the Kiprianou-Denktas agreement--that is the question of "Varosh" and of the "initial practical measures"--and stressed that the summit agreement envisages that the Famagusta question be given priority and that in case of its settlement it should be implemented without waiting for the outcome of the discussion of other aspects.

According to the same circles, the UN secretary general's fresh initiative, in addition to the confusion it has caused, has served the Turkish Cypriot side which--as concluded by statements of Turkish Cypriot leaders--does not favor a separate agreement on Famagusta but rather a package solution to the Cypriot problem.

Finally, the authoritative circles did not rule out the possibility that officials of the UN General Secretariat, who are acting in Waldheim's name, are behind his proposal. President Kiprianou has briefed the island's political party leaders on the UN secretary general's proposal.

DENKTAS CRITICIZES REJECTION OF WALDHEIM INVITATION

TA031148 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1030 GMT 3 Nov 80

[Text] President Rauf Denktas said that as long as the equality of the Turkish and Greek Cypriot communities is not accepted, the Cyprus problem cannot be solved. This morning, Denktas replied to reporters' questions on progress of the intercommunal talks and on Secretary General Waldehim's invitation to the Greek and Turkish Cypriot foreign ministers to come to New York.

Denktas said the Greek Cypriot approach to the Cyprus problem was not new. Noting that the efforts exerted at the intercommunal talks were aimed at reestablishing the legitimate partnership government within the framework of the principles of the Denktas-Makarios agreement, Denktas said: Until this government is established there is no legitimate Cyprus government and there cannot be one. So long as the Greek Cypriot leadership does not share this view it will be very difficult to solve the bottlenecks no matter what proposals are brought to the negotiating table. Denktas said that the reason prompting the Greek Cypriot side to reject Waldheim's proposal--that it would bring the two communities to the same level--was not valid. He stressed that the two communities had equal political status during the establishment of the Cyprus Republic. He added that the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus will decide on the Turkish Cypriot reply to Waldehim's invitation.

In reply to a question on his visit to the border village of Akincilar [Louroutzina] yesterday, Denktas said he had learned that the villagers intended to send a letter to Waldheim about press reports that the village would be given to the Greek Cypriots as a territorial concession. Denktas said: There is no need to worry. When we reach the point of solving the Cyprus problem and when border adjustments begin to be discussed, we will let our people know what we are discussing and what we intend to do. Our people's reaction will be taken into consideration. However, under no circumstances will 400-year-old Turkish villages be affected.

The defendants include ex-premier and Justice Party leader Suleyman Demirel in one lawsuit, another ex-premier and Republican People's Party leader Bulent Ecevit in four lawsuits.

Nationalist Action Party leader Alpaslan Turkes will be tried on charges of having violated article 159/1 of the penal code, which punishes insults to the moral entity of the state and republic or to members of the government.

Other ex-parliamentarians who will be tried under the same charges are: Ali Yilmaz, Tahsin Onadim, Adem Ali Sarioglu, Ihsan Ataov, Mustafa Basoglu of the Justice Party; Deniz Baykal, Akin Simav, and Hayri Oner of RPP, Sadi Somoncuoglu of NAP. The defendants will be tried before criminal courts.

Several other former members of parliament, mostly JP members, but also NAP, NSP and RPP members among them, will appear before other criminal courts for misdemeanors ranging from violation of the law on rallies and demonstration marches to abuse of one's official functions.

Ex-senator from the president's quota and former chairman of the Turkish Confederation of Labor Halil Tunc will appear before a criminal court for violating articles 311 and 312 of the penal code, which refer to inciting others to crime.

Yahya Demirel

A hearing against Yahya Demirel and Haci Ali Demirel, nephew and brother of Suleyman Demirel, was held at an Ankara court today, but was postponed when the defendants failed to appear. The defendants had earlier been acquitted in a trial on charges of drawing up false documents and tax evasion, but the Court of Cassation had upset the court's verdict.

IRAQI AMBASSADOR INTERVIEWED ON BILATERAL RELATIONS

NC041005 Istanbul CUMHURIYET in Turkish 1 Nov 80 p 3

[Text] Ankara (CUMHURIYET News Bureau)--Iraqi Ambassador to Ankara Taha Aziz Hasan has answered the following questions put to him by CUMHURIYET:

Question: How do you view Turkish-Iraqi relations?
Answer: Turkish-Iraqi relations are currently experiencing their most positive era. These relations are not surprising; they have their source in history. Mutual understanding prevails in our relations. We have common interests. Both sides are trying to preserve this situation. We are trying to raise relations, which have already reached an advanced stage in every field, to the highest level. We would like our relations with Turkey to be an example for our relations with other countries in the region. Moreover, Honorable Head of State Gen Kenan Evren and our Head of State Saddam Husayn are personal friends, a fact to which both of them attach importance. Some outside circles are trying to upset this relationship, but no one will be able to.

Question: What is the position of economic and commercial relations while Iraq is in a state of war?
Answer: Economic and commercial relations between our countries are continuing in accordance with the agreements that were concluded earlier. Nothing new has been added to these agreements. We desire to see these relations further improved for the future.

Question: The oil pipeline does not function. How will this hitch in the dispatch of oil to Turkey be eliminated?
Answer: Turkey appreciates Iraq's present position. Iraq will spare no efforts to meet Turkey's needs when it possibly can; this is normal. The Turkish side must appreciate the reasons why the agreements cannot be fully implemented.

Question: Turkey is maintaining a neutral attitude toward the conflict between its two neighbors. How do you evaluate this neutrality?
Answer: It is normal for Turkey, which is a neighbor of both countries, to maintain such neutrality. We appreciate this fact.

OZAL ADDRESSES ISLAMIC ECONOMIC COOPERATION MEETING

TA041101 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 4 Nov 80

[Text] The Islamic countries economic cooperation meeting began in Ankara today. The meeting, which is being attended by representatives of 21 Islamic countries and 6 international organizations, was opened with a speech by State and Deputy Prime Minister Turgut Ozal.

In his speech, Ozal pointed out that Islamic countries have so far not been able to utilize their economic resources and possibilities for joint benefit. He said: We expect concrete decisions that will contribute to the strengthening of the economic cooperation among Islamic countries to be made during the meeting. Ozal noted that Islamic countries should develop their cooperation in various fields and attain a balanced rate of development during the next 10-year period.

Explaining that commercial, technical, industrial, agricultural, energy and financial issues as well as the furthering of cooperation in the field of tourism will be discussed during the Islamic countries economic cooperation meeting, Ozal added that the Islamic countries can face the problems they will encounter with the aid of close cooperation and solidarity.

Addressing the meeting after Ozal, assistant for economic affairs to the Islamic Conference Secretary General (Arifin Osman) noted that developing countries are affected most by the world economic crisis. Pointing out that industrialized countries are not sufficiently assisting the developing countries, (Osman) said that the Islamic countries can solve their economic problems through cooperation among themselves. (Osman) added that the agenda of the Islamic countries summit meeting to be held in Saudi Arabia in December will also be determined during the meeting in Ankara.

The meeting was then recessed and the representatives toured an exhibition of Turkish export products. The meeting is now continuing in camera.

The Islamic countries economic cooperation meeting is being held in accordance with a decision made during the Islamic countries foreign ministers conference held in Islamabad in May. The meeting will last 3 days.

LEADERS, PRESS REACT TO REAGAN VICTORY

Genscher Congratulations

LD051104 Hamburg DPA in German 1039 5 Nov 80

[Text] Bonn, 5 Nov (DPA)--Hans-Dietrich Genscher, FDP chairman and federal foreign minister, has congratulated Ronald Reagan on his "great election success." In a congratulatory telegram, Genscher stressed that the United States and Federal Republic are linked by close friendship and their membership in NATO. "Our policy is based on the same values which are characterized by freedom, human rights, the right to self-determination and the will for peace," he stressed.

According to their chairman, the Free Democrats are determined to continue this common policy consistently. Genscher expressed his firm belief that the close partnerlike cooperation between the United States and the Federal Republic is an indispensible prerequisite for securing peace and our independence and freedom.

Boelling Comments

LD051100 Hamburg DPA in German 0959 GMT 5 Nov 80

[Text] Bonn, 5 Nov (DPA)--The Federal Government is expecting the close and well-functioning partnership relations between the United States and the Federal Republic to continue under the new president Ronald Reagan. Government Spokesman Klaus Boelling said on Deutschlandfunk today that in his congratulatory telegram to the winner of the election, Reagan, Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt would express the desire for German-U.S. relations to be continued in just as close a partnerlike manner as under every president from the days of Konrad Adenauer to Helmut Schmidt.

In another interview on West German Radio, Boelling stressed that German-U.S. relations since Adenauer and John F. Kennedy had been determined by basic interests. The personalities of the respective presidents had naturally played a considerable part but what was important was that the Federal Republic needed its close partnership with the United States and that the United States had said, through every president since the war, that there had to be close, reliable cooperation with Europe.

On Saarland Radio, Boelling drew attention to remarks by Reagan on how important close cooperation with the European allies was to him. It was right that Reagan had adopted a critical attitude regarding the treaty on limiting nuclear weapons (SALT II). Now he must be given time, however, to reflect with his advisers on the uppermost domestic and foreign policy issues. Referring to the upcoming visit to the United States by the federal chancellor, Boelling said that he expected that the chancellor would talk with Reagan and put forward his views.

Brandt Statement

LD050948 Hamburg DPA in German 0915 GMT 5 Nov 80

[Text] Bonn, 5 Nov (DPA)--SPD Chairman Willy Brandt stated with regard to the outcome of the U.S. presidential elections that the friendly relations between the Federal Republic and United States have developed independently of changes in government. "They continue to be of outstanding importance under the new president too," he stressed.

According to Brandt, the German Social Democrats interest is concentrated mainly on whether the leaders of the two nuclear world powers, the United States and the Soviet Union, will find the strength to negotiate on realistic arms limitation. Everything might depend on this for the future of mankind.

Strauss Message

LD050952 Hamburg DPA in German 0921 GMT 5 Nov 80

[Text] Munich, 5 Nov (DPA) The Bavarian minister-president and CSU chairman, Franz Josef Strauss, has sent a telegram to the new U.S. president, Ronald Reagan, congratulating him on the U.S. voters' "demonstration of trust" which will be a source of courage, strength and confidence for Reagan. The unequivocal decision by the voters had placed on him "a high degree of world political responsibility during the most dangerous period since the end of World War II."

On the basis of their common ideas and beliefs, the nations united in the Atlantic alliance should now "draw and stand together." He and his political friends will "continue in the future to advocate this without any ifs or buts," stressed Strauss.

CDU Chairman Kohl Telegram

LD051050 Hamburg DPA in German 0942 GMT 5 Nov 80

[Text] Bonn, 5 Nov (DPA)--CDU Chairman Helmut Kohl has sent winner of the U.S. presidential elections Ronald Reagan the congratulations of his party.

In his telegram, Kohl states that "in a time of increasing threats to the free world, we Europeans are counting on the strength of your leadership, the strengthening of the Atlantic alliance and the continuing friendship between the United States and the Federal Republic." The CDU chairman gave his assurance that his party stands for friendship with the United States. Together with the new president, the CDU intends to master the challenges of the time.

SUEDKURIER Commentary

DW050858 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0605 GMT 5 Nov 80

[Press review on the election victory of presidential candidate Ronald Reagan]

[Text] Just one commentary is available so far on the presidential elections in the United States, namely by SUEDKURIER of Konstanz. The paper writes:

The surprise is complete; the 69-year-old Ronald Reagan has ousted Jimmy Carter from the White House. The same sort of thing happened 4 years ago, however, Gerald Ford, in contrast to Carter, was not in the White House as an elected president. Reagan's victory was not expected, although he had become the most dangerous adversary in the election campaign. Developments in the Tehran hostage affair obviously did not help Carter, they even hurt him. Also, Americans are extremely sensitive when they have the feeling they are exposed to external influences.

SCHMIDT REELECTED CHANCELLOR BY LOWER HOUSE

[Text] Bonn, 5 Nov (DPA) Deputy SPD Chairman Helmut Schmidt was reelected federal chancellor by 266 votes today in the second session of the new lower house.

STOESSEL HOLDS TALKS WITH APEL ON DEFENSE EFFORTS

LD041546 Hamburg DPA in German 1434 GMT 4 Nov 80

[Text] Bonn, 4 Nov (DPA)--The American ambassador to Bonn, Walter Stoessel, informed Defense Minister Hans Apel this afternoon of Washington's wish for increased German defense efforts. Stoessel had requested the meeting. Well-informed sources said that Apel had "noted" the U.S. Government's ideas. Apel apparently pointed out to Stoessel that over the past years the Federal Republic had always made a considerable contribution to Western defense. In the matter of defense Bonn stood in the "foremost rank of the allies." Apel said he would submit Washington's concepts to the Federal Cabinet, However, it is necessary to wait for the budget discussions. On 19 November, Apel will discuss plans for the future German defense budget with his closest colleagues at a closed meeting.

Following the coalition talks it is almost certain that, in view of the financial difficulties, Bonn will no longer be able to fulfill its NATO commitment to increase its defense budget by a real 3 percent. The increase is likely to be about 1.8 percent. Apel, the sources said, had only been able to prevent further defense cuts by threatening to resign. The CDU/CSU opposition and U.S. Secretary of State Edmund Muskie have already expressed concern at these developments.

APEL INTERVIEWED ON BUNDESWEHR ANNIVERSARY

DW041155 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 3 Nov 80 p 6

[Interview by editors Ulrich Mackensen and Eghard Moerbitz with Defense Minister Hans Apel, place not given]

[Excerpts] FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU [FR] The Bundeswehr is going to celebrate its 25th anniversary. Will there be a big domestic political debate on the Bundeswehr in connection with the disputes surrounding the solemn swearing-in ceremony and the like, and with the Young Socialists participating? Is that likely to cast doubts on the SPD's approach to the Bundeswehr?

Apel: We will have a big debate. I want to include relevant social and political trends in this framework, because it seems important to me to include them in an opinion-forming process on the inner structure of the Bundeswehr, on society and tradition. This will not be a debate where we will take up a defensive position; we want to discuss the matter properly. The most recent pamphlet by the Young Socialists on the 25th Bundeswehr anniversary can cast some doubts on the SPD, I do not doubt that. Therefore I expect the Federal Executive Board of our party to take a clear position with regard to the Bundeswehr and its 25th birthday, because working groups of the SPD should not voice opinions in the name of the party. The SPD must formulate opinions itself. I will make my contribution in this respect.

FR: Do you expect the SPD deputies to side with you without exception?

Apel: According to the Basic Law, the deputies are responsible only to their consciences. However, they belong to a party group, and so far it has always been the case that controversial debates take place within the party group, but then a uniform position is taken later on with regard to almost every problem. I see no reason why this should not be the case in this matter as well. It would be bad if Bundestag deputies did not criticize the defense minister as well with regard to this or that matter. Nobody is perfect, including the defense minister.

FR: In the coming years the Bundeswehr will face the problem of drafting men from generations having fewer numbers. Considerations have been voiced repeatedly about prolonging the compulsory military service time. Have these considerations entered a concrete phase?

Apel: They have not entered a concrete phase because it is much too early to handle this problem. I am not optimistic, but I hope that we can make a contribution on troop limitations in the MBFR talks with a view to the future Bundeswehr personnel shortage. The defense minister has a concrete interest not only in continuing detente policy in the military field, but in initiating developments with a view to the personnel problems 4 to 6 years from now which would make life easier for us. The problem cannot be solved only with the help of compulsory military service. A number of other measures will have to be taken. Even then we will have great problems in maintaining the present Bundeswehr strength of 495,000 men. These will be grave problems by 1986.

One thing must be made clear: We must take these facts into consideration with regard to our procurement policy involving arms systems and the development of the infrastructure. We must cope with the expected trends now, because it does not make sense to pretend that we will not have personnel problems.

FR: Do you seriously believe that concrete progress will be achieved with regard to MBFR in the next 4 or 5 years? That would be a prerequisite?

Apel: In my planning I must take into consideration the authorized strength of 495,000 men. But I do not want to rule out progress. MBFR as well as SALT are facing a crucial test. We can certainly continue to negotiate for years, and we will have to because East-West relations at the moment are at a temporary low. But forgetting about negotiations right from the beginning would mean conjuring up the danger of cold war. But I will see to it in my planning that the present numerical strength of the Bundeswehr will be continued if necessary.

FR: There will be not only personnel problems in the years to come, but also problems with regard to financing the arms systems of the next generations, such as the MRCA-Tornado multipurpose fighter plane, which has created considerable financial problems for the Bundeswehr. How will you solve that, will you concentrate on important areas? Can the arms requests from all branches be financed?

Apel: I do not know how much money will be available to me in 1981. I assume that this will be clear in the next 14 days. I will have to concentrate on important areas.

FR: We mentioned concentrating on important areas. Will certain branches be involved? When the problem of tactical fighter planes for the nineties is involved, for example, will you make a political decision such as: We will now concentrate more on the army and less on the costly demands of the air force?

Apel: I am not in a position today to answer that. I have told the responsible people in the ministry to make alternative plans on which I shall decide in accordance with the financial means available. This is naturally primarily a task for the military experts, that is, the inspector general and the inspectors.

FR: How many cuts do you expect roughly? You have certainly discussed it with your colleague Matthoefer?

Apel: I do not know at the moment what I can expect. I have to assume that the defense budget will not come out unscathed. On the other hand, leading politicians have made public statements recently in the Federal Republic in support of the real 3 percent goal.

FR: Attempts have been made repeatedly to achieve arms cooperation with NATO. With just a few exceptions these have been mere phrases. Is there a possibility of saving some money there?

Apel: Arms cooperation offers some opportunities to save money, on the one hand, but, on the other, it costs money. The Tornado is an example. It was built by three nations (England, Italy and the Federal Republic) and it shows that we have certainly saved money with regard to development costs. Arms cooperation also serves the standardization of NATO equipment, but different economic developments in the three countries, such as strikes by other nations and different price increases create great problems for us.

I am an absolute advocate of cooperation, but as matters are at present, I cannot assume that much money will be saved that way. National egotisms are still too outspoken and economic structures too different.

FR: At the commanders meeting in Trier you said that one must think about things in an unorthodox way in order to eliminate what is unnecessary, and you warned against tinkering around. What did you mean by that, what kind of tinkering should not be done?

Apel: There are unorthodox considerations about it being inadvisable to put the whole next generation of armored vehicles on tracks. Armored personnel carriers can be just as safe and efficient on wheels. That would save enormous amounts. One must also critically ask whether ships will have the same future as before in the Baltic Sea in view of the ability to operate with missiles over long distances. These and other things will be discussed by the closed session in mid-February.

FR: So the navy still does not have its additional two frigates?

Apel: At present I see no financial possibility of building more frigates within the foreseeable future.

FR: What role does the Bundeswehr play in society?

Apel: It is always difficult to speak on behalf of the Bundeswehr, but one can say the following on behalf of most of the soldiers:

First, the Bundeswehr has fully accepted the detente and security policies of the Social-Liberal coalition. Soldiers know best about the cruelty of their arms and the risk involved in the use of such arms. That risk will be held within limits only if the military balance is preserved.

Second, Bundeswehr members consider themselves as citizens of this republic. This will certainly lead to the fact that they will not refrain from making wage demands just because there is a particular Bundeswehr medal. The order will be gratefully accepted because it expresses the thanks of the community, but there will be no renunciation of financial progress.

Third, Bundeswehr members live like other citizens. In earlier times even the train conductor proudly wore his uniform on Sundays, and naturally he put on all the medals he had. Today the Bundeswehr members wear the same clothes as we do when they are not on duty. In other words, the Bundeswehr has become part of our society. Problems will continue to exist. Society must understand the special problems of the Bundeswehr and accept them. In order to do that, we must talk to each other.

On that occasion, Mr 'Aziz said that Iraq had "no territorial aims against Iran."

FRANCOIS-PONCET REJECTS ISRAELI CHARGE OF ANTI-SEMITISM

LD041345 Paris LE MATIN in French 30 Oct 80 p 36

[Text] French policy in the Middle East does not have any "anti-Israeli inspiration," Jean Francois-Poncet said yesterday. Replying with almost 3 weeks delay to the Israeli Government's attacks the foreign minister added: "The French Government cannot accept that anybody who proposes a different policy from that followed by Menahem Begin should be suspected of anti-Semitism." "Such sweeping judgments are both false and unacceptable," the minister added.

This commission, which was set up in 1973, had not met since 1977. Trade between the two countries represents less than 1 percent of their total foreign trade. In 1979 France had a Fr381 million deficit (up Fr189 million from 1978), imports having reached Fr3,254,000,000 and exports Fr2,873,000,000. In the first 8 months of 1980 this imbalance was accentuated, reaching Fr802 million.

L'HUMANITE CITES POLISH UNIONISTS' 'RESENTMENT, BITTERNESS'

LD031629 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 27 Oct 80 p 9

[Jacques Dimet dispatch: "Controversy After Solidarity's Registration"]

[Text] Warsaw, 26 Oct--Following Solidarity's registration and the controversy it has aroused, the union's coordination committee is meeting in Gdansk on Monday to decide its course of action.

On Friday the court, while declaring the new trade unions to be registered, compulsorily inserted into the rules the disputed clauses concerning the Polish United Workers Party's [PZPR] leadership role and the circumstance in which the right to strike can be used. The presiding judge, who denied that he wished to interfere in Solidarity's affairs, argued that this was the only way of giving the trade union official recognition.

The trade unionists are above all annoyed at the way in which they were presented with a fait accompli.

In the present climate Friday's events are aggravating resentment and bitterness. The division which prevails in the working class is worrying many political and trade union leaders in Warsaw. This anxiety was demonstrated, for instance, at the Textile Trade Union's congress which ended in Lodz Thursday--the Textile Trade Union is one of the oldest Polish trade unions, with strong traditions of struggle.

Many delegates made their discontent known. They say they are not being involved in decisions. "For years we have been drawing attention to the problems and making demands," they maintain. "Nobody paid any attention to us. We are not being heeded any more today. The press does not mention us." One woman worker pointed out that, in her factory, the workers were prepared to work for nothing if they had an assurance that it would help the country. "However," she added, "there is no question of doing work which will be wasted!"

This trade union has also sent a letter to Council of State Chairman H. Jablonski protesting against an agreement reached between the Szczecin workers committee and the government commission providing for the dissolution of the Trade Union Council if it represented less than 10 percent of the workers. The trade unionists think that violates the constitution and the International Labor Charter. "It is up to us to decide whether the Trade Union Council in the factories should exist or not," they write.

In addition, both party and government leaders stress the need to implement this summer's agreements in full, while many administrative departments are refusing to do that. Textile Trade Union President Brygida Natorsak told me: "The old trade unionists are coming under attack; the party and government leaderships have been changed but the enterprise managament remains the same. It is those who have always refused to respond to the workers' demands who are remaining in office." Indeed it is all too often the case that the management in small and medium enterprises is slow to recognize workers councils, hence helping to worsen the political climate. TRYBUNA LUDU, in an article published Saturday, calls on party members to mobilize. "The party must mobilize all social forces in all areas--the forces which want things to change and which are aware of the desperate economic and social situation; it is the party organizations which should guide the changes, realize the people's aspirations and restore social justice and honesty," the PZPR organ writes.

MARCHAIS PROTESTS KIM TAE-CHUNG'S DEATH SENTENCE

[Excerpt] Paris, 4 Nov (AFP)--The French Communist Party leader and a West German Catholic group have protested the confirmation today of the death sentence on South Korean opposition leader Kim Tae-Chung.

French Communist Party Secretary-General Georges Marchais asked the French Government to intervene on behalf of Mr Kim and his companions who, he said, "were unjustly condemned".

In a letter to French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing, Mr. Marchais said that despite previous requests by himself and others, "one cannot help but note that you have still not made known the voice of France" in the matter.

"The honor and dignity of France" depend on a response by the French Government, he said.

AIR FORCE REDUCES ORDER FOR ALPHAJET TRAINERS

LD031149 Paris LE MONDE in French 31 Oct 80 p 26

[Excerpt] According to National Assembly Defense Committee report writers, the French Air Force has reduced its total order for Alphajet twin-jet training aircraft by 25, from 200 to 175 aircraft.

The last order (for 9 aircraft) is scheduled for 1981, during which year 33 Alphajet aircraft will be delivered, increasing the number of aircraft in service to 97.

The Alphajet, a joint Franco-West German design by the Breguet-Dassault and Dornier companies, is a twin-jet aircraft which had its first flight on 26 October 1973 and which the two countries decided to mass-produce in October 1975.

SOCIALIST DELEGATION CONFERS WITH EANES, ENDORSES CANDIDACY

[Unattributed report: "Ambiguities Between PS and Ramalho Eanes Resolved"]

[Excerpt] A Socialist Party [PS] delegation comprising Salgado Zenha, Vitor Constancio and Antonio Arnaut yesterday afternoon visited Belem Palace, where it talked for 3 hours with General Eanes. Speaking to journalists afterward, Salgado Zenha specified that the exchange of views was conducted "on the assumption that the PS is continuing its support for General Ramalho Eanes' recandidacy," and that "this candidacy is independent and non-partisan and is aimed essentially at defending the democratic constitutional system."

The aim of the meeting, he said, served to "resolve the ambiguities which arose in connection with remarks made by the president of the republic some time ago and to exchange impressions on the Socialists' participation in the election campaign, togehter with the services supporting the president of the republic's recandidacy." Salgado Zenha also disclosed that in principle he himself, Vitor Constancio and Antonio Arnaut should represent his party in the process of support for General Ramalho Earnes' candidacy, replacing Mario Soares.

PCP PLEDGES FIGHT AGAINST SOARES CARENIRO 'THREAT OF FASCISM'

LD041545 Lisbon AVANTE! in Portuguese 30 Oct 80 p 12

[Apparent text of 28 October "PCP National Conference Resolution on Presidential Election"]

[Text] 1. The presidential election takes on a new and important significance in light of the conditions created by the results of the 5 October legislative election.

Having consolidated their positions in the Assembly of the Republic and in the government, specifically by adulterating the democratic nature of the election, the reactionary forces are now launching an onslaught against the two other bodies of political power, aiming at taking control over one (the Presidency of the Republic) and eliminating the other (the Council of the Revolution). In this situation, the presidential election takes on even greater importance.

2. Soares Carneiro's candidacy conceals the aims of the conquest of the whole of political power by big capital and by the big landowners, and the creation of conditions for the unconstitutional revision of the Constitution, the restoration of state monopoly capitalism, the imposition of increasing restrictions on freedoms and rights, the elimination of the gains of April [1974], increasing submission to imperialism and the setting up of another dictatorship.

This plan constitutes a real danger. The PCP national conference reaffirms that the central, decisive and priority task of the democratic forces and ll antifascists is to defeat this plan and in the immediate term to concentrate efforts and energies to prevent the election of reaction's candidate--Soares Carneiro.

It is possible to achieve this aim. The forces of democracy as a whole are broader and stronger than the forces of reaction.

3. The PCP national conference assessed the significance, characteristics and prospects of General Ramalho Eanes' candidacy. Deeming it necessary and opportune to formulate an overall opinion on the president of the republic's conduct, the national conference emphasized the existence of many negative aspects, both at the political level and at the military level, which have aroused and continue to arouse keen opposition on the part of the workers and people's movement; but also stressed that in an overall assessment General Ramalho Eanes' mandate, under the specific conditions of the reactionary forces' offensive, has played a positive, albeit inadequate and contradictory, role in defending the democratic system.

Of the major political parties, the PCP is undoubtedly the one whose program and aims are most distant from the current president of the republic's policy and program aims. The PCP did not promote General Ramalho Eanes' candidacy, was not consulted about it and did not support it. However, examining objectively the political possibilities and prospects in connection with the presidential election, the national conference concluded that Soares Carneiro represents the threat of fascism and of the elimination of the democratic system and Eanes is the candidate who, being actively opposed by the "Democratic Alliance" and the whole of reaction, appears to be in the best position for defeating Soares Carneiro.

4. Mario Soares' decision to withdraw his support for General Eanes' repeat candidacy suddenly constitutes real assistance for Soares Carneiro. The chorus of praise and delight with which the reactionary forces received this stance and the criticisms which they have made of the Socialist Party leadership for not accompanying its secretary general in his attempt to make Eanes' candidacy inviable dispel the leftwing appearances with which Mario Soares wishes to invest his conduct and leave no doubts that in fact it serves reaction's plans.

5. The candidacies with a radical leftist facade, of Otelo Saraiva De Carvalho and Aires Rodrigues, likewise serve reaction's plans. These candidacies, setting on the same level the candidacies of General Ramalho Eanes and General Soares Carneiro, are clearly not aimed at contributing to the defeat of reaction's candidate but merely, under the cover of a pseudounitary and populist phraseology, pursuing splittist aims, antagonizing the PCP, satisfying personal and ultrasectarian ambitions, creating confusion and neutralizing votes essential to defending democracy.

6. The national conference, examining the political situation and all the contradictory issues on the presidential elections, resolves to promote the fielding of a PCP candidate.

The essential aims of this candidacy are:
1. To conduct a campaign to inform the public about the political situation and the importance of the presidential election;
2. To contribute actively to mobilizing the antifascist electorate, struggling against abstention by democrats, with a view to defeating reaction's candidate--Soares Carneiro;
3. To contribute to creating conditions more favorable to unity among the workers and the democratic and antifascist forces and to the Portuguese people's struggle in the situation resulting from the presidential election;
4. To contribute to the strengthening of the PCP, which has an essential role in defending democracy.

The national conference designates Comrade Carlos Brito, a member of the PCP Central Committee's Political Commission, as the PCP's candidate in the 1980 presidential election.

The national conference instructs the Central Committee and Political Commission to decide at the proper time whether the PCP candidate should run in the 7 December election or should withdraw his candidacy before that time, and in that event possibly call for voting for another candidate.

7. The aims laid down by the national conference reflect the party's collective will, expressed in the broad and democratic debate which concluded this conference, and will be a factor for strengthening the unity, cohesion, commitment and militancy of all organizations and all party members.

The situations which we are experiencing is one full of grave dangers for Portuguese democracy. It is possible to combat them successfully. But the situation requires that everybody become aware of these dangers.

The PCP National Conference calls on all democrats and antifascists and all those who do not want another dictatorship to join their efforts in the election battle against reaction's candidate, Soares Carneiro, to defend the freedoms and other gains of 25 April and to defend democratic Portugal.

PCP LISTS POSITIVE, NEGATIVE REACTIONS TO EANES REMARKS

[Apparent text of PCP Information and Propaganda Section 15 October note: "The President of the Republic's Press Conference"]

[Text] 1. The president of the republic's statements during his press conference yesterday reflect an assessment of the current political situation which, in the PCP's opinion, is not in keeping with the real gravity of the situation and the grave threats to democracy resulting from the "Democratic Alliance" parties' consolidation in the Assembly of the Republic and in the government.

2. Indeed, with the positions acquired as a result of the 5 October election the "Democratic Alliance" parties have ensured better conditions for intensifying and developing their real plan for subverting and subsequently eliminating the democratic and constitutional system.

3. In addition, the president of the republic's statements confirm well-known and already familiar differences of opinion and divergences between his stances and those of the PCP, specifically in aspects as important as the assessment of the various political forces and their aims, as related to the political and social forces whose coming together is essential to defending the system of freedom achieved by 25 April [1974] and to resolving the nation's problems, and concerning the blueprint for society which could best satisfy national interests and the aspirations of freedom, social progress, equality and national independence shared by the majority of the Portuguese people.

4. The president of the republic's statements concerning the need to guarantee the democratic framework and respect for democratic legality--as a means of thwarting the totalitarian and dictatorial ambitions which, in the PCP's opinion, have been very obvious in the "Democratic Alliance" parties' past, present and doubtless future conduct--naturally assume a positive significance.

5. Right now it is particularly important for all those who sincerely desire to contribute to the defense and consolidation of democracy not to underestimate the real dangers which the "Democratic Alliance" is causing to loom over democracy and not to forget that it is in the democratic forces that there lie the energies, loyalty and perseverance essential for the Portuguese people to be able to prevent a return to the past and keep Portugal on the path of freedom and hope--the path of 25 April, its ideals and gains.

PUNSET NOTES POSSIBILITY OF JOINING EEC IN JANUARY 1984

[EFE report: "Punset Says Spain Could Join EEC in 1984"]

[Text] "It seems a reasonable conjecture to regard 1 January 1984 as the possible date for Spain joining the EEC," Minister for Relations with the EEC Eduardo Punset told an information session of the Congress of Deputies Foreign Affairs Committee yesterday, EFE reports.

In Punset's opinion, Spain now has only two options: Either to wait or to attempt an "option for gradual progress" based on the fact that Spain has nothing to gain and much to lose from a suspension of negotiations with the EEC. The government has chosen the second option, the minister said, proceeding from the fact that there are many issues that can be tackled independently in the EEC's quest for a solution to its internal problems, which are what are delaying Spain's membership.

The plan inherent in the option for the "gradual process" involves negotiating with the EEC all matters not affected by internal EEC problems; defining the basic issues with regard to agriculture and fishing; achieving participation in the "process of reflection" whereby the EEC will resolve its present agricultural and budgetary problems; and intensifying bilateral contacts in connection with EEC topics.

According to Punset, this working program will take place in three phases, the first of which will permit discussion of the points mentioned, except for agricultural matters, and will last until early in the second half of 1981. By then, as long as the EEC has resolved its internal problems, it will be possible to begin the second phase, which will be devoted to negotiations on agricultural matters.

The third phase will consist of the signing of the treaty and its ratification by the member countries' parliaments. Bearing in mind that technical customs considerations make 1 January the only possible date for joining the EEC and with a reasonable estimate of the time needed for drafting, signing and ratifying the treaty, Spain could become a full EEC member on 1 January 1984.

ECONOMY MINISTER COMMENTS ON FORECASTS FOR 1981

[P.G. report: "Wage Increases for 1981 Should Be Between 11.5 and 12.5 Percent"]

[Excerpts] The government would consider it highly satisfactory for the increase in wages next year to be between 11.5 and 12.5 percent, Minister of the Economy and Commerce Juan Antonio Garcia Diez stated during the information session held by the Congress of Deputies Economy Committee yesterday.

Forecasts for 1981

In the minister of the economy's opinion, the gross domestic product [GDP] will increase between 0.5 percent and 1 percent this year, representing a clear improvement on the expectations of 1 month ago. This improved economic behavior would be based on the progress of private consumption, the growth in which will be between 0.4 percent and 0.8 percent next year. It is estimated that disposable income will improve by 15 percent, gross accumulation of capital (investment) will remain stagnant or could even increase slightly as a result of public investment and an increase in stocks and the external sector will remain between 0.2 percent and 0.3 percent of the overall growth in economic activity. Consumer prices by mid-December will have increased 15 percent over the year as a whole, the rate of increase in the consumer price index for September being about 1 percent. According to his estimates, unemployment is continuing to increase and it is forecast that the year will close with a maximum increase of about 250,000 people and a current external account deficit of about $4.5 billion. Next year, the government's economic aims amount to a growth in the GDP of about 2.5 percent, a 13.5 percent increase in the consumer price index, an increase in liquid assets of about 16 percent and an increase in investment in the private sector of about 18 percent, which will mean, according to the minister, an increase in the credit at the disposal of the private sector, with the inflation forecast for next year being lower.

3-Year Aims

Mr Garcia Diez stated that employment has become the priority in the economic sector, although without abandoning thriftiness in the struggle against inflation for that reason. "Public investment will thrust ahead strongly in 1981, but the public sector has limits which it cannot exceed, and so private investment will have to take over for the 2 subsequent years." The minister summarized the government's aims in the economic field by stating that greater freedom in the behavior of the economic system and greater discipline in the public sector will be promoted, both of which aims are "very difficult to achieve, since there is strong opposition in both instances, on the part of both the private and the public sector." He also expressed the intention of carrying out greater planning of economic activity, in such a way that there is always 3-year planning, especially with respect to public investment. The emergency action plans in the three regions which have submitted them to the government--the Canary Islands, Andalusia and Extremadura--would fall within this planning.

PCE MEETING DISCUSSES PLANS FOR PARTY CONGRESS, ELECTIONS

Sanchez' Comments

LD041332 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 0700 GMT 4 Nov 80

[Text] Now more on the long, 3-day meeting of the PCE Central Committee, which is preparing for the party's 10th Congress, to be held from 15 to 18 July next year.

The report presented by Secretary General Santiago Carrillo was approved by 91 votes in favor, 2 opposed and 19 abstentions. So this means support for Carrillo's historical line and any rumors about his possibly being replaced will now have to wait at least until the congress takes place. Here is what Simon Sanchez Montero [member of the party Secretariat and Executive Committee]--has to say on the subject:

[Begin recording] In my view, no action to replace the secretary general has been either instigated or concluded. The congress will elect a new party leadership, from the secretary general down to all the members of the Central Committee. My personal opinion--and this is a purely personal view, though it is based on what I have observed--is that the question of replacing the secretary general is not at present being raised. [end recording]

Now another point: The possibility of a new figure, that of deputy secretary general. It is possible that the Central Committee may submit a proposal at the congress for the creation of this post. On this point, Sanchez Montero says that for the moment no definite names have been proposed.

[Begin recording] It would be up to the congress to decide in the first instance whether this would be desirable or not and thereafter elect the person to fill the post in accordance with whatever rules were established. [end recording]

And one final point safeguarding the internal discussions among Spanish Communists: party structure. One particular need has been highlighted.

[Begin Sanchez recording] The need to bring the party organization into line with the state, including autonomous regions, means trying to reconcile two things which undoubtedly pose contradictions: on the one hand, the existence of national and regional parties with their own identity and autonomy; and on the other, the need for them to form a unitary whole, given that the struggle to transform Spanish society is a single process. [end recording]

Carrillo Press Conference

[Text] Spanish Communist Party [PCE] Secretary General Santiago Carrillo has given a press conference to report the various matters discussed at the latest meeting of the party Central Committee. Santiago Carrillo announced that the next congress will be held in Madrid from 15 to 19 July next year. At that congress the party will be electing—or reelecting, as the case may be—the secretary general, and also a deputy secretary general, a new post in the Central Committee. Santiago Carrillo said that the functions of this deputy secretary general—for which post he denied having any candidate in mind—will be to assist and in some instances stand in for the secretary general. On this point, (?referring to his functions), Carrillo said that the figure of the deputy secretary general is not [words indistinct]. He explained this by saying that there is a campaign, directed from the right, to replace him as party leader. And he remarked that another Eurocommunist secretary general—the Italian Berlinguer—has also (?been subjected to) that same campaign.

Another subject dealt with at the meeting was that of links between the different communist parties within the state incorporating autonomous regions. The secretary general stated again that Spain is a historical reality. It is a nation of nations [words indistinct]. The PCE must, therefore, be a single party and not a federation of communist parties which in some cases may contradict one another, though undoubtedly it must have a federal structure, and it must have a central leadership to integrate and lay down the general lines of policy. On the question of the manner of attaining this state based on nationalities, Carrillo said there is none other than that of a pact among the main Spanish political forces.

The differences between the PCE and the Unified Socialist Party of Catalonia have been settled, said Carrillo, since in his party nobody doubts the independence of the Catalan communists.

Finally, on the question of a possible coalition government involving the Union of the Democratic Center and the Socialists, the PCE secretary general said that if such a union produced a government which were progressive on such matters as combatting unemployment, autonomy questions, culture and foreign policy, among others, then his party's attitude would be one of conditional support; if on the other hand such a pact were to lead to a coalition pursuing a centrist policy then its attitude would be one of clear opposition. A first evaluation of such a coalition government, according to Carrillo, would be provided by [words indistinct] how it respected the leftwing pace in the municipal authorities.

Finally, Santiago Carrillo also announced that he is to make a trip to China for a visit of 20 days beginning next Sunday.

GASTON THORN DISCUSSES EEC ISSUES WITH LEADERS

LD041623 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 30 Oct 80 Part 1 p 2

[Kjoel report: "EEC Chairman on Lightning Visit to Copenhagen"]

[Excerpt] Luxembourg Foreign Minister Gaston Thorn made a lightning visit to Copenhagen yesterday in his capacity as chairman of the EEC Council of Ministers. He discussed EEC cooperation with Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen and Foreign Minister Kjeld Olesen, and also had an audience with the queen.

Thorn has been appointed next EEC Commission chairman as of the new year and took the opportunity to discuss future work for the Commission's new members. During the visit Kjeld Olesen stressed that Denmark wants to adhere to the fundamental principles of the agricultural policy, but it is also a Danish wish that changes are carried out so that the large, expensive surpluses of dairy produce are eliminated.

FOLKETING DEBATES U.S. DEPOTS, NATO ROLE

LD041017 Copenhagen AKTUELT in Danish 31 Oct 80 p 14

["BJ." report: "Government Position Unchanged: No Nuclear Arms and No Foreign Troops in Peacetime"]

[Excerpt] The government's position on the stationing of allied troops and the deployment of nuclear arms on Danish territory is unchanged. The position is that their presence on Danish soil could not occur under present circumstances, that is, in peacetime, Foreign Minister Kjeld Olesen said yesterday during the day-long Folketing debate on NATO depots in Denmark.

A natural consequence of this must be—and Danish policy on this is also unchanged—that the possibilities of receiving help from outside in a given situation must be prepared in advance, so that the necessary conditions for receiving such help at all are fulfilled, the foreign minister said. Kjeld Olesen and Defense Minister Poul Sogaard stressed that the debate on the expansion of NATO depots in Denmark with heavy military materiel comes at a time when there is no firm basis on which to build such a debate.

"At present NATO is making a study, the results of which we do not know. When these deliberations are completed it will be time for a political appraisal and a political decision," Kheld Olesen said. "At the present time it is impossible for the government to know anything about the conclusions or anything about what proposal is likely to be made to Denmark and other countries. It serves no useful purpose to try at present to demand from the government a statement on its position on a proposal whose contents we know nothing about," Kjeld Olesen said.

He also made it clear that in the continuous integrated cooperation within NATO we must always be prepared for the necessary adjustments.

Kjeld Olesen stressed that in the present case the Danish Government is in close contact with the Folketing political parties, which would evaluate when reinforcements from outside should be called in. "Every government must have a minimum freedom of action to evaluate the situation."

Kjeld Olesen also said that the background to the debate on the NATO depots was the Soviet Unions' significant maritime expansion. This has necessitated a revision of the original plans to bring primarily U.S. troops and materiel over the Atlantic Ocean by ship, he said.

Poul Sogaard denied reports that the United States has offered Denmark reinforcements of 30,000 marines to bolster Danish defenses in a crisis. No one in the Danish Defense Forces, NATO or the U.S. State Department has any knowledge of these reports, the defense minister said.

The debate was called for by Gert Petersen (Socialist People's Party), who sharply criticized the government for planning an about-turn in Denmark's present defense and security policy. The Liberal Party, the Conservative People's Party and the Progress Party were just as sharp in their criticism of the government for not having made sufficiently clear plans to strengthen the defense forces and NATO cooperation.

NORWAY

AGREEMENT WITH USSR ON FISHING QUOTAS, JAN MAYEN TALKS

LD041647 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 1 Nov 80 p 12

[NORSK TELEGRAMBYRAA report: "Less Cod for Norway"]

[Text] Norway and the Soviet Union reached agreement yesterday on fish quotas for next year, including a total quota of Norwegian Arctic cod in the Barents Sea of 260,000 tons. This is 90,000 tons less than this year's quota. In addition to the 260,000 tons Norway has a coastal cod quota of 40,000 tons and the Soviet Union has a corresponding quantity of so-called Murmansk cod. Other countries will have a total quota of 35,000 tons, so that the total cod quota will be 152,000 tons each for Norway and the Soviet Union. Norway has access to a certain amount of overfishing above its quota through the use of so-called passive tackle.

The total haddock catch has been increased from 75,000 tons this year to 110,000 tons the next, while the redfish quota has been reduced to 89,000 tons from 100,000 tons this year. The Russians approved a winter capelin quota of 1.2 million tons and a summer capelin quota of 700,000 tons.

Negotiations On Jan Mayen

LD040959 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 28 Oct 80 p 8

[Morten Fyhn report: "Jan Mayen Meeting With Soviet Union After Controversial Evensen Promise"]

[Text] With great reluctance Norway has given way to Soviet demands for separate consultations on the Jan Mayen zone and fishing rights there. The reason is a strong Norwegian desire to avoid conflict over the zone, and the fact that the Russians cited a Norwegian promise of such a separate meeting. According to AFTENPOSTEN's information, Ambassador Jens Evensen gave the Soviet Union just such an assurance.

Several informed sources told AFTENPOSTEN that Evensen ought not to have given the Soviet Union a promise of a separate Jan Mayen meeting, quite simply because Norway sees no reason for one. Norway does not want special arrangements for the Russians in the Jan Mayen zone. The Norwegian view is that the fishing zone was established a long time ago and that questions concerning catch quotas belong in the permanent Norwegian-Soviet Fisheries Commission. This was also stated over the weekend by Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund.

When the Russians contacted the Foreign Ministry in the early summer after the establishment of the zone in May this year and asked for consultations, Norway was puzzled that it was supposed to have given a promise of such a meeting, as the Russians claimed. After thorough investigations and contacts with Jens Evensen, among others, it seems clear that it was he who had chosen such words in talks with the Russians that they had taken it as a clear assurance.

Almost exactly a year ago--that is, at a time when it was unclear whether there would be any Jan Mayen agreement with Iceland--Evensen had promised separate consultations between Norway and the Soviet Union. According to reports to AFTENPOSTEN, this was done without advance discussions in the Foreign Ministry of the assurance or its consequences. Evensen is also said to have talked with the Russians about a Jan Mayen meeting in April this year during his negotiating trip to Moscow and later at the Law of the Sea conference in Geneva in July-August. The Russians therefore insisted to the Foreign Ministry on a meeting, but did not want to say clearly what matters they wanted to raise. The Soviet Union only referred to promises that had been made earlier and said that there was a basis for a consultation meeting on Jan Mayen. Norway has repeated to the Russians several times that it would be willing to brief the Russians on the agreement with Iceland but that there otherwise is nothing to talk about.

The parties then agreed to a meeting in Oslo from 11-15 November, with Jens Evensen as the leader of the Norwegian delegation, but the Foreign Ministry subsequently decided that it was unwise to have this meeting after the planned meeting of the joint Fisheries Commission that met in Oslo yesterday. The Russians were therefore contacted and it was suggested that the Jan Mayen meeting be held in parallel with the meeting of the Fisheries Commission. But it became clear at yesterday's meeting that the Russians were not interested in parallel meetings. There will probably be a meeting in November, as previously planned.

The Jan Mayen zone was established on the basis of Norwegian law and there has therefore been no question of asking interested states for their approval of it. The Soviet Union has not made a formal protest about its establishment nor has the country expressed reservations through the normal diplomatic channels. However, the Soviet ambassador in Oslo expressed himself in such unclear terms in connection with the zone's establishment that Norway later asked the Soviet Union if it had any reservations or not. The answer was a clear "no." Nevertheless it seems clear that the Soviet Union thinks that it is in a special position, and the ambassador has pointed to the Soviet Union's historical rights and has said that the zone affects Soviet interests, without mentioning which ones. In practice the Russians have gone far toward accepting the Jan Mayen zone and allowing their ships to be inspected, but they do not give any information about how much they have fished in the zone.

Norway does not like the idea of such a meeting with the Soviet Union because it can be taken as tacit Norwegian acceptance that the Soviet Union has in reality not recognized the zone. On the other hand, informed Norwegian sources think that this is precisely the reason why the Russians do not want to discuss the zone in the permanent fisheries commission. Norway agreed to the meeting because it wants good relations with the Soviet Union, both in general and especially in sea law and fisheries questions, but nevertheless insists that fisheries questions must be discussed in the commission. The Fisheries Ministry takes an unfavorable view of the fact that there will be a Jan Mayen meeting led by the Foreign Ministry and Evensen on the Norwegian side, for the ministry had intended to use Russian pollack fishing in the Jan Mayen zone as a bargaining card in the cod quota negotiations. Now the Russians have refused to talk about Jan Mayen in the commission, and the Fisheries Ministry feels that it has lost a solid negotiating point in the very difficult and complicated negotiations. It is already clear that the planned 5-day meeting in Oslo will not be enough, and that at least one more round of talks will be necessary.

MINISTERS, OLOF PALME, CITED ON DISARMAMENT ISSUES

LD311438 Oslo ARBEIDERBLADET in Norwegian 20 Oct 80 p 8

[Roy Helge Simonsen report: "We Must Start a Popular Movement"]

[Text] "We must start a popular movement against rearmament and for peace. We are tired of seeing Norway become more and more of a vassal state under the United States.

Norway must lead the way in the fight for a nonnuclear Europe--and we should be glad that we have people like Ambassador Jens Evensen and Deputy Commander of the North Norway Brigade Per Hansen." This was one of the shots fired by Norwegian Chemical Workers Trade Union Chairman Arthur Svensson, to great applause, at Politisk Forum's meeting on "The Danger of War" at Blindern yesterday evening. Arther Svensson was the last on the roster of speakers in the five-man panel that began the debate. The evening's main speaker was Olof Palme.

Palme stressed in his speech that the only way to achieve disarmament is through negotiations. "But when negotiations fail," he said, "what do we do then? We continue. The debate on disarmament must not be left to the experts, but to the broad opinion of the masses--and we must develop the poor nations of the world," said Palme, who stressed the importance of not underestimating the situation of the poor nations. We ought to work out a sort of Marshall Plan adapted to fit today's situation. The United States put its plan into operation when war-ravaged Europe lay in ruins in order to help Europe and to help itself. The industrialized part of the world must do the same for the developing countries," Palme said, and enumerated the different events in the last few years that have led to increased fear of war. Among other things, he thought that Europe ought to build itself up to be more independent of the two superpowers.

Palme also touched on the so-called first strike strategy. "It is when the discussion has started along this road, so that people begin to believe that it is possible to win a limited nuclear war, that there is danger," he said. Although Palme drew a relatively gloomy picture of the present situation so far as detente policy is concerned, he still hopes that progress will be made and war avoided. "Even if the world perished tomorrow, I would still plant my apple tree this evening," Palme said, quoting Martin Luther.

Defense Minister Thorvald Stoltenberg said in his speech that one possible way of breaking down the many barriers between isolated political spheres--such as economic policies, arms control, disarmament and defense policies--would be to introduce a border concept of security. The defense minister also stressed the importance of extending beyond Scandinavia the support from public opinion for nuclear disarmament found there today. He added, however, that it seemed to be an irony of fate that public support for disarmament seem to be inversely proportional to the country's significance for disarmament--especially nuclear disarmament.

Stoltenberg too stressed the importance of using the negotiating cards that Norway has, and referred to the NATO resolution in December last year. He further touched on nuclear-free zones. Stoltenberg said that unilateral agreement on the establishment of nuclear-free zones in an area that is already nuclear-free is simply surrendering to the superpowers. He added that we already have nuclear weapons near the proposed zone--on the Kola Peninsula.

Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund stressed that the exacerbated international situation has increased the danger of war and is still increasing people's fear of war. Frydenlund also mentioned Norway's vote at the NATO meeting in December last year, and justified this vote by noting that the resolution also contained an offer of negotiations to the Soviet Union. The discussions between the United States and the Soviet Union are now under way. The outcome of these negotiations is uncertain, but they will be crucial for Europe's future, the foreign minister said, and he assured the thousands present at Blindern that Norway--in partnership with the other Scandinavian nations--will do its best to ensure that the Madrid conference that will start in 2 weeks' time leads to definite results and that the process of detente once again begins.

"We would also like the Madrid conference to adopt a resolution for a conference on disarmament in Europe which in its first phase would work on confidence-building measures, so that it would be able to tackle real troop reductions in its next phase," Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund said.

HONG KONG GOVERNOR URGES UK TO INCREASE TRADE WITH CHINA

[Clare Hollingworth report: "More Trade With China Urged"]

[Excerpts] Britain is being urged by Sir Murray Mac Lehose, governor of Hong Kong, to step up trade with China. Sir Murray arrived in London yesterday for 12 days of talks with Lord Carrington, foreign secretary, and industrial leaders which will establish guidelines for the future of the colony. Hong Kong provides the Chinese with one-third of their foreign currency earnings which they require urgently for their four modernisation programmes and the colony has become the natural base for the many lucrative joint ventures with China.

Sir Murray is extremely anxious to increase British trade with China and it is significant that the leading Hong Kong "taipans"--business giants--will be visiting London at the same time as the governor. Mr Davis Newbigging, senior managing director of Jardine Matheson, is heading a delegation from the Hong Kong Chamber of Commerce, which includes Mr Li Ka-shing of the shipping group Cheung Kong. He is also a director of the Hong Kong and Shanghai Banking Corporation. A second multi-millionaire Hong Kong shipowner, Sir Yue-Kong pao, is expected in London in time to attend the dinner given by the British Chamber of Shipping next Wednesday which will be addressed by Sir Murray.

Although the governor wants to ensure that the British in Hong Kong play a major role in opening China to foreign trade, the meetings take place against attempts by the world's largest shipowners--both Hong Kong based Chinese--to take over the old established Jardine Matheson. The Beijing authorities are officially neutral between the rival capitalist claimants--whether British or Chinese--but they would obviously prefer to see their old friends in Jardine still in control. Sir John Keswick, Jardine elder statesman, was a personal friend of the late Premier Zhou Enlai and is enormously respected by the present powers in Beijing. Furthermore, the Chinese would like to see Sir Murray, "who after all is only 63," remain as governor not only because they know and trust him, but they believe he can guide the colony through the current difficult period.

But while there is a reservoir of Chinese goodwill, there is, too, a real danger to future commercial enterprises with the expiry of the lease on the new territories in 1997. Vice-Premier Deng Xiaoping and other Chinese leaders have intimated that as they do not recognise the unequal treaty, they would be most unlikely to take over and reoccupy the new territories when the lease expires.

During his stay the governor will discuss the severe problems of overcrowding combined with strains on social services and education which face the colony as a result of the entry of over 350,000 illegal immigrants. Sir Murray will also request the government to set an example and speed up the acceptance of refugees who have arrived by boat from South Vietnam.

HEALEY, FOOT FINAL CANDIDATES FOR LABOR LEADER

D041834 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1807 GMT 4 Nov 80

[Text] The battle for the Labour Party leadership goes on. Today's first ballot of Labour MPs failed to come up with an outright winner. Of the four candidates, shadow Chancellor Mr Denis Healey collected the most votes. But he failed by 23 votes to reach the crucial number of 135 votes--an absolute majority of the Parliamentary Labour Party--to give him automatic succession to the leadership. The result--Mr Healey, 112, Mr Michael Foot, 83, Mr John Silkin, 38, and Mr Peter Shore, 32--means both Mr Shore and Mr Silkin are eliminated from the contest because their combined vote failed to match that of Mr. Foot. So the field is narrowed to a two-horse race between Mr Healey, aged 63, and Mr Foot, aged 67, who now face a second ballot of Labour's 268 MPs on Monday, November 10.

ROLANDHIS MAKES STATEMENT ON WALDHEIM'S TALKS INITIATIVE

[Excerpt] In a statement today, Foreign Minister Rolandhis said that it was logical to anticipate that the talks that were proposed by UN Secretary General Waldheim in New York would fail and would also lead the dialogue in Cyprus to failure also. Moreover, Mr Rolandhis reiterated that both he and the interlocutor were ready to meet the UN secretary general any time and discuss with him anything relating to the Cyprus problem.

Regarding the issue of his meeting with Mr Atakol in New York, Mr Rolandhis stressed in his statement that the most important question is: What could have been expected from the 2-3 days talks in New York? Such talks, the statement adds, are expedient when an issue nears maturity and only needs the last thrust, or when there is nothing that might be risked from the possible failure of the talks. However, in our case, Mr Rolandhis said, both the Famagusta issue and practical measures are still in a preliminary stage of a difficult and sensitive dialogue, and the differences are still very great. Consequently, he continued, what are the conditions that would have made success possible within 2-3 days, and what would have happened had the New York experiment failed, which it was logical to surmise it would do? Wouldn't a striking fiasco in New York have also brought the dialogue in Cyprus to failure; and wouldn't that have destroyed all we have built with unabated efforts in the past 3 and 1/2 years?

Mr Rolandhis also said that Gobbi, the UN secretary general's special representative, has stated to him that the Turkish Cypriots Atakol and Onan were the first to reject Waldheim's proposal. On my part, he added, I also commented that the initiative was not suitable and reserved myself to give the final reply later.

UN CYPRUS COMMAND COMMENTS ON WALDHEIM PROPOSAL

NC041957 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1730 GMT 4 Nov 80

[Text] The press attache of the UN Forces in Cyprus [UNFICYP] has issued a statement explaining that the UN Headquarters inquiry into the possibility of consultations with representatives of the two sides was only a procedural matter and an attempt to aid the course of the intercommunal talks. The spokesman added that there is no issue involved of either failure of the talks or of a negative effect on the progress of or prospects for the talks. On the contrary, the UNFICYP spokesman's statement concludes, all the essential matters are being kept within the venue of the intercommunal talks, and the idea for consultations has stressed this clearly.

I SIMERINI CRITICIZES DECISION ON WALDHEIM'S PROPOSAL

NC041141 Nicosia I SIMERINI in Greek 4 Nov 80 p 1

[Editorial: "Without Discussion"]

[Text] The classical mistake has been committed again. With its characteristic carelessness and irresponsibility, the government has rejected without discussion a proposal which, it if were handled cooly, would have helped promote the issue of Famagusta. The Foreign Ministry has cited the usual wornout excuses used on many occasions before when it made a mess of things. But whatever the excuses, the government cannot shake off responsibility for its blunder, although it has the illusion that it is giving lessons on high politics.

The secretary general's proposal was submitted as an idea for discussion and consideration by the interested parties and not as an ultimatum. UN envoy Gobbi, who conveyed the proposal, made it clear that it was an idea in its formative stage. What else could this mean than the fact that the proposal was submitted as an idea that could be implemented after it was given final shape by the parties concerned? Moreover, this is why the proposal was initially described as a message. When Mr Gobbi was asked about it he said: "Sometimes we promote and suggest ideas. We do not make proposals that could conflict with the interests of the parties."

Definitely, Gobbi's statement is also an answer to the criticism against the secretary general that is included in the hasty government decision to reject the proposal. A section of the press has already converted this criticism into an open charge that the United Nations is promoting and seeking the legalization of the fait accompli, thus treating alike the lawful government and the occupation regime.

Only those who disagree with the procedure of the talks and who are flirting with unrealistic solutions view the secretary general's motives and actions with suspicion. Waldheim has gained enough experience about the Cypriot problem. He is convinced—without pressure from anyone—that the issue of Famagusta can be the cornerstone of an agreed solution to the problem. His latest suggestion for separate contacts with Rolandhis and Atakol in New York is aimed precisely at this and not at changing the current dialogue. But even if we had accepted the proposal as it stood, we would not have suffered any harm from it. On the contrary, upon returning from New York we would have been in a better position, knowing the Turkish aims and the UN position, and thus we would have been able to act more appropriately in order to finally achieve what we want.

Now we fear that we shall lament over another lost opportunity—not merely for a return to Famagusta but also for the abolition of the de facto partitioning of Cyprus.

MITSOTAKIS DENIES EXISTENCE OF 'BINDING' AVEROF LETTER

ATO41415 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 4 Nov 80 p 1

[Text] In an emphatic statement, Foreign Minister K. Mitsotakis denied reports by the foreign and a portion of the Greek press on "a binding letter" by Averof and on installation of Pershing and cruise missiles, describing them as unfounded.

Speaking to press representatives yesterday, Mitsotakis stated, "I emphatically deny as completely inaccurate the reports about a 'binding' Averof letter (which, according to the NEW STATESMAN magazine, binds Greece to permit exclusive U.S. activity from the base at Iraklion.) All other references to the bases are also inaccurate."

Mitsotakis explained that "Averof's letter to his U.S. counterpart Brown falls within the framework of the team effort to convince the Americans on our positions. This coordinated team effort consisted of the 'well known letter' by Prime Minister Rallis to President Carter, Averof's letter to Brown and my New York meeting during the same period with U.S. Secretary of State Muskie."

Mitsotakis added: "It is not accurate that Greece will have nothing to do with U.S. bases. These bases will continue to remain under national command."

The Missiles

Referring to press reports which presented the government as being under pressure for the installation of cruise and Pershing missiles on Greek territory, a government source stated, "there is no question of the installation of these missiles" and that "all reports about the application of pressure is inaccurate."

Speaking on the same subject, Foreign Minister Mitsotakis also emphatically denied these press reports stating that "nothing of this sort was ever even discussed."

The same government source, referring to statements about the bases and specifically about statements that Greek authorities will have no control, underlined that "only the other day Prime Minister Rallis stated that the relevant discussion with the United States will be conducted on the basis of the already initialled 1977 agreement and the equivalent U.S.-Turkish agreement."

TWO FORMER LEGISLATORS OFFER DEFENSE BEFORE ANKARA COURT

TA041306 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1210 GMT 4 Nov 80

[Text] Ankara, 4 Nov (AA)--Two former parliamentarians, Deniz Baykal (RPP) and Ahmet Buldanli (JP), appeared before an Ankara court today on charges of having insulted the moral entity of the government under article 159/1 of the penal code.

Deniz Baykal, defended by three lawyers including ex-Senator Ugur Alacakaptan and ex-Deputy Onder Sav, told the court the statement under question, which he had made in 1975, referred not to the government as a whole, but to "certain elements" of the JP-NAP coalition then in power. He noted those persons he had implied were on trial now. JP's Buldanli also pleaded innocent, claiming a telegram he had sent then-President Fahri Koruturk was not in violation of the law. The lawyer for the defense said his client had merely expressed his concern over the term "eccentric" which the president had used in a speech.

KREISKY COMMENTS ON REAGAN ELECTION VICTORY

AU051302 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1142 GMT 5 Nov 80

[Excerpt] How about the reactions to the U.S. election in Austria? What, for example, is the reaction of Social Democrat and Chancellor Bruno Kreisky? How does he feel about the victory of, and the new U.S. president, Ronald Reagan?

[Begin recording] [Kreisky] I have no preferences, and fortunately we--Helmut Schmidt and I--last Saturday were of the opinion--if I may be so indiscreet as to say that--that we have no objections to anyone, but that we certainly would not say anything prior to the election. We feel that the U.S. policy is so substantial and important for world politics that everything depends on what policy is pursued by the president. Let me remind you that I had a very good relationship with Nixon--in Salzburg--and with Ford--again in Salzburg--and the only official visit I ever paid to the United States as chancellor was that to Ford, to the Republican. Moreover, it should be considered that probably Kissinger will play a very prominent role in the new president's foreign policy, and he is a known quantity. Oddly enough, Kissinger enjoys certain sympathies in the East bloc because there it is allegedly felt that his policy was more predictable than that of the President, the current President, that is, of Carter. Well, I don't know whether that is correct. And, second, the vice president, Bush, is a man who is exceedingly well versed in international problems because for a long time he headed the U.S. delegation to the United Nations very successfully, and in a way that won him many sympathies. Thus from our viewpoint, little has changed...[interrupted]

[Question] Little, but something did change?

[Kreisky] No, I would even say, in that respect, nothing. And I personally am in a position to make that assessment, because I have had good relations with some of the men around Carter, but I also have very good relations with those who will be around Reagan. [end recording]

PRC TRADE MINISTER TO VISIT AUSTRIA 4-10 NOV

AU041510 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 4 Nov 80 p 10

[Summary] Vienna--Instead of the expected expansion of Austria's trade with the PRC, this year's exports to this country will even remain behind last year's figures. From January to August 1980, Austrian exports to the PRC were only 575 million schillings as against 636 million schillings during the corresponding period of 1979. This decline is due to discontinuation of Austrian high-grade steel deliveries which last year amounted to 500 million schillings, that is about half of Austria's total 1979 exports to the PRC. Austrian businessmen are particularly disappointed about the downward trend because they made considerable efforts to establish a foothold in the Chinese market. They point out that despite expensive preparatory work by Austrian bidders for industrial plant projects in the PRC, not a single order has been obtained by an Austrian firm so far. Numerous visits to Austria by Chinese experts have also failed to produce any tangible results.

There is some hope that the situation might be improved by the visit to Austria of PRC Foreign Trade Minister Li Qiang scheduled for 1-10 November. The Chinese guest will sign an agreement in Vienna on technical and economic cooperation between Austria and the PRC and will visit several Austrian enterprises.

[Text] Bonn, 5 Nov (DPA)--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, after Ronald Reagan's election as the new U.S. president, expressed confidence about cooperation with the new U.S. leadership. Addressing the SPD parliamentary group today, the chancellor at the same time urged more intensive Western Europe-U.S. cooperation in responding to the challenges of world politics.

At a difficult stage in world politics, the American nation has, with an unequivocal majority, desired a change of leadership, said Schmidt. "We have good reasons for looking forward to cooperation with the new leadership with confidence and hope." In the present situation, the Federal Republic and the West European partners have a special responsibility.

Schmidt said he attaches special importanct to his trip to the United States in 2 weeks time. He will meet important advisers of the new president, perhaps also Reagan himself, whom he knew from various talks in past years.

As the biggest challenges with which the United States and Europe are jointly confronted, Schmidt mentioned East-West relations, Third World crisis points, defense questions and arms limitation, North-South problems and safeguarding energy supplies. Europeans and Americans know that they can only resolve these problems jointly. "We shall now have to discuss intensively possibilities for solutions and the roles which individual partners could play in these." If the dialogue is conducted correctly, Schmidt said, "we have a chance for a far-reaching consensus between Europe and the United States."

German-American relations as well as those between Europe and North America are determined in the first place by common basic convictions and fundamental interests, the chancellor declared. This is why a good trustful relationship between Bonn and Washington has existed without interruption since the fifties and until the present day, regardless of parties and persons.

SPD Chairman Willy Brandt commented on Reagan's negative attitude toward the U.S.-Soviet SALT II treaty. He declared on ARD Television that the SPD had made the ratification of this treaty a prerequisite for continuing the further implementation of the NATO decision on stationing new medium-range nuclear weapons in Europe, while at the same time offering negotiations to the Soviet Union. The great question now is when and in what manner will the United States and the Soviet Union start discussions so that they may evaluate the other partner and find out whether they can come to an agreement about realistic steps in arms limitation.

Boelling Interview

DW051317 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0715 GMT 5 Nov 80

[Herbert Schwan interview with State Secretary Klaus Boelling, chief of the Federal Government Press and Information Office; date and place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Reagan is the winner of these presidential elections and will be the 40th American president: A big Ronald Reagan victory. The Federal Government probably did not expect this.

[Answer] I think we all had doubts that the California politician would score such a clear and impressive victory. But for a second time we have seen that opinion poll institutes are not always right, they can be quite wrong as well. They have been wrong at times in the Federal Republic. The federal chancellor will send a congratulatory telegram to Ronald Reagan this morning--that is natural. He will express our desire to continue German-American relations and our relations as partners as closely as has always been the case under every president, from the days of Konrad Adenauer to Helmut Schmidt.

[Question] Ronald Reagan has no foreign policy experience whatsoever, and he has stressed repeatedly that he would reject SALT II. If I am correctly informed, the chancellor of the Federal Republic of Germany wants to bring SALT II safely under wrap and seal under any circumstances. How do you assess these things this morning?

[Answer] We know the critical positions put forward by Ronald Reagan in the election campaign with regard to SALT. I believe, however, that it would be unfair for one of the European allies, for we Europeans to begin objective discussions at this moment. A freshly elected American president as is traditional will get together with his advisers in the coming weeks to work out priorities and examine the situation.

We have noted with satisfaction that in the election campaign Ronald Reagan expressed his basis interest in good relations with the Soviet Union. We ought to give him and his advisers time to think, analyze and develop a foreign policy.

For us in Bonn it is important that the newly elected American president said in the election campaign how strongly he is interested in good relations and partnership with the allies of America and that he wants to consult them closely. This is one of the most important prerequisites for a partnership between the Federal Republic and the United States that will function well. Relations between the Federal Republic and the United States have always been determined by basic interests since the times of Adenauer and Kennedy. These interests have not changed for 30 years. I am most certain that the new American president will follow these basic lines of American foreign policy which have become part of a cultivated tradition.

PRESS PREVIEWS REAGAN ADMINISTRATION, POLICIES

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE Commentary

DW061051 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 6 Nov 80 p 1

[Commentary signed G-N.: "Europe May Hope"]

Will the future Reagan administration in Washington be so new and inexperienced as some say? The president is new, but the Republicans were in office just 4 years ago. They have a great number of experienced experts from former administrations, particularly in the fields of economic and finance policy. as well as in defense and foreign policy. George Shultz. Kissinger and Haig have been mentioned frequently recently as possible secretaries or advisers. Reagan has a large choice, in contrast to Carter. The foreign and security policy experts of the country in the renowned research institutes are mainly "Republican" oriented. Advice coming from these quarters gives one cause to expect a competent foreign policy to emerge. Realistic attention to the power policy principles of Western foreign policy can only help in the management of East-West relations. It should, therefore, not be surprising if, after a prolonged pause, the dialogue with Moscow on strategic arms gets going again. The Soviet Union will still be interested particularly if it is dealing with a government and a Congress that are capable of pursuing something other than the current way of handling "detente policy."

The first test of the political qualifications of the new president will be his choice of men for the new administration. To initial expectations can be added the following experience: With the exception of the time the great President Truman was in office, the Europeans have always gotten along better with Republican than with Democratic presidents. The foreign policy of the Republicans is usually less ambitious and less missionary. Despite modest aims, it has usually been more successful with regard to security and peace.

FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU Editorial

[Werner Holzer editorial: "Hope for Yesterday"]

[Text] In contrast to general ideas, the voters of parliamentary democracies do not always get what they have voted for. Many a candidate rules completely differently after the victory than he promised in the election campaign. It is not always due to plain opportunism, but frequently due to the new responsibility every acting politician has to bear. As regards the 1980 U.S. presidential elections, one can probably say that the majority of the people of the most powerful Western nation have gotten almost exactly what they have been longing for.

Their new president is a man who represents the longing of a nation for yesterday, for the good old days, a man who represents the very meaning of the word. Ronald Reagan with his almost 70 years may be somewhat old for his new task, he may have dyed his hair to appear younger--all this did not matter very much, because Reagan represents a picture of America most of his compatriots like best anyway.

He is optimistic (almost high spirited), he speaks like a man who was always convinced that the strong must not necessarily be alone, but that he can go his way toward success alone if need be. Ronald Reagan never gives the impression of being undecided and discouraged, even if he is. He simply faces the people, saying: I have no fears about the future, and I do not believe that the American people are afraid of the future.

It is said that faith can move mountains. That conviction is more popular in the United States than it is in old Europe. Faith is interpreted on the other side of the Atlantic also as faith in oneself, as self-confidence. "Together we will do what is necessary to get America going again." said Reagan after his landslide victory. Since for a long time most Americans have not considered Jimmy Carter capable of doing this--whatever that may mean--the current President had to accept a total defeat. Reagan certainly does not symbolize the setting out for "new frontiers," something John Kennedy promised 2 decades ago. On the contrary, Reagan stands for a return to the old familiar world behind the old frontiers where a man trusted himself, helped his neighbor and in return could call on him for help, while otherwise relying on God and good luck.

The new man heading the leading Western power certainly thinks in a less complicated way than Jimmy Carter. He is less troubled by doubts and thus more predictable in this respect at least. That can be an advantage even for those who do not share Reagan's political conviction. This "good old America," which Reagan wants to reawaken, is a rather patriarchal being. The allies of the United States should be aware of that in particular. It is an America which the new president fits--a country that does not want to be pushed around any longer like a dumb giant. Carter failed because so many Americans have been longing for such a situation. The patriarchal superfather Reagan created more hope than his adversary even among the underprivileged in the United States.

It could be that the rest of the world--and particularly the allies of the United States--will now have to become accustomed to a new America, to a country and a president who will be more content with themselves and who will show less interest and more mistrust for others. A part of "good, old and powerful America," is, after all, also the good, old isolationism, More armament and the fatal belief that only the military superiority of the United States can safeguard peace fits into all this, but solves none of the problems.

The new man says he is not afraid of the future, and one must envy him for that. Maybe he is underrating all the contradictory expectations he will have to cope with: Hopes of Latin American military dictatorships and the expectations of their democratic opponents, hopes of Israel for a pro-Israeli Reagan and contrary expectations of the Arabs and Palestinians, hopes of the Europeans for a predictable and determined U.S president together with the expectation that he will listen more to his allies.

That is quite a lot all at once. But the sad thing about America's hope for the orderly world of yesterday is the fact that the trend is in the other direction, to an unknown territory where one cannot get along only with old Boy Scout virtues and tricks.

Reagan has one thing in common with his predecessors: America expects him to do almost the impossible. If he succeeds in implementing just a bit of these expectations, that will already be quite a lot. He will experience, like Carter, that his room for maneuver in domestic and international policies is smaller than he may have hoped.

Deutschlandfunk Correspondent Report

DW061137 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0413 GMT 5 Nov 80

[Excerpts from commentary by Washington Correspondent Baukhage]

[Text] One thing can probably be said with regard to the future foreign policy course of Reagan: The difference will not be as great as one may have expected in view of the fact that Reagan has been depicted as a rightist.

The reasons are, if we are not mistaken, that a Democratic majority in Congress will be a counterbalance. Second, time and again we have seen a new president move from extremist positions toward the center. This happened in Reagan's election campaign. Third, the interests of such a great country, of such an enormous country as the United States do not change from one day to the next. A new president must accept that.

One thing can be said already, something that is of great advantage in contrast to Carter, namely, that Reagan has a more stable character, that he is a more straightforward person who is more predictable. That is naturally a great relief for the Soviets, who could never follow Carter's big leaps, who never understood him and who always mistrusted him. As regards Reagan, they know who he is, they know he is an arch conservative, and in the past the Soviets have found it best to talk to conservatives.

SCHMIDT PROCEEDS WITH BOELLING APPOINTMENT TO GDR

LD052128 Hamburg DPA in German 2010 GMT 5 Nov 80

[Text] Bonn, 5 Nov (DPA)--According to a report in the Thursday issue of BERLINER MORGENPOST, Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has given instructions that the accreditation of the Federal Republic's new permanent representative in East Berlin, Klaus Boelling, should be set in motion. The state minister at the federal chancellor's office, Huonker, is supposed to have announced this step to the GDR's permanent representative in Bonn, Ewald Moldt, as early as Tuesday. On this occasion Huonker is said to have declared that for the FRG there could not be an empty chair policy. SPD Chairman Willy Brandt had recently proposed not to fill the post of the Federal Republic's permanent representative in East Berlin for the time being, due to the GDR's policy of entrenchment.

SPD LEFTISTS SUGGEST ARMS CONTROL POLICY MEASURES

DW051509 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 5 Nov 80 p 11

[Text] A group of SPD Bundestag deputies belonging to the "parliamentary left," suggests that even the export of licenses for the production of war arms and other military equipment must be authorized. The suggestion is of significance insofar as it has been learned some time ago that German firms did not supply arms directly to South Africa, but that they supplied licenses for their production. According to the Federal Government, this has been stopped as late as in March 1978. These and other suggestions are contained in a letter addressed to Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, which was signed by Karstens Voigt, Wolfgang Roth, Georg Schlaga and Peter Paterna, (FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU editor), among others.

Dear Comrade Schmidt,

We gladly comply with your request uttered in the Bundestag faction and the federal party council to send you brief suggestions for coalition negotiations and the following government statement.

We would like you to take under consideration the following arms control policy suggestions in the coalition negotiations or in your government statement:

1. The Federal Government will initiate additional suggestions in the Atlantic alliance--such as the suggestion you have made publicly that no state should maintain more than 50 percent of the troops in the reduction area of NATO and the Warsaw Pact--which would facilitate the conclusion of a first MBFR agreement in the near future.

2. The Federal Government strongly supports the ratification of the SALT II agreement by the U.S. Senate, stating that if SALT II should fail, intensified armament in the field of nuclear medium-range missiles would dangerously increase the hazards of a new arms race and create a new situation.

3. The Federal Government sticks with the political priority of arms control and thus with the priority of negotiations with the Soviet Union, which NATO has linked with its decision to modernize its nuclear medium-range potential. The Federal Government's aim is to stabilize the balance on as low a level as possible, to curtail Soviet medium-range systems, to achieve common agreed limitation of Eastern and Western medium-range systems in Europe, in order to make superfluous the introduction of additional medium-range arms in Western Europe.

4. As before, the Federal Government supports a worldwide ban on chemical arms. It will examine in addition whether a regional agreement can be achieved in Europe on controlled prohibition of storing and using chemical arms. The Federal Government will support the idea that in NATO decisions on chemical arms, political priority will be given to the attempt to achieve arms control.

5. The coalition parties stick with their policy to limit arms exports. According to an agreement between SPD and FDP representatives of July 1980, they will establish parliamentary controls on authorizing war arms exports and other military equipment in the Foreign Policy Committee or in the Committee for Disarmament and Arms Control. The export of licenses to produce war arms and other military equipment is to become the subject of authorization.

6. In line with the Berlin party decision, a commission should be set up, dealing with the importance of the arms sector in the Federal Republic.

7. Already decided arms projects in a state of preparatory planning should be critically examined with regard to financing security policy aspects. In doing this, one should examine whether the results of additional arms control agreements could not decrease arms expenditures which are a burden both on the East and on the West. One could, for example, make binding commitments between the East and the West on confidence-creating measures and the number and stationing place of conventional arms systems.

Copies of this letter will be sent to Willy Brandt and Herbert Wehner.

With friendly greetings, 5 November.

COMMENTATOR CRITICIZES EXPECTED DEFENSE BUDGET CUTS

[Commentary signed R.H.F.: "A Poor Example"]

[Text] The next federal administration is making a mistake prior to its having come about. At least it should have never leaked out from the coalition talks to the public that the government intends to break an international commitment, unless it will not soon justify that intention publicly. It is obviously being imputed that the citizens of the Federal Republic dislike any agitation about percentages in the budget, and that the matter will pass unnoticed.

One can be certain that in the final phase of the American election campaign nobody will pay special attention to the refusal of the Germans to increase their defense budget by 3 percent. But thereafter we admire the courage in planning something that has not been safeguarded politically abroad, as far as one can see. Be it Carter of Reagan--both presidential candidates considered the 3 percent expected to be contributed by the NATO partners as too low, and there was a difference between the two only with regard to their considerably higher demand. Regardless who is the next president, he will not hesitate to demonstrate his promised foreign political energy, and in doing this he can be certain of great support by his people. The decision to make America militarily strong again emanated to a great extent from the representatives of the people, and the European public attributed too little attention to the fact that something has been going on there for 2 years. The Americans in the State Department or the Pentagon may show understanding over and over again for the special situation of the Germans. It includes--from an American point of view--quite a few concessions which the German public does not realize or register as such, for instance the Americans' renunciation with regard to German participation in safeguarding the region from where we obtain a great part of our energy. But another more primitive basic trend of America, the idea that everybody ought to look after himself, could become drastically effective on the next occasion.

It is not a matter of squinting at what others think. We ought to prevail with our will not to act as the European core of the alliance like the weaker partners act.

We must not give up marching in step with the excuse "we are so small," such as the Danes, the Dutch and the Belgians, lagging behind in the striving for orderly and firm defense. The phrase fits here: If two are doing the same thing, it still is not the same. The Federal Republic cannot and does not want to head NATO. But it is most interested in setting the best example and in letting no doubts come up with regard to its determination. One is surprised, amazed and sad because of the unexpected attack of fatigue.

DER SPIEGEL INTERVIEWS 'FORMER TERRORIST' KLEIN

DW051400 Hamburg DER SPIEGEL in German 3 Nov 80 pp 135-138

[Interview with former terrorist Hans-Joachim Klein: "Down With the Weapon and Off to the Bush"]

[Text] SPEIGEL: For more than 3 years we have been spared from terrorist attacks by the RAF [Red Army Faction]. Have the German city guerrillas been eliminated, or are they making preparations for a new strike?

Klein: Unfortunately they are probably not yet eradicated, but they have had to accept severe setbacks.

SPIEGEL: The police have shot to death two members of the so-called top group, namely Elisabeth von Dyck and Willy Peter Stoll....

Klein: Blindly and unjustifiedly. "One could have embraced Elisabeth von Dyck" in order to arrest her, a BKA [Federal Criminal Office] man even admitted.

SPIEGEL: Four others have been arrested, namely, Rolf Heissler, Rolf Clemens Wagner, Sieglinde Hoffmann and Ingrid Barabass.

Klein: These so-called investigation successes usually produce effects which are the opposite of what fighting terrorism should be. The terrorist realm uses that to instigate new hatred and to recruit new terrorists. Today it is not as easy as it was before to talk people into it, some changes have taken place in this. But that approach still works. This is the way to keep the merry-go-round of violence against violence going. It is much more important that the guerrillas deteriorate internally more and more in the meantime.

SPIEGEL: What do you mean?

Klein: More and more people quit--exactly as I did 4 years ago.

SPIEGEL: Who has quit?

Klein: Susanne Albrecht, for example. She has no longer cooperated for about 1 year; she has quit.

SPIEGEL: How do you know that?

Klein: I cannot tell you.

SPIEGEL: She was supposedly involved in the 1977 murder of Juergen Ponto, her godfather. Employees of the Ponto family almost definitely recognized her. Where is she today?

Klein: Even if I knew, I would not tell you. Not merely the cops want to know that; former comrades probably want to know it too. The one wants to have her in jail, the other wants her buried. The same applies to me. But it goes even further: Just a few months ago a so-called top terrorist quit. He tops all the lists of wanted persons.

SPIEGEL: Will you give us his name?

Klein: Yes, certainly, one ought to sometimes disseminate positive news from the terrorist realm. It is Peter Juergen Boock.

SPIEGEL: He is supposed to be the one who fired the fatal shots at Ponto. He is also suspected of having been involved in the attempt to fire a missile at the Federal Prosecutor's Office in Karlsruhe and in the kidnapping and murder of Hanns-Martin Schleyer. He is considered the permanent companion of Brigitte Mohnhaupt, the probable chief of the gang. He was arrested in Yugoslavia together with her and with Wagner and Siegline Hofmann and he was released and expelled later on.

Klein: All that is not my problem. Let Mr Herold keep his computors rattling, for me the following counts: Boock is not a terrorist any more, he put down his weapon and went off to the bush, as I did at that time. I was able to help a bit in this respect, and I am extremely happy about this.

SPIEGEL: To what extent were you able to help?

Klein: He was in a terrible situation once he had quit. He did not know what to do and he did not have a penny. Friends of mine were able to keep him at the last moment from robbing a bank. The devil only knows what would have happened if he did. Boock was able to be convinced how idiotic such a bank robbery would be, and he turned in his weapon. It was destroyed and thrown into the garbage. This whole story shows how extremely important it is that something ought to happen after appeals such as that by Federal Minister of the Interior Baum, who said: "Society must not reject anybody who wants to quit; next to all paragraphs there ought to be something else too." Bridges ought to be built for such people and a way out must be created.

SPIEGEL: What did you contribute?

Klein: You know that I wrote a book entitled, "Return to Humanity." The book will be published in France this year, and soon thereafter also in Denmark and Sweden--who knows where else as well--I wrote in the forword that the proceeds from the book ought to be used for terrorists wanting to quit. Peter Boock has read my book. I do not know whether it has influenced him. I can only hope it did. At any rate I was able to help him.

SPIEGEL: Did you give him money?

Klein: I let him have it indirectly. He needs it to fill the dangerous vacuum after his quitting in order to survive. I have not met him.

SPIEGEL: How large was the amount?

Klein: A few thousand marks--enough for the beginning. This is when one needs it most. As somebody who has quit, one cannot simply go to a factory and ask for work. Once he has established more distance from it all, he ought to appeal to the public--as I did at the time. I have quit the guerrilla club for 4 years now. Boock could give very fresh information on the individual reasons why he has quit and what is happening now in this group. He must not become a traitor, but if he simply describes his experiences in the group, he might make others falter and motivate to quit.

SPIEGEL: But not to report to the authorities.

Klein: That does not work in many cases. If somebody is wanted for murder--rightly or not--he cannot report. One cannot advise these people to go to jail for a lifetime. That does not work. But should these people therefore remain terrorists and continue to shoot around? I am decidedly against it. Therefore I propagate quitting as an alternative, as a third way, so to speak. I did not invent it, people have practiced it before me, and hardly anybody knows about it.

SPIEGEL: Who else?

Klein: Angela Luther, for example. That was by the end of 1974 or in early 1975--at any rate some time prior to the kidnapping of Lorenz, in which she was supposed to be involved, as the BKA stated; naturally it is all nonsense. Ingeborg Bartz has also quit. That must have happened at least 8 years ago. The prosecution witness, Mueller, that excellent BKA aide, once said that she has been shot to death by Andreas Baader. The BKA then had the Rhein meadows dug up.

SPIEGEL: As far as we know, Angela Luther and Ingeborg Bartz are still kept as "dangerous terrorists" on BKA lists of wanted persons.

Klein: There are obviously many file corpses [karteileichen]. Warrants must be terrifying, for otherwise they have no effect. "Use your weapons without restraint," is says, for example, under photographs of people who have not had arms for a long time. Mr Herold probably needs the whole theaterical thunder to justify his expensive police apparatus.

SPIEGEL: You obviously seem rather well informed about the terrorist realm--do you still have contacts?

Klein: Not on your life. Naturally I have absolutely no contacts any more. Some people of this realm probably would like to have some with me. I hope that they will never succeed. But indirectly I am still rather well informed, because I want to take part in the discussion on how to overcome terrorism from the inside. It has been learned, for example, that the Zurich bank robbery and the ensuing shooting late last year have created enormous quarrels in the whole outfit.

SPIEGEL: That has been written in DER SPIEGEL.

Klein: Maybe so. At any rate a part of the inner supporting circle has disengaged itself. The Zurich example shows how far the German terrorists have gotten. Because of some minor amounts of money they shoot around like idiots, creating carnage among the pedestrians on the street. That will certainly have greatly hurt them in the eyes of their misled sympathizers also. At least, I hope so.

SPIEGEL: Does this mean--the arrests, the quitting and the internal crisis taken together--that the RAF is defunct and that one must not fear anything from it?

Klein: I do not think so. But I hope that they eventually dissolve and realize that their policy and concepts simply have failed. They must note that their field of sympathizers is melting more and more. The leftist scene is not prepared any more to support these groups blindly. In the meantime the remains of the RAF, of the 2 June Movement and the revolutionary cell have merged. Due to lack of volume they have no other choice. They will certainly not be able any more to come up with general staff-like planning and great logistics. But their power might be sufficient for a few bullets or a case of explosives.

SPIEGEL: In June two German terrorists lost control of their car and raced to death: Wolfgang Beer and Juliane Plambeck. Did you know the two?

Klein: Just Juliane Plambeck. In September/October 1976, I was training her to handle arms in a Palestinian camp. Some 4 weeks earlier she had escaped from the Berlin women's prison. She was fanatically determined to implement her ideas about a political armed fight.

SPIEGEL: DER SPIEGEL published in the summer a series of three installments by Volker Speitel, a former terrorist and later witness for the prosecution. Speitel wrote "that some of those whose pictures can be seen today on the lists of wanted persons, would have done the same as Hans-Joachim Klein, if they had had contacts with similar 'somebodies' as he had." Maybe he himself would have preferred to do the same as you did.

KLEIN: He should have. I do not have much sympathy for him. I shudder when I think of the means with which he has bought his freedom--ranging to the indentification of his own wife. He made a deal with the police involving all kinds of people. With his quitting, Speitel has certainly not convinced anybody in the terrorist realm that this was the right way to do it. I feel better in my skin. He is right in describing the temptation to make an end and quit. This is, by the way, the case not only with regard to German terrorists.

SPIEGEL: Where else?

Klein: I know, for example, that this is also the case in Italy where terrorism is raging the worst. I have helped through various channels a person of the "Red Brigades" to quit. He, too, received money from me. One of the chiefs, by the way, Mario Moretti--he is considered the head of the Moro kidnappers--has also quit and he is far away.

SPIEGEL: Where do you know that from?

Klein: Naturally I will not tell you that. On 30 March a demonstration of 8,000 leftists was taking place against terrorism in Piazza Navona. I had composed a statement for that demonstration. It was read there and later on it was published by the Italian press. I appealed to the people at Piazza Navona "not only to encourage those toying with the idea to quit, but to assure them of 100 percent assistance in making that difficult step, such as giving them papers, shelter, work and so on."

SPIEGEL: Was there some response?

Klein: In past weeks there was almost some mass quitting in the most militant leftist Italian terror organization, the "Prima Linea". Some 80 people have quit. The outfit practically does not exist any more. The last incurables have joined the "Red Brigades". Naturally it would be nonsense if I claimed that success, but maybe my appeal has contributed something to it.

SPIEGEL: Would you be proud of it?

Klein: Well, that is such a pompous word. I would be extremely happy. It is sad that one cannot bring about such a campaign among the leftists in Germany. The groups can break up only internally. The police will never achieve it with their means. You know, I said in my SPIEGEL talk in 1978: "If I should succeed with this interview and by book to make 10 people quit the guerrillas, I would have achieved more than the BKA with its 100 million marks." That may sound somewhat bigmouthed to some people, but we have achieved something in the meantime.

SPIEGEL: Why don't you want to report to the authorities?

Klein: Why? In order to sit dully in a cell for a few years? Who would believe me that I was not bought secretly and that I did not make any deals with the investigators? I am neither a terrorist now, nor have I ever been a traitor. I want to keep my credibility. I can achieve that only in this way. It is certainly not comfortable. Such a double underground life--hidden from the cops and hidden from revengeful guerrilla people--is not pleasure, damn it. It is more surviving than living. The price is deprivation in some fields and renunciation of all kinds of human opportunities.

[Text] 5 Nov (AFP)--French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing today met Iraqi envoy Tariq 'Aziz, a close aide of Iraqi President Saddam Husayn on his second visit Paris leader since the outbreak of the Gulf war. [sentence as received]

Against a background of increasing attempts to find a peaceful solution to the Gulf war, current consultations between France and Iraq are being kept secret and no comment has been made on the aim of this latest visit by Mr 'Aziz who arrived yesterday.

Mr 'Aziz, who is vice-president of Iraq's Revolutionary Council, is expected to raise the question of the delivery of 60 French Mirage F1 warplanes. The aircraft have been ordered from France which is Iraq's second military supplier well behind the Soviet Union.

Iraqi pilots are undergoing training in France, but officials said that no contact is planned between Mr 'Aziz and French Defence Minister Joel le Theule.

Iraq was France's second oil supplier until it halted exports because of the war.

LE MONDE ON CAUSE OF CARTER DEFEAT, REAGAN FUTURE

[Editorial: "Rejection Phenomenon"]

[Text] The crushing repudiation of President Carter by the U.S. voters reflects above all the personal failure of a man who had scarcely more than his sincerity and good will to offer. His compatriots had no hesitation in bringing about a complete change of direction and team, preferring to break rather than renew a mandate which, they think, had brought them nothing but disappointments.

It is on his general attitude, on that famous "leadership," that Mr Carter has been judged and rejected, but his defeat would not have been so resounding if his economic policy, or what passed for an economic policy, had not met with opposition from a major section of the voters who traditionally vote Democratic. Through the continuous increase in the cost of living, inflation was making its effects felt in every home without the White House ever giving the impression of having the means of overcoming it. Ultimately, in the light of the figures, it is possible to talk of a veritable rejection phenomenon.

Throughout his presidency, Mr Carter used the national backing given to him in 1976 without succeeding in keeping the loyalty of the regional and social groups which were the foundation of his success at that time. The South, aside from Georgia, has "betrayed" him overwhelmingly. The Jewish minority seems to have mainly voted for Reagan owing to his unconditional support for Israel. The blacks were not enthusiastic. The support given to candidate Carter by the AFL-CIO labor federation did not prevent the big industrial states like Ohio and Pennsylvania from swinging to the Republican camp. The farmers took the embargo on grain to the USSR very badly. Wherever you looked you saw lack of enthusiasm and disillusion. The President's rather cold nature and his frequent vacillations worked against the emergence of the sympathetic feeling which properly exercised power always creates.

This emotional and political bankruptcy brought about the collapse of the Democratic coalition which, since Roosevelt, to a greater or lesser degree united the labor world, the minorities--especially the large Catholic minority--and the South.

The fact that a man like Ronald Reagan was enough to divide it completely suggests that its time was over and that the United States is going to enter an era of electoral instability in which no collective or corporate vote can be considered safe in advance.

To what have Mr Reagan's voters rallied? Essentially to two strong points which are not necessarily parallel. First, we must not allow the euphoria of victory to make us forget the old clientele of established reactionaries, the remnants of or the heirs to the cohorts which followed Senator Goldwater in his 1964 presidential team, including those who hark back to the cold war. However, it is not to these old-timers that Mr Reagan owes the scale of his public. He has been able to rally the mass of middle class people who want "things to change" at home and abroad and who, although enlisted under the banner of moral order which the president-elect loftily claims to follow, are pushing for change.

In what direction? It will take more than yesterday's results to reveal that. Everything will depend on the specific program proposed for this dynamic potential, in other words on the thrust which Mr Reagan gives it. He will find it difficult to bring the vision he upheld during the campaign into line with reality. His predecessor's example is there to remind him that the people's confidence, not to mention Congress' confidence, is eminently volatile in the United States.

SPANISH DEFENSE MINISTER, LE THEULE DISCUSS WEAPONS

LD051555 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 4 Nov 80 p 18

[Feliciano Fidalgo dispatch: "Rodriguez Sahagun Meets French Counterpart in Paris"]

[Text] Paris--Today sees the end of the talks which Defense Minister Agustin Rodriguez Sahagun began with his French counterpart Joel le Theule yesterday in Paris. Bilateral military and industrial cooperation with a view to Spain's greater integration into European defense formed the main topic of the French-Spanish talks, following Rodriguez Sahagun's talks with other European powers, but on this occasion the talks did not conclude with further purchases of military equipment.

"Europe must tackle the problem of building a specifically European weapons industry. No one country can do this alone. Spain must therefore remain alert to this continental evolution and cannot permit itself the luxury of remaining aloof from it." These remarks made by the Spanish minister at the press conference which he gave at the Spanish Embassy last night reflect his talks with Le Theule and his visits to several weapons factories and installations, such as the Thompson Company and the Taberny operations center.

In connection with the Europeanization of Spain's weapons industry, Rodriguez Sahagun yesterday received France's assurance regarding Spain's particpation in the manufacture of a new tank to replace the AMX 30 and the Leopard. This new vehicle is a French-German project which will be operational at the end of the decade.

He broached with his counterpart Le Theule the subject of cooperation between the countries in the building of Daphne and Aosta submarines, "which is developing in the most satisfactory way," and the maintenance of Mirage aircraft (70 Mirage III's and Mirage F-1's).

L'HUMANITE PUBLISHES JOINT COMMUNIQUE ON PCF-FLN TALKS

LD051703 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 3 Nov 80 p 9

[Text] The FLN [Algerian National Liberation Front] and PCF have issued the following communique:

At the PCF's invitation an FLN party delegation visited France from 29 through 31 October 1980. This visit, which falls within the framework of the regular consultations between the two parties, provided an opportunity for an exchange of views on questions of mutual interest between the two delegations which were headed by FLN party Central Committee member Cherif Lazhari and PCF Politburo member and Central Committee Secretary Maxime Gremetz:

(The following took part in the talks: For the FLN: FLN Central Committee member Kallah Mohamed Larbi; FLN Foreign Relations Committee member Ogab Boubakeur; Algerians in Europe Association member Chergui Said; FLN Organization Department member Falek Mohamed el-Hachemi. For the PCF: Foreign policy section members Alain Gresh and Michel Mullert; immigration section member Belkacem Ferhat; local government section member Jean-Pierre Perillaud.)

These talks were stamped with the friendship and solidarity which characterize FLN-PCF relations. The constant development of these relations confirms the broad similarity of views between the two parties and the convergence of the two parties' action in the struggle against imperialism and for peace and the establishment of a new international economic order.

The FLN delegation informed the French delegation of the extent and gravity of the El Asnam disaster and the measures taken by the Algerian Government to rebuild the city.

The PCF paid tribute to the Algerian people's dignity in these painful times and assured them of its active solidarity. It informed the Algerian delegation of the emotion felt by the French workers and the concrete actions which the PCF has already undertaken and will pursue for rebuilding aid.

The FLN thanked the PCF for its action and welcomed the French people's solidarity.

The two parties exchanged views on the development of the peoples' struggle for political and economic liberation and to consolidate their national independence and realize their legitimate aspirations to freedom, justice and progress. They noted with satisfaction the progress made in the peoples' struggle and their successes.

Faced with the growth of the peoples' struggle, the imperialist countries are trying to oppose it by reviving the arms race, establishing new military bases, interfering in countries' internal affairs and carrying out destabilizing maneuvers, thereby considerably aggravating international tension and endangering international peace and security.

Imperialism, faced with the crisis of its system, is making the developing countries and the less privileged classes in capitalist countries suffer the consequences of that crisis. It continues to obstinately reject the nonaligned movement's proposals aimed at building a new economic order and at democratizing the international institutions.

The two parties stressed the importance of the convergence between the struggles of peoples in the developed countries and those waged by peoples in developing countries against the domination and exploitation of the multinational companies and imperialism and to promote the establishment of a new international economic and political order.

The two delegations expressed their grave concern at the events which are shaking the Gulf region and the Middle East.

They note that imperialism is the sole beneficiary of this situation, which is enabling it to carry out a dangerous redeployment of military means in the region.

The two delegations once again asserted their active solidarity with the PLO, the Palestinian people's sole internationally recognized representative, and confirmed that recognition of the Palestinian people's inalienable national rights, including its right to build its own state, is the precondition for establishing a just and lasting peace.

The two delegations welcomed the West Saharan people's victories both at the international level and in the field and consider that the Saharan Democratic Arab Republic's successes will, in leading to independence, be an essential factor for peace with mutual respect and cooperation among the peoples of the region.

On the eve of the Madrid CSCE conference the two parties reaffirmed the need to make every effort to turn the Mediterranean into a zone of peace and mutually beneficial cooperation for the Mediterranean countries. In this connection they recalled the indivisible nature of security in Europe and the Mediterranean in keeping with the Helsinki Final Act, whose provisions must be implemented in full.

The two parties examined the development of relations between France and Algeria. They consider that the results of the negotiations which took place on 17-18 September 1980 between France and Algeria were the result of the Algerian Government's will, expressed on many occasions, and the French and Algerian workers' struggles to promote broad cooperation, based on relations of equality between the two countries, in mutual respect and in the two peoples' higher interest.

They think that the implementation of all the provisions of the agreements reached will reflect the effective desire for mutually beneficial cooperation.

The PCF reaffirmed its strong determination to pursue its action to ensure respect for the rights and security of Algerian workers in France and for new progress in French-Algerian cooperation.

At the end of their talks the two delegations noted with satisfaction the deep ties of friendship and solidarity which exist between the PCF and the FLN. They decided to make every effort to extend and strengthen those ties. To that end a new cooperation agreement was signed between the two parties.

[Text] Rome, 5 Nov (ANSA)--Italian Premier Arnoldo Forlani today sent the following message to Ronald Reagan: "At the moment when the American people have elected you to the highest position in the United States of America, I wish to convey my own and the Italian Government's most heartfelt best wishes for the success of your mission.

"Italy and the United States share the same ideals of liberty and democracy and are linked by traditionalities of friendship and alliance. Party Leaders View Election

AU051619 Rome ANSA in English 1530 GMT 5 Nov 80

[Text] Rome, 5 Nov, (ANSA)--The surprising strength of Republican candidate Ronald Reagan's victory over incumbent President Jimmy Carter in the United States elections was met with cautious reactions in Italy today.

Christian Democrat Party (DC) Secretary Flaminio Piccoli was admittedly hard put to comment on the results of the U.S. presidential poll. "It's hard at this time to express a pondered opinion about a free decision made by the United States electorate," he said, adding that "domestic considerations" undoubtedly motivated the choice.

Piccoli voiced the hope that the next president "pursues a close partnership with Europe, promotes close cooperation between industrialized nations and the Third World and gives high priority to the job of reviving detente and peace."

Communist Party (PCI) foreign relations chief Gian Carlo Pajetta was not at all worried about the "personality" of the new American President. "What we have to worry about is the possibility of a hard-line imperialist lobby toughening U.S. foreign policy at a time when the detente process is at a low ebb," he said.

Socialist Party (PSI) Secretary Bettino Craxi described the United States as "a strange country full of surprises" while recalling Carter's own surprisingly swift rise to the presidency 4 years ago.

"It wasn't Reagan's victory that was so surprising," the PSI leader said, noting that a Republican victory was "in the air," but "the sweeping landslide with which the former California governor won the White House." Craxi voiced the hope that Reagan enter "the category of good presidents in the Republican tradition."

According to Republican Party (RPI) Secretary Giovanni Spadolini, the United States voting public expressed its "frustration" with the "impotency" of the Carter administration on the world scene.

Reagan's sweep was termed "sensational" by Liberal Party (PLI) Secretary Valerio Zanone because it picked up so many states. The result, according to the leader of the tiny right-of-center grouping, marked a turning-point for the United States. "American democracy shows its strength in its ability to effect a change in the leadership without any trauma or uncertainty," he said, adding "a decisive era is coming up for relations between the United States and Europe."

For the secretary of the neofascist MSI party, Giorgio Almirante, Reagan's voters had "good sense, a sense of responsibility and a desire to restore a sense of security to the free world...." It was in these terms that Almirante described Reagan's electoral sweep as a "rightwing victory."

The chairman of the Foreign Relations Commission in the Italian lower house, Giulio Andreotti, voiced concern over the prospects of getting the SALT II agreement ratified. The second Soviet-American strategic arms limitation treaty, the former Italian premier noted, was still not ratified 17 months after its signing, while Carter had a strong Democratic majority in Congress. Andreotti conceded that Reagan's proposal for linking the fate of SALT II with an eventual SALT III agreement was worthy of study, although his own opinion was that SALT II should be ratified as such in the interest of "a loyal dialogue" between Washington and Moscow. He also insisted on the idea of entrusting the U.S.-Iranian hostage affair to the American Congress and Iranian Parliament as advocated by the recent interparliamentary conference upon an Italian proposal.

RADICAL PARTY ELECTS NEW POLITICAL SECRETARY

[Text] Rome, 4 Nov (ANSA)--Italy's small but vocal Radical Party last night elected its new political secretary, twenty-six-year old Francesco Rutelli. The election came at the end of the Radical Party congress here. Rutelli succeeds Giuseppe Rippa who will fill the lower house seat vacated by the party's charismatic leader Marco Pannella who stepped down Sunday.

Pannella will continue his duties as M.P. in the European Parliament in Strasbourg. He is believed to be drafting a new policy for the Radicals aimed at closer ties with the Socialist Party. Rutelli's nomination was proposed by Rippa after he accepted to fill Pannella's seat in the Italian Parliament. Before electing the new secretary, the congress approved a political motion asserting that the referendum on abortion--promoted by the Radicals to repeal current legislation which the party considers too restrictive--must be firmly defended. The motion also stressed the Radicals' responsibility "in non-violent struggles against famine and war".

'TENSE DIALOGUE' BETWEEN U.S., SOVIET CSCE DELEGATES

LD052305 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1830 GMT 5 Nov 80

[Excerpt] This morning's session of the preparatory talks for the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, to be held in Madrid, featured a tense dialogue between the Soviet and U.S. delegates when the latter set forth their future positions at the conference. During the session comment centered upon the election of Ronald Reagan as the new U.S. president and upon the tough arguments between Soviets and Americans. The chief of the U.S. delegation said that his country's position at the conference would not be affected by the presidential change.

The Soviet ambassador in Madrid, Yuriy Dubinin, criticized the American stance by saying that the U.S. attitude had been invariable after 9 weeks of fruitless work at the preparatory sessions for the conference. The spokesman for the Soviet delegation at the conference described as obstructionist the tone used by the U.S. representatives and said that the harsh tone they were using would further hamper the achievement of a compromise acceptable to both delegations.

POLITICAL LEADERS COMMENT ON REAGAN ELECTION VICTORY

Foreign Minister's Comments

LD060246 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2300 GMT 5 Nov 80

[Text] Minister of Foreign Affairs Jose Pedro Perez Llorca considers that, with regard to Spanish interests in the United States, the election of any American president is practically immaterial. The American policy in this sense, he said, is a policy dictated by company boards and, in the economic aspects to which I am now referring, is very much in the service of the interests of American industry. In this sense I do not think that there is any change. In the political field, he added, Mr Reagan seems to place great stress on Spanish accession to the European Communities and NATO, and, should this be the case, it could also be a positive factor in our coming closer to these institutions.

PSOE Leader's Views

[Text] The secretary general of the Spanish Socialist Workers Party, Felipe Gonzalez, commenting on Reagan's election, said that the change in the American presidency is not going to be substantial for Spain. The Socialist leader said that the value of the choice between the different candidates is (?depreciated) because there is an institutional framework--above all, of a financial and industrial nature--which makes the figure of the president count less than the dynamics which give its (?color) to domestic and international politics.

Reagan's election from a point of view of domestic politics is a clear manifestation, said Felipe Gonzalez, of a conservative tendency in American society, and I think that it is best to recognize this fact and not try to explain it with deceitful words. There is a shift to the right in American society which is going to be reflected above all in socioeconomic questions.

Carrillo Statement

[Text] Santiago Carrillo, secretary general of the PCE, has said that Reagan's election is going to complicate the world situation and that Spanish entry into NATO is now more unacceptable. Mr Carrillo said:

Reagan represents a reactionary tendency in favor of the arms race, tension and the fight against the forces of the left in the countries under American influence. The danger of an increase in international tension, in the politics of blocs and in the arms race has become more acute. The danger of a real hecatomb has increased.

The United States, he said, is a long way from Europe and thinks itself as being far away from any theater of war, but we Europeans are at the center of the whirlpool, at the epicenter of the earthquake, and if that earthquake were to happen we would be its first victims. For this reason, I think that, at the moment, we have to keep the politics which Reagan represents at a distance from European politics.

UCD, PSOE officials

[Text] There are some first reactions to the U.S. election outcome which we have been getting from Spanish political parties. First we have Javier Ruperez, UCD [Union of Democratic Center] secretary for international relations:

[Begin recording] It is clear that the American electorate has opted for the need for change. [passage indistinct] the new administration, I do not expect spectacular changes in political action from this new administration, although naturally I do expect changes of emphasis. [end recording]

From the governing party, over to the main opposition party, Emilio Menendez del Valle is adviser for international affairs to the PSOE [Spanish Socialist Workers Party] secretary general:

[Begin recording] Well, I would take a chance on saying that nobody could claim that an era (?propitious for) detente and flexibility in international relations is being opened up with the arrival--assuming this is definitely confirmed--of Mr Reagan in the White House. As we all know, he is a person who is inclined to take a hard line, but that is the way with international politics and therefore [words indistinct] the future may be formed by political relations outside the United States, so that a start might be made toward a breakthrough in international politics. Specifically, then, although Reagan's victory is still not officially confirmed, the way politics works leads us to take it as definite and to begin thinking about working in the international field with Mr Reagan. [end recording]

GONZALEZ DESCRIBES VISIT TO ALGERIA AT PRESS CONFERENCE

[EFE dispatch on Spanish Socialist Workers Party (PSOE) Secretary General Felipe Gonzalez 31 October press conference in Algiers: "I Trust in Polisario's Common Sense"]

[Text] Algiers, 31 October--At the end of his 5-day visit to Algiers at the invitation of the Algerian National Liberation Front [FLN], PSOE Secretary General Felipe Gonzalez seemed satisfied with his visit and said, in connection with the release of the 38 Spanish fishermen held by Polisario, that "I trust in the Saharans' common sense and strategy."

The Spanish Socialist leader held a press conference this morning with foreign correspondents accredited in Algiers, during which he discussed his meeting with Algerian President Chadli Bendjedid, which he described as "very cordial and far-reaching," and the similarity of "viewpoints," analyses and conclusions" between the PSOE and the FLN with regard to both bilateral and international issues.

According to Felipe Gonzalez these similarities are apparent in "the concept of the Mediterranean as a sea of peace and cooperation." During his stay in the Algerian capital Felipe Gonzalez met not only with President Chadli Bendjedid but also with Prime Minister Mohamed Abdelghani and the energy and finance ministers, as well as Saharan Information Minister Salek Ould Salek.

With regard to the Polisario-Spanish Government talks on the 38 Spanish fishermen currently in progress in the Algerian capital, the "opportuneness" of which was questioned by the Socialist leader on his arrival, Gonzalez said that during his talks with the Polisario Front "it was decided to postpone a visit to the Saharan Democratic Arab Republic to enable the Polisario and the Spanish Government to reach an agreement.

"In connection with this issue," he continued, "there has arisen a state of confusion which I reject. We want to reestablish clarity because the confusion has not been accidental. I do not know who is responsible for it, though I have my suspicions, and I do not want to increase the confusion."

With regard to the prospects for the Spanish fishermen's release, he continued as follows: "The Polisario Front knows the Socialists' position, and I confirm the trust I have always had in its common sense and strategy." "There are no preconditions for my visit to the Western Sahara," he stressed: "There are only political situations and states of public opinion."

The PSOE secretary general also stated that "the PSOE and the FLN have similar viewpoints, analyses and conclusions on bilateral issues and international issues," as we discovered, he said, in our discussion of the Iran-Iraq war, the Saharan conflict, the Namibian problem, the Middle East and the entire concept of the Mediterranean as a sea of cooperation.

"This similarity," he said, "provides a very strong foundation for relations between the parties and the Spanish and Algerian peoples. If one regards the Mediterranean as a sea of peace and cooperation," he said, "this implies the need for solid relations."

In this connection, with reference to the Madrid CSCE conference, the Socialist leader said that "the countries adjoining the Mediterranean must be involved in these security and cooperation issues." Tomorrow morning a PSOE-FLN joint communique and protocol agreement will be published in Algiers and Madrid. Felipe Gonzalez arrived in Algeria on Monday and returned to Madrid this afternoon on a regular Iberia flight.

PRESS COMMENTS ON U.S. ELECTION OUTCOME

LD051306 Stockholm Domestic Service in Swedish 1130 GMT 5 Nov 80

[Text] Ronald Reagan has been elected next president of the United States. So far, most papers have not had time to comment on this, but the afternoon papers have managed some comment.

[Words indistinct] is the key to Ronald Reagan's success, the Liberal Party EXPRESSEN writes. The tragic thing is that those who wanted a change did not know what they voted for. The presidential term which Reagan will begin soon is a black hole, and it is not he who will determine its content, but his assistants. Some find this a calming thought, but with regard to international affairs in particular, Reagan has shown his ineptitude and lack of a sense of reality, which in a sensitive situation could have disastrous consequences. Even as a presidential candidate he managed to cause minor crises and was forced to backtrack and withdraw his words in a manner unacceptable in a president.

So the world now looks to Washington with anxiety. The election of Ronald Reagan could very well lead to a result directly opposite to what the voters intended. It could increase the United States' isolation and strengthen decisiveness in those countries, for instance in Western Europe, which want to conduct foreign policy in accordance with their own interests and their own evaluation, EXPRESSEN says.

The Social Democratic paper AFTONBLADET says: As a guiding principle for his campaign, Reagan made threats to conduct a tougher policy toward the Soviet Union. To what extent this will happen remains to be seen, and possibly Reagan's aggressivenss will be damped down when faced with the cold facts of the big power political situation. But the risk of a new era of confrontation policies is great, and this would have repercussions far beyond Russian-American relations. There will also be a period of uncertainty in this connection before Reagan's foreign policy takes shape. The rightwing forces have gained ictory in the United States, and the world must adapt itself to a chillier international climate, AFTONBLADET concludes:

The independent Liberal KVALLSPOSTEN says that now the United States is taking a big step backward. It is a poor reflection on American politics that so many voters have fallen for simple declarations by a person who, to borrow an expression from an entirely different political context, "has learned nothing." But the disappointment directed against Carter is in fact disappointment over the fact that the world has changed. One need only put the question of how President Reagan would have handled Zimbabwe, Nicaragua, not to mention the Middle East, in order to understand how far the United States has come from the policy of the big stick. Now the clock will be turned back. Now that the voters have demanded a strong president and a strong United States, they have also failed, they have failed those ideals they stood up for 4 years ago, KVALLSPOSTEN says.

OAU'S STEVENS CONFERS WITH THATCHER ON AFRICAN ISSUES

AB051915 Paris AFP in English 1750 GMT 5 Nov 80

[Text] London, 5 Nov (AFP)--Sierra Leone President Siaka Stevens, this year's chairman of the Organization of African Unity (OAU), discussed the African political scene during talks here today with British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington.

British sources said later that Mr. Stevens had been particularly concerned about developments in Namibia, Chad, Western Sahara and the Horn of Africa.

The sources added that Britain had agreed to provide aid worth 3.5 million pounds sterling to Sierra Leone over the next three years, to be used mainly in developing the west African state's roads and for improving transport.

Mrs Thatcher and Mr Stevens agreed on the need to strengthen bilateral economic relations and to hold more frequent high-level talks.

After the talks Mr Stevens was Mrs Thatcher's guest at her official residence at 10 Downing Street.

The visiting president's programme tomorrow includes lunch with the lord mayor of London, Sir Peter Gadsden, and talks with Commonwealth Development Corporation Managing Director Sir Peter [name indistinct].

UK GOVERNMENT TO VOTE IN UN FOR BELIZE INDEPENDENCE

LD051329 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 5 Nov 80 p 4

[David Adamson report: "Britain Backs UN on Belize Independence"]

[Text] Britain will vote in favour of a United Nations resolution calling on it to grant Belize independence before the end of next year.

The resolution, which has been approved by the Decolonisation Committee, is expected to come before the General Assembly shortly.

It is not mandatory but acceptance of its terms coupled with British insistence that the Belize question must be settled speedily means that the colony is headed for independence within the next 12 months.

One important development is that the Americans, who have been sitting on the fence between Guatemala and Belize, have now come down on the side of the latter.

On the last occasion Belize came up in the United Nations the Americans abstained, but this time they voted for the resolution in the Decolonisation Committee.

Talks between Britain and Guatemala on Belize are expected to be resumed soon in New York. The Guatemalans have not relinquished their territorial claim to Belize but their position has been seriously weakened by a further erosion of support in the United Nations.

No government, apart from Guatemala, has indicated it will vote against the resolution and it is likely there will be only eight abstentions, most of them right-wing countries which need Guatemala's support on human rights issues.

The resolution calls on Britain to convene a constitutional conference for Belize. No date has been fixed, although some time in January has been mentioned.

SEVENTH MEETING OF INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS HELD 5 NOV

NC052112 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1730 GMT 5 Nov 80

[Text] The seventh meeting of the new round of intercommunal talks was held in Ledra Palace this afternoon. A UN statement on the 3-hour meeting said that a useful and constructive exchange of views took place on the proposals submitted by both sides on the constitutional issue, and that the meeting was held in an atmosphere of good will and sincerity. The next meeting will be held on 12 November and will deal with the territorial aspect of the problem.

In reply to correspondents' questions before the talks, Gobbi, the UN secretary general's special representative, said that the New York talks proposed by Mr Waldheim will be postponed for the time being as neither side was receptive to such talks.

In answer to a question on the New York talks regarding whose initiative it was, Mr Gobbi said that all initiatives originate in New York. It is a fact, he added, that all initiatives are approved by New York before they are submitted. He concluded: There is no difference between the secretary general and me.

In a statement, Mr Ioannidhis, the Greek Cypriot representative in the inter-Cypriot talks, said that the debate on the constitutional aspect of the Cyprus problem would continue in today's meeting. As you are aware, Mr Ioannidhis added, certain proposals have been submitted on this subject and we hope and expect that, through a spirit of good will, a common ground will be found for this aspect of the problem. Mr Ioannidhis also stressed that the constitutional and the territorial issues are the most significant and essential aspects of the Cyprus issue because they will lead to a resolution of the problem.

In a statement, Onan, the Turkish Cypriot representative to the talks, said that in today's meeting his side expected to hear the Greek Cypriot side's views on the proposals that he had submitted regarding the constitutional aspect of the Cyprus issue, and that he would comment on the Greek Cypriot side's proposals. Asked to comment on Denktas' statement that the Cyprus issue can only be solved through a general agreement, Mr Onan replied: The agreement that the sides have reached, and which is referred to in the opening statement by the secretary general, speaks about a general agreement. Of course, Mr Onan added, if an agreement is reached on the Varosha issue, resettlement will take place. However, Mr Onan has made it clear that it is too early to speak about an agreement.

In reply to a question regarding the prospects of achieving an agreement, the Turkish Cypriot interlocutor described the Varosha proposals he submitted as very constructive. It is up to the other side, he added, to give its views. In reply to the question of a common ground between the Turkish Cypriot side's proposals and the proposals that were submitted first by the Greek Cypriot side, Mr Onan said that there is such ground on certain points.

'CONSTITUTIONAL' ISSUES DISCUSSED DURING INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS

[Text] The Cyprus intercommunal talks which aim at the peaceful settlement of the Cyprus problem resumed at 1630 at the Ledra Palace today and constitutional issues were discussed. A statement issued by the United Nations at the end of the talks says that a long, useful and constructive discussion was held today. It adds that the two sides posited their proposals in connection with the issue. Noting that the talks were held in an atmosphere of good will and sincerity, the statement says the next meeting will be held at 1630 on Wednesday, 19 November, and the territorial issue will be discussed.

The Turkish side at the talks was represented by Umit Onan and his advisers and the Greek Cypriot side by Ioannidhis and his advisers. The UN secretary general's special envoy in Cyprus, Hugo Gobbi, attended the talks on behalf of the United Nations.

KLIRIDHIS CRITICIZES REJECTION OF WALDHEIM'S INVITATION

NC060845 Nicosia I MAKHI in Greek 6 Nov 80 p 6

[Excerpt] Speaking to Larnaca press on his return to Cyprus yesterday afternoon, Democratic Rally Chairman Glavkos Kliridhis stated that the Greek Cypriot rejection of Mr Waldheim's invitation for a meeting of Foreign Minister Rolandhis with Mr Atakol, "foreign minister" of the "state," will make the return of the inhabitants of Famagusta to their homes difficult.

Mr Kliridhis described the rejection as a big mistake and said that there is no ground for the argument that separate meetings between Foreign Minister Rolandhis and the UN secretary general, and between Mr Atakol and Mr Waldheim would be tantamount to recognition of the Turkish Cypriot state, particularly since Makarios, Kiprianou and Mr Denktas had meetings with Mr Waldheim and even concluded separate agreements [the Makarios-Denktas and Kiprianou-Denktas agreements].

Mr Kliridhis added: I believe the rejection of the invitation was a mistake in another respect as well; it would have been preferable to accept the UN secretary general's position and, if we disagreed, to explain our disagreements to him.

MIKHAILIDHIS ANALYZES PRINCIPLES OF NEW DEMOCRATIC FRONT

NC051322 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 5 Nov 80

[Text] In a press conference held today, Mr Mikhailidhis, chairman of the New Democratic Front [NEDIPA] Party and house president, analyzed his party's declaration of principles to be submitted to its founding congress next month.

The declaration deals with the island's political, social and economic problems and explains the party's positions. In connection with the national issue, the declaration says that Cypriot Hellenists will survive only if they succeed in establishing a joint future and a joint course with the Turkish Cypriots, and generally with all the people irrespective of ethnic heritage.

The declaration adds: Cyprus must be a territorially integral, independent, sovereign, nonaligned and demilitarized state in which the unity of the country and the people will be ensured within a federal, bicommunal and biregional state. The basis for such a solution are the Makarios-Denktas and the Kiprianou-Denktas agreements. The declaration stresses that there is no other course than the talks for the solution of the internal aspect of the Cyprus problem, and it speaks in favor of strengthening the talks' functioning and a clear approach to the talks.

In connection with the country's political life, the declaration says that NEDIPA believes in political pluralism, in the need for political revival and the functioning of parties based on principles and not on the personality of party leaders. The declaration refers in detail to the NEDIPA positions toward matters of social and economic policy. In connection with economic policy, the declaration says the goal of the party is continuous evolution of the economy, prosperity, equal development of all regions, and a fair distribution of the national product. It also says that it believes in the system of mixed economy.

Answering questions, Mr Mikhailidhis said NEDIPA will go to the coming presidential elections independently. Mr Mikhailidhis also stated he is at the disposal of the president of the republic and the government for any offer to serve the national issue. Answering another question, Mr Mikhailidhis said it is not proper to hold talks parallel to the intercommunal dialogue, and he agreed with Foreign Minister Rolandhis' stand that he is ready for talks with Mr Waldheim whenever the UN secretary general should invite him to this effect. Finally he said the Famagusta issue could serve as a point of contact or bridge between the two communities.

O AGON CRITICIZES SOVIET POLICY TOWARD CYPRUS

["My Opinion" column by the "Observer": "At Least They Should Not Mock Us--Soviet Officials and Foreign Interventions in Cyprus"]

[Text] "The Soviet Union opposes any form of intervention in Cyprus' internal affairs by foreign powers." This statement was made by Mr Ivan Sharov, Soviet Embassy press attache in Nicosia. However, these theoretical declarations which are repeated by Soviet officials--that they oppose foreign interventions in Cypriot affairs--causes laughter among the Cypriot people, if they do not constitute clear mockery. During the past 6 years, Cyprus has been the victim of continuous outside intervention. The Cypriot people have paid for these interventions with their blood. Yet, the Soviet Union never felt the need to move even its small finger in order to stop these interventions.

The Soviet Union says it opposes foreign interventions in Cyprus. But what was the 1974 coup? What was the July invasion, Attila 2, and the continuing occupation and maiming of a nonaligned country? What is all this? Do they not constitute foreign interventions? What has the Soviet Union done in order to foil or to neutralize these interventions? Moscow watched indifferently as the tanks of the Greek junta destroyed a democratic regime headed by the leader who integrated Cyprus into the nonaligned world. It watched indifferently as Turkish tanks mutilated a nonaligned country. And even today, it is indifferently watching Attila complete 6 years of occupying half of Cyprus.

The Cypriot people justifiably expected the Soviet Union to provide their cause with something more than the standard declarations. They expected more practical help, but they were miserably disappointed. Now they see that they are being mocked as well. If the Union is unable to give Cyprus what it expects, at least do not sprinkle salt on Cyprus' wounds. We looked for the Soviet Union during the crucial hours; but we did not find it. And the last 6 tragic years have convinced the Cypriot people that the Soviet Union neither wants to stop foreign interventions at our country's expense nor to help us in a more practical way.

[Text] Ankara, 5 Nov (AA)--Turkey does not doubt the new U.S. president would maintain and strive to develop "friendly close relations and cooperation Turkey has always had with the U.S.," Foreign Ministry spokesman, Ambassador Savlet Aktug said today, stressing Turkish-American relations had a special significance within NATO.

The spokesman had been asked to comment on the outcome of the U.S. presidential elections. Noting that elections were a domestic issue, he expressed the wish that the results would bring happiness to the American people.

FOREIGN MINISTER TURKMEN LEAVES FOR SAUDI ARABIA VISIT

TA061009 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0900 GMT 6 Nov 80

[Text] Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen left on an official visit to Saudi Arabia by air this morning. In a statement at Ankara's Esenboga Airport before his departure, Turkmen said that regional issues concerning the two countries will be discussed during his meetings with the Saudi Foreign Minister. Turkmen noted that recent developments in the Middle East, especially the war between Iran and Iraq, as well as the Palestinian issue, will be discussed during the talks.

Replying to a question, Turkmen said he did not believe that the change of presidents in the United States would cause a significant change in Turkish-U.S. relations.

Referring to the visa requirement imposed by certain European countries on Turkish citizens, the foreign minister explained that talks were underway with the relevant countries to solve the problem through diplomatic channels. Turkmen added that at this stage the government was not considering imposing a visa requirement for these countries.

HURRIYET COMMENTS ON 'WALDHEIM OPERATION' ON CYPRUS

NC050947 Istanbul HURRIYET in Turkish 4 Nov 80 pp 1, 11

[By Ziya Akcapar]

[Text] Nicosia (HURRIYET)--"The Waldheim operation," based on machinations behind closed doors, aimed at securing "the immediate" return of 35,000 Greek Cypriots to Varosha against a few insignificant concessions to be made to the Turkish Cypriots, has ended in fiasco for the time being.

According to reliable sources, "the project" was first submitted to President Carter by the Greek and the Greek Cypriot lobby in the United States as an "election bid", then it was approved by the "White House", and "following the completion of the necessary contacts" it is believed to have been forwarded to the parties concerned under the signature of the UN secretary general. This is how the whole affair has developed: Greek Cypriot Foreign Minister Nikos Rolandhis reacted sharply against the invitation because he had not obtained adequate "information" from New York in good time regarding the contents of the message inviting him to New York.

Rolandhis is quoted as saying: "The intercommunal talks are continuing in a cordial and constructive atmosphere. Creating a new channel of contacts in New York while talks are going on in Nicosia may complicate matters."

In his reply to Waldheim's special envoy Hugo Gobbi, Rolandhis also stated that "meeting the foreign minister of the Turkish Cypriot side at the same conference table could be construed as a recognition of the dual administration in the north"

Soon after Rolandhis' announcement, warnings were received by various channels regarding the Waldheim operation. This time, realizing that he had missed a great historic opportunity, Rolandhis stated that "The Waldheim call had not been rejected by the government; he had merely expressed his personal views and had asked the UN secretary general for additional information regarding his intentions."

The Turkish Cypriot side, on the other hand, has undergone anxious moments since the message was received last Friday. The contents of the message accepts the "return of Varosha" as a fait accompli and implies that any "counterconcessions" that might be secured for the Turkish Cypriots would be discussed in New York.

The TFSC Foreign Minister Kenan Atokol referred the matter to Denktas and the Council of Ministers. But no one had adequate information regarding the "prior contacts and agreements" connected with the "Varosha operation" which was devised in Washington and signed by Waldheim.

A competent official of the TFSC commented: "If there is any one who would put himself in the position of the Turkish nation and give Varosha away and freeze the Cyprus dispute for a long time, that person should have the courage to put his signature to such an agreement."

In the meantime, President Denktas was "suddenly" taken ill yesterday. His doctors have advised him to have "complete rest" as otherwise his heart might take him by surprise at any moment. Upon this, Denktas left Nicosia with his wife and arrived in Istanbul for some time for a rest.

On the other hand. Denktas' sudden indisposition has led to varying interpretations in Cyprus. Political circles said: "Denktas does not believe that giving away Varosha would resolve the Cyprus dispute. It is understood that the project envisages certain concessions such as lifting the economic embargo on Varosha. But what assurance does this carry? If the Greek Cypriots deny tomorrow--as they have done in the past--the concessions which they pretend to have accepted today, what will the situation be once Varosha, our most important bargaining point, is lost. This is what has made Denktas ill."

On the other hand, Denktas arrived in Istanbul by air yesterday afternoon. Refraining from making a political statement, he merely said to journalists at the Yesilkoy Airport: "I have come to Istanbul at my doctor's advice."

TURKISH CYPRIOT DELEGATION ARRIVES FOR ECONOMIC TALKS

[Text] A Turkish Cypriot delegation headed by Prime Minister of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus Mustafa Cagatay, arrived in Ankara this evening for a 3-day official visit. Cagatay was received at Ankara Esenboga Airport by State Minister and Deputy Prime Minister Zeyyat Bavkara.

In a statement at the airport, Cagatay said that the Turkish Cypriot community's economic and financial problems would be discussed during these contacts in Ankara. Baykara noted that the government would extend the help necessary to solve the problems of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus.

During its talks in Ankara--besides economic and financial matters--the Turkish Cypriot delegation will also review recent political developments.

FRG PARLIAMENTARIAN HOLDS NEWS CONFERENCE IN ANKARA

TA051409 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1310 GMT 5 Nov 80

[Text] Ankara, 5 Nov (AA)--Federal German Social Democratic Member of Parliament Ludwig Fellermaier, in Turkey to see the situation in the wake of the Sep 12 military takeover, told a press conference Tuesday evening he would be leaving Turkey with the hope that Turkey would "return to democracy." Noting his conviction that Republican People's Party (suspended since Sep 12 along with other political parties) would play an important role in such a return, Fellermaier added: "What counts for us is return to true democracy."

Fellermaier, visiting Turkey on behalf of Social Democratic Party of Federal Germany, went on to say that before Sep 12, true democracy existed in Turkey but rightist and leftist acts of terrorism rendered it inoperative.

During his talks with Turkish officials, Fellermaier discussed various issues ranging from the Islamic economic cooperation conference underway in Ankara to "Turkish return to democracy" and the Federal German decision to impose visa requirement on Turkish nationals wishing to visit Federal Germany to halt an inflow of Turkish migrants seeking employment.

Turkish criticism of the Federal German visa decision was justified to some extent but Bonn was, in some aspects, justified too, he noted.

During his stay in Ankara, Fellermaier visited a number of government officials and ex president of the Republican People's Party Bulent Ecevit to whom he presented a message from SPD leader Willy Brandt.

PAHR OPENS PALESTINE CONFERENCE IN VIENNA

[Text] Vienna--In his speech on Wednesday marking the opening of the international conference on the Palestine issue currently being held in Vienna, Foreign Minister Pahr condemned the Israeli settlement policy, the new Jerusalem law, as well as the expulsion of freely elected Arab mayors by the Israeli occupation authorities.

Pahr said that a solution of the Middle East problem was possible only if the following four basic realities were taken into consideration: 1) recognition of Israel's right to existence within secured borders; 2) recognition of the existence and the rights of the Palestinian people; 3) recognition of the PLO as the representative of that people; and 4) respect for the principles of international law according to which the forcible occupation of territories is absolutely impermissible.

The conference is being attended by about 100 international law and human rights experts, including prominent representatives of the Jewish and Palestinian sides. The mayor of Arab Jerusalem, Ruh al-Khatib, openly professed his conviction that the PLO is the only legitimate representative of the Palestinians and thanked Austria and in particular Chancellor Kreisky for the friendly attitude toward the Palestinian people.

FINANCE MINISTER SAYS SCHILLING WILL REMAIN STABLE

AU051447 Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German 5 Nov 80 p 10

[Excerpt] The Austrian schilling will remain a hard currency. Finance Minister Androsch stated on Tuesday after the cabinet meeting that the Austrian schilling will continue to remain stable vis-a-vis the currencies of Austria's most important trade partners, namely, the FRG and Switzerland. In the past Austria has not oriented itself on the fluctuations of the U.S. dollar either, Androsch declared. However, Austria will not slavishly go along with any Deutsch mark fluctuation, he said. Regarding the discussion about a possibly imminent Deutsch mark devaluation, the finance minister said that such a step is not justified in view of the stable economic conditions existing in the FRG. FRG State Secretary for Economics Schlecht, who gave a lecture on economic prospects for the 1980's at the general assembly of the German Trade Chamber in Austria on Tuesday, described a Deutsch mark devaluation as "not expedient."

RECORD FOREIGN TRADE DEFICIT IN FIRST THREE QUARTERS

AU051517 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 5 Nov 80 p 7

[Summary] In the first 9 months of 1980 Austria imported 234.56 billion schillings worth of goods, that is 40.56 billion schillings more than during the corresponding 1979 period, according to a report by the Central Statistics Office. In the same period, exports went up considerably slower, by 17.55 billion schillings or 12 percent, to 166.23 billion schillings. The resulting deficit of 68.33 billion schillings is 51 percent higher than a year ago. In the first 3 quarters of 1980, 63 percent of Austria's total imports came from the EC region, while 55 percent of all exports went to EC countries. The share of EC trade in Austria's total deficit is 81 percent. The only favorable balance in the same period was obtained in trade with EFTA countries, where Austrian exports exceeded imports by 2.13 billion schillings. In trade with East European countries, Austria incurred a deficit of 3.17 billion schillings, with imports being 33 percent and exports only 4 percent higher than during the corresponding 1979 period.

SCHMIDT VIEWS EAST-WEST RELATIONS, GOVERNMENT POLICIES

[Text] Bonn, 7 Nov (DPA)--Following the election of the new U.S. President, Ronald Reagan, Federal Chancellor Schmidt considers a "pause for thought" inevitable in the relations between the two world powers, the United States and the USSR, although he expects a continuation of the East-West dialogue in the coming year.

In a DPA interview Schmidt said today that the "inevitable pause for thought" necessitated by the formation of a new government in Washington, which he does not regard as the start of a standstill in East-West relations, will probably also have an effect on the CSCE followup conference in Madrid, the Vienna talks on forces reduction in Europe and the U.S.-Soviet negotiations in Geneva on medium-range strategic missiles. Even so, the United States and the USSR both have a continued interest in disarmament negotiations.

In his first interview since his reelection as head of government, Schmidt also stressed as a result of the coalition talks the Federal Government's readiness and intention to continue its policy of cooperation with East Europe, especially with the GDR, despite the recent fence-building measures, and rejected any retaliatory measures against East Berlin. On the other hand, he was doubtful of any rapid progress being possible. Overcoming the present "severe setback" in relations with the GDR also depends on the overall political situation in the world.

On domestic policy, the chancellor stressed that the difficult financial situation does not mean that the policy of reforms has been abandoned, although reforms costing a great deal of money will have to wait. The SPD and FDP will seek an early agreement on legislation concerning joint decision-making in the coal and steel industry, which was not reached during the coalition talks.

CABINET MEMBERS 'CONFIDENT' OF GOOD COOPERATION WITH U.S.

Genscher Interview

LD071228 Hamburg DPA in German 1145 GMT 7 Nov 80

[Text] Bonn, 7 Nov (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Genscher is confident that cooperation between Bonn and the new U.S. administration will be good. In a Deutschlandfunk interview Genscher said today that the President-elect Reagan has already declared that he is ready to engage in negotiations on SALT II in a wider context. He is firmly convinced, Genscher said, that the future U.S. administration will make every effort to guarantee the security of all its partners. It will also demonstrate, he believe, that it is determined to engage in a dialogue with the USSR on all major issues in order to achieve arms control and disarmament provided that the other side plays its part.

He has no doubt that Reagan will do everything to safeguard an equilibrium of strength by the requisite Western effort. At the same time the future president can be relied upon to try and achieve by talks on arms control and disarmament such an equilibrium at the lowest possible level of armaments. One of the reasons why he is confident that the foreign policy of the new U.S. administration will be steady and predictable is the choice of advisors of the new U.S. president. Bonn has worked with them in the past to formulate common policies.

Alois Mertes, the new spokesman of the CDU/CSU Bundestag group on international affairs, said today that the CDU/CSU for reasons of safeguarding peace and solidarity with the alliance partners, continues to be in favor of a U.S.-Soviet SALT II agreement which is balanced, clear and verifiable and which does not favour world-wide expansionist strategy. The CDU/CSU welcomes Reagan's intention to hold new negotiations with the USSR on SALT II.

Boelling Statement

LD061358 Hamburg DPA in German 1333 GMT 6 Hov 80

MEDIA REACTIONS TO REAGAN ELECTION VICTORY

7 Nov Press Review

DW071136 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0605 GMT 7 Nov 80

[Press review on Ronald Reagan's election victory]

[Text] FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG writes: The Moscow party leaders would have preferred to have Carter been reelected President. Now they will have to deal with Reagan, and we will again see that the Soviet Union, which has a ruling system that is unmatched when it comes to rigidity, can quickly adapt itself to the change in world political realities. In Reagan's case it does not merely mean increased vigilance. The new American president also carries an advantage for the Soviet leaders: Reagan is much less irrational than Carter; he will be more predictable for Moscow. That must be a relief for the Soviet leaders.

WESTDEUTSCHE ALLGEMEINE of Essen notes: Soviet commentators point out with good reason the bases of the special relations joining both superpowers. It was not Carter but Nixon who in 1972 took up the formula of approximately equal strength. Both had tried to stabilize the strategic balance with the SALT treaties. Reagan also wants to conclude new treaties with the Soviet Union, but before that, he wants to reestablish the military strength and even superiority of the United States through massive rearmament. If Reagan means what he said in the election campaign, it would be the opening shot of a new arms race, the outcome of which is unknown. Such prospects are alarming not merely for the Soviets, who are already groaning under the burden of their armament, but for the Europeans and not least for the Americans themselves, who would have to pay the lion's share.

AACHENER ZEITUNG notes: The Kremlin is in a crisis economically, is played out ideologically and is coming to feel the Polish bacillus in communism. It bases its superpower status solely on exhaustive, gigantic armament and wants to at least keep its lead in weaponry. It is highly improbable that the Americans will now meet the Kremlin halfway with detente at any cost. Yet Reagan will surely achieve peace out of strength better than did philanthropic preacher Carter, who had to come after Vietnam and Watergate but who time and again saw his morals betrayed and shamelessly misued. The United States wants to, and can, lead again, and the Kremlin has noticed that.

The Bremen WESER-KURIER emphasizes the following: Not withstanding all the uncertainty about the course of the president-elect, Europe at large and the Germans in particular cannot deny the United States their respect after the elections. The landslide election victory by a new, not at all uncontroversial man once again revealed the readiness and the courage of the Americans to venture a change.

This shows the capability of the United States for renewal and its determination in difficult situations to turn the rudder without simultaneously having the guarantee that it will thereby reach new, more friendly shores. People in Bonn will probably be wondering about the extent the breakthrough of the center-right reflected in the U.S. presidential elections and in the congressional and gubernatorial elections needs to be considered the beginning of a change in the political trend in the Western world.

The Kassel HESSISCHE NIEDERSAECHSISCHE ALLGEMEINE arrives at the following finding: The new president has the reputation of being totally inexperienced in foreign policy and of wanting to revive the cold war of the fifties. Hopefully both judgments will soon appear to have been biased after his inauguration on 20 January. The long-time governor of the most populous state of the union surely has a better sense of world political interrelations than his election speeches would indicate. Europe still needs to come to terms with Reagan. He will want to narrow down the room for maneuver in the Atlantic division of labor which makes allowances for different foreign policy interests. Still, pragmatic Reagan is perfectly aware that above all politics is the art of compromise.

DIE WELT on Relations With Allies

[Friedhelm Kemna editorial: "America and Europe"]

[Text] What made Ronald Reagan the 40th president of the United States in a memorable election night was the showdown via plebiscite with the 4 frustrating years of the Jimmy Carter administration. But this vote also powerfully heralds a readiness to follow his impressive demand for America to regain its strength and potential.

What outweighs the dismay is the hope for a new self-awareness; the provocativeness of new ideas, resources, power reserves of a man and his team; an awakening of the old "spirit of America."

Reagan elicited an immense upward surge of expectations with his devastating victory over Carter; the challenge is similar and yet incomparably greater than that of the longing for moral renewal which cleared the road to the White House for the man from Georgia 4 years ago.

The recourse the voters took this 4 November expresses their call for a healing of domestic ills, above all for the way to be shown to overcome inflation, unemployment and the misery of the big cities, which increased rather than decreased in the 4 Carter years.

This vote shows great confidence in advance that Reagan will lead the United States out of the valley of humiliations, doubts and anxieties about its position in the world.

This is, above all, what makes the world keenly look forward to the beginning of the new era in Washington. What will be important to East and West alike is the answers to the question of how Reagan will tackle, and where possible overcome, the forces confronting the United States in foreign and security policies and in the world economy. In the West the hope for a new start is of great importance. The new president can rely on more expert knowledge in world matters in the circles around him than Carter ever rallied in the White House.

Yet nobody in Europe will underrate the difficulties of the dialogue with a man who, in his judgment of detente policy, disarmament and arms control, of security as the precondition for a foreign policy that commands respect, deviates at least in inclination from the judgment of the Europeans.

Reagan as president, confronted with political reality, may well act more flexibly than he outlined his course of action as a candidate. What primarily makes up his capital is the credibility regarding his will to revise America's foreign policy positions, meaning the readiness for conflict wherever the superpower has become a second-rate power--or threatens to become such a second-rate power. This affects the Federal Republic of Germany, the most important alliance partner, especially at a time when it has said farewell, by coalition decision, to the role of being a model when it comes to defense efforts within NATO. This change to a bad example is bound to affect the dialogue with Washington in which the Germans will be assessing the leadership capability of their most important partner in the alliance.

There is reason to fear that the advocates of a special role for Europe in that detente policy with the East to which there is "no alternative" will maintain a critical distance. This is perhaps the most serious handicap of a dialogue which ought to be borne by the common conviction that there is no substitute for the leading role of the United States in the defense of the West.

There will be bottlenecks here and there in the process of the consultations which Reagan plans to place above a strategic gathering of the alliance--an alliance which indeed must not be an alliance of the smallest common denominator.

To Bonn and Paris the topic of an arms lead over of the Soviet Union, the farewell to SALT II and thus the feared aggravation of the negotiations on medium-range missiles are anathema. In the Middle East Reagan clashes with the German-French position which competes with Camp David.

Thus the new Atlantic dialogue cannot and will not be devoid of problems. But common positions are possible if the president convinces the world at large, Europe in particular, but above all the Soviet Union that U.S. policy has become a respectable, reliable and predictable quantity. The signs in this direction are not bad. The United States has provided a good starting position for its 40th president.

Restraints on Reagan Seen

[Dieter Schroeder editorial: "America on the Move"]

[Text] The U.S. election landslide has not just produced a new president, it has also disclosed a new face to America that has only been dimly seen in Europe. The big majority for Reagan is not merely a protest against Carter's irrational and incompetent economic and foreign policies, it much rather expresses the deep dissatisfaction of the voters with the state America is in and with the role it plays. Carter, the outsider, scored his election victory in 1976 because of this same mood, a mood that had existed since the Vietnam defeat. He represented the idealistic America which wanted to regain its superiority and self-confidence through a return to the moral missionary traditions of American history. That policy has failed. In the past 4 years the United States was forced to accept a further decline in its power and wealth.

The fact that the Americans abandoned a President in office--against their custom--is evidence of the deep hurt to their self-confidence. The Vietnam trauma has not been overcome; America is still seeking its deliverance and rebirth. In this search it has obviously turned to the other side of the American dream--the fulfillment of its claim for power through performance. Reagan represents this change of mood with his patriotic promise to return to the United States its leadership role in the world through his neoconservatism, which aims to free the economy from the chains of state intervention and excessive social measures, and through his liberalism, which considers the traditional values of society to be endangered by individual license and immorality.

The wind no longer blows from the intellectual East Coast, it blows from the heart of the prairie. But it is questionable whether invoking the pioneer spirit will create an America that will be strong again. The world has changed along with America, and it is not inclined to listen to the commands from the man in the White House. Reagan will also probably be a temporary president who will continue America's process of finding its way back. He will continue this process with means that are hardly more suitable. However, he will be supported by a Senate where the conservative Republican forces will have the upper hand.

The congratulatory messages from the whole world for the new man in the White House scarcely conceal the concern and skepticism about the course Reagan and America will take in the coming years. Reagan, too, will have to learn that there are limits to American power, but valuable time can elapse in the meantime. The learning period for the new president will take place at a time of increasing instability in international politics. Changes of course and experiments can even increase insecurity. This will particularly involve the Soviet Union and Europe. The new president has in mind taking back the equal rights as a superpower which his predecessor conceded to the Soviet Union which in order to do he needs to have military superiority for America.

The feeling held by the Soviet Union that it has come off poorly is something like the feeling of Germany under Emperor Wilhelm, which did not want to accept having the world power Great Britain relegate it to second in rank. It is likely that Moscow, like Great Britain in olden days, will not stop pressing to have an equal say in world politics. Reagan's hopes are based on the assumption that the Soviet Union would not be able to keep up a new arms race and that it might therefore be prepared to make a deal with Washington. But it is equally possible that Moscow will use its military superiority as long as there is a credibility gap between Reagan's words and his means. Then we could expect dangerous conflicts in the years to come. Reagan would have to reckon with a brutal test from the Soviets in the near future, or even with faits accomplis in the period between his election and his taking over, in Poland, for example.

Reagan's ideas on a new SALT agreement are still too unclear to indicate whether the Soviets would see a chance to preserve their interests in his offer of new negotiations. Experience so far indicates the opposite. If Moscow showed him the cold shoulder it would be a burden for the new president's relations with the Europeans, not only because the SALT II agreement would then definitely end up in the trashcan, and not only because that would eliminate one of the last elements holding detente policy together, but most of all because the Europeans would be facing new Washington demands for higher arms expenditures. But Reagan's policy already endangers NATO's decision to close the arms gap.

Much depends on how Reagan will implement his words in politics. The selection of his most important advisers and aides will be an indication. Once these appointments have been made one can better assess whether Reagan's transformation from a bragging movie star to a responsible politician will be credible, and whether a minimum of continuity will be preserved in America's policy vis-a-vis the Soviet Union, Europe, China and the Middle East.

Deutsche Welle U.S. Dispatch

[Conrad Ahlers dispatch from Washington]

[Text] The topic of the day following the presidential elections is not so much Jimmy Carter's defeat, which had been indicated by the most recent opinion polls, but much rather the big victory won by Ronald Reagan and the Republican Party.

It took the Grand Old Party, as the Republicans are called, a quarter of a century to win a majority in the Senate again, the last time being under President Eisenhower.

A political avalanche descended in the United States, burying President Carter and the Democrats. The reaction of people here in Washington, including Democratic politicians, boils down to the view that it is mostly Carter's fault. Pity is not a noticeable American characteristic anyway, and absolutely nothing of it can be felt for Jimmy Carter. On the other hand, there is a lot of self-pity in the drastically reduced ranks of Democratic politicians. It has now become quite plain how lonely President Carter was, how poor his relations with his fellow party members in Congress were, and what a deadly error it was for him to entrench himself in the White House with the young people of his Georgia Mafia. Undoubtedly it was this very unnatural self-isolation from people and facts which led to this political catastrophe. Thus nobody is surprised now to hear that Jimmy Carter is seriously considering becoming a Baptist missionary like his sister. Another important reason for the defeat of the President is the fact that he has but little appeal and that he tends to show a passive pessimism. It seems that Carter no longer believes in America's ability to still play a big role in the world. Ronald Reagan, however, brought the Americans a message of confidence. He appealed to their optimism, their activism and their patriotism. We will surely make it—this was the tenor of all his statements.

Outside the United States, too, including in the FRG, Jimmy Carter was not popular personally. But being a liberal Democrat he was a natural ally of the European social democrats and the liberals. For some time Willy Brandt and many leading politicians of the social-liberal coalition were even enthusiastic about Jimmy Carter. They praised his intelligence and his religious enthusiasm. It was only much later that they realized that Jimmy Carter had but limited interests and but little understanding for worldwide problems.

Now everybody will have to adapt to a new American president and a new America. In the United States there has been a marked shift to the right, covering all groups of society. Realpolitik is the new keyword, the primacy of ideology is no longer valid. Ronald Reagan has realistic and experienced people surrounding him, including former Secretary of the Treasury George Shultz, former NATO chief, Alexander Haig, former Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld and to a certain extent also Henry Kissinger. His inner circle consists of old friends from California who have played prominent roles in the business world. They will not be easy partners but they will be reliable allies.

DIE WELT CRITICIZES SCHMIDT'S STYLE OF GOVERNING

[Gottfried Capell editorial:"The Administrator"]

[Excerpts] No German chancellor since Adenauer had succeeded in being reelected after a full 4-year legislative period. Helmut Schmidt is the first since then. Adenauer's life work is still valid today. The decisions made under him and by him determine the guidelines of policy, in 1980 as well, guidelines which the Federal Republic cannot desert without running a risk for its intellectual and political survival. What is designated as "framework conditions" in fashionable terminology--Western integration, meaning the European and the Atlantic alliance, as well as our economic system—must not be altered. The framework conditions had always been called into question from outside. Since the end of the sixties they have been so internally as well.

This is the situation in which Helmut Schmidt makes his start. The economic system and the internal constitution of the society of the Federal Republic of Germany are no longer controversial. A crisis of state awareness complements objective threats from outside, be they of a military nature or be they of economic origin.

Danger of war in the Near and Middle East, unpredictable developments in Eastern Europe emanating from Poland, and oil price hikes would be easier to cope with if there were still an overall intellectual consensus in the state such as the Federal Republic still possessed during the transition from the fifties to the sixties. The turn of the decade of the sixties to the seventies was determined by fundamental intellectual change, by the veneration of the concept of "progress," without responsible people having adequately considered the thought that progress is a concept of value only if and when the objective and the road toward achieving it have been recognized as worthy of pursuit and as practicable. The first half of the seventies--the cue is education policy--proved that the objectives were not in all cases adequately described by their contents and that the roads to be traveled were often inadequately identified by signposts. The oil crisis in the second half of the past decade set limits which would have become discernible even without the energy shortage albeit later.

"Security for the eighties" was the election campaign motto of the Social Democrats. The SPD intended this to be meant for the future: that security does not relate so much to the preservation of what has been attained, but to the acquisition of future achievements. In contrast to this it has become obvious that the citizens of this country instead will be lucky if they can maintain the present level of development for a while. Helmut Schmidt's next government statement is supposed to bear the title "Courage for the Future." This courage will be needed indeed.

Tones of dismay, for the time being still low, are reaching the ear of the chancellor, who was reelected yesterday. Some say that in the coalition negotiations they did not make politics but merely engaged in austerity. Others say that they should have stayed away from all the petty details and instead drawn the farflung lines as to "where we go from here." It is with this argument particularly that the chancellor has his own party on his back. It is not a concern, at least not an exclusive concern, of the leftwing of the SPD which is very heterogeneous in itself anyway. This is a demand which the entire society of the Federal Republic poses to the government chief.

Helmut Schmidt once considered it a Hanseatic understatement when he called himself an "executive employee" of the Federal Republic. Unfortunately, this characterization is more appropriate than it was intended to be. Even though it pains the chancellor, he still has not succeeded in getting rid of the reputation of being more of an administrator than a manager. What is demanded of a chancellor is more than the expert handling of government business.

Intellectually Helmut Schmidt must cope with the environmental problems by pulling the ground from under the eccentric ecology movement once and for all which it lost for the time being in the Bundestag elections, and by simultaneously making tangible the concrete, absolutely necessary goal of making energy supplies secure. This includes a clear attitude toward nuclear energy. Intellectual leadership means more than just a bashful adherence to state institutions; the courage to say that the Bundeswehr, its tradition and finally also a public oath-taking ceremony for the purpose of presenting itself publicly and of assessing itself are part of a consolidated democracy which by necessity is capable of defending itself.

It is up to the government, and even more so to the head of it, to demonstrate to the people that what they have in the Federal Republic is not just a state organization but a political homeland. Unless it is possible to arouse the feeling again that the state in itself is not a value but that it is the pertinent guardian of values and if, on the contrary, a constantly growing number of people are "dropping out" into an alternative life, into drugs or into an internal "count me out emigration," then the "security for the eighties" will be gone and the "courage for the future" devoid of a basis. The United States is facing the same problems we are facing, only in greater dimensions; and yet, the man of the next few years there has managed to mobilize a feeling of surging forward, of tackling matters anew. Helmut Schmidt publicly pondered the possibility that he intended to write a book or two "of political-philosophical content" after the end of his political career. For the politician Schmidt this would be too late.

POLITICIANS COMMENT ON OUTCOME OF U.S. ELECTIONS

[Text] On Wednesday, 5 November, Jacques Chirac sent a telegram to Ronald Reagan in which he said: "On behalf of the City of Paris, I am sending you my warmest congratulations. We French people, your oldest friends and allies, fervently hope that your presidency will be a success."

The RPR chairman added: "I am convinced that good French-U.S. relations, a frank and trusting dialogue, will enable us to increase the necessary solidarity between us and to work together for what General de Gaulle called our common enterprise: peace with freedom."

Mr Reagan visited Mr Chirac at the end of 1978 when the mayor of Paris was in the Cochin hospital.

[RPR leadership member] Michel Debre, a presidential candidate, told us: "The American people have first imposed a penalty. This election shows clearly that the citizens have not forgiven those who claim to lead them for their lack of will and determination. A government without a plan, a policy without any determination in a period of tension have been rejected by a proud people. That is the main characteristic of Mr Carter's defeat. The U.S. people have not been mistaken in recalling a constant fact of history. It is a salutary lesson."

Mrs Marie-Frence Garaud, a French presidential candidate, told us: "I think that the U.S. people, who are a realistic people, have just condemned a policy seen as a failure and deemed responsible for an unacceptable humiliation.

"Mr Reagan's election strikes me as a strong and healthy reflex; the free exercise of the democratic contest shows that the United States, contrary to what some people believed, has not taken the path to decadence.

"I regret the fact that in this period of relative self-effacement by the United States, France failed to understand its role and even its duty. It should clearly have shown the way and been the free world's soul. Instead of that the French Government had no hesitation in dissociating itself from an ally which was too quickly deemed incapable of playing its part on the international scene. That is a missed opportunity.

"I hope that the U.S. revival will not now spark off the opposite reaction in our country. Having denounced the weakness of Carter's America, France must not now submit to Reagan's America.

"France must assert its preeminent role in the defense of freedom more than ever."

Alain Krivine, Communist Revolutionary League (Trotskiyist) candidate for the presidency said: "Cholera has been replaced by the plague....U.S. imperialism resumed its offensive as early as 1977....U.S. democracy is a sham. The president is elected by a minority of citizens who choose between the false alternatives imposed on them. It is the U.S. working class, with its 10 million unemployed, which will one day soon succeed in posing the real problems."

LE MONDE VIEWS REAGAN EFFECT ON U.S. FOREIGN POLICY.

LD061317 Paris LE MONDE in French 6 Nov 80 pp 1, 12

[Jacques Amalric article: "Return to Manichaeism?"]

[Text] "Preserving peace requires that you be strong," Mr Ronald Reagan stated in particular during the television debate which he had with Mr Carter last week.

After 10 years of humiliations--which culminated on election day with the rather indecent celebration in Tehran of the first anniversary of the hostages' seizure--this language has seduced a large majority of the U.S. voters. It remains to be seen what it implies for the rest of the world, given that the only things we have with which to establish some idea of that will be candidate Ronald Reagan's statements and given that a gulf quickly appears between a man in search of power and the same individual who has attained his goal.

One of the main accusations made by Mr Reagan against Mr Carter is that he failed to maintain U.S. military power in the face of the USSR. It is, the president-elect thinks, because Moscow gauged Washington's weakness and lack of political will that the Soviet Union is moving its pawns forward and strengthening its military panoply.

Therefore, according to Mr Reagan, a large increase in military spending is necessary. The former governor of California does not say so clearly but, in a way, what he is calling into question is the idea--still not accepted by a large section of U.S. public opinion--of nuclear parity between the USSR and the United States, an idea which had nonetheless been accepted by Richard Nixon. As a result of this reasoning Mr Reagan adopted a hostile stance on the draft Strategic Arms Limitation Agreements (SALT II) laboriously finalized by Mr Carter and Mr Brezhnev in Vienna in June 1979.

One of President Reagan's first decisions will be to withdraw the SALT II document from the Senate's consideration--a document which in any case no longer has any chance of being ratified--and to propose starting new negotiations with the USSR which, he said, "will last as long as it takes to achieve not only arms limitation but also a reduction in those nuclear arms to the level at which neither of us will represent a threat to the other."

Europe Embarrassed

Will the USSR go along with that? In principle it will not. That is what all Soviet communiques have so far indicated, stressing the value of SALT II. Nonetheless the Soviets are more realistic and, just as they once adapted very well to Richard Nixon, they might resign themselves to Mr Reagan, after the customary period has lapsed. Establishing a minimum of confidence between the Kremlin gerontocracy and the new U.S. administration will, however, take time; the speed with which that normalization comes about will certainly depend largely on the composition of the team which Mr Reagan will now form. Is this an advantage for Mr Kissinger, who dreams of going back to his job, but who is certainly far from having only friends in the Reagan clan? There is reason to think so. The presence in a key post of Senator Henry Jackson (Democrat from Washington), one of the bitterest opponents of the Soviet military effort, would, however, be more difficult for the Kremlin to "swallow" and would make the threat already brandished by Mr Reagan much more real: to radically revive the arms race to exhaust the Soviet economy, which is already in an extremely bad state, and thereby to force the USSR to negotiate. An additional question to which Mr Reagan will have to reply one day: How can this military effort be reconciled with the major tax cuts he advocates?

It is perhaps at this point that we should talk about Western Europe. Officially, all the Europeans will welcome Mr Reagan's election and the reawakening of an America whose torpor and mediocre political figures are regularly denounced with relish. They will have to do the polite thing. However, aside from Mrs Thatcher, who has admitted on several occasions that she has a great deal of "sympathy" for the 4 November winner, the Republican candidate's triumph should prompt a few frowns in Paris and Bonn. Giscard d'Estaing like Chancellor Schmidt cannot regard a new hardening in East-West relations favorably. Mr Reagan, on the other hand, has undertaken to take the U.S. European allies in hand--to "establish," he said, "closer relations"--since he thinks some of those allies are slipping toward neutralism because they are no longer certain as to whether they can rely on Washington.

If he does try to do that it is safe to predict new incidents in transatlantic misunderstandings which will all be opportunities for the USSR to exploit. The painful establishment of political cooperation in Europe will inevitably suffer from the differences of opinion which will then appear among Europeans although it is not yet possible to guess whether the famous Paris-Bonn axis will be affected by it.

For France this question is important since it is largely thanks to Mr Carter's mistakes and deviations that Chancellor Schmidt's FRG has begun to move away from the United States. One detail which will probably have some importance is that Mr Reagan has made no secret of his view that the European countries should considerably increase their contribution to the military effort for which he is praying. Chancellor Schmidt, who has already been the target of overtures from Mr Carter in that connection, is highly likely to feel that he is a prime target.

Secondary Crises

However dangerous it might turn out to be, the new East-West policy advocated by Mr Ronald REagan could prove particularly dangerous in "peripheral" crises. Whether you like it or not U.S.-Soviet relations are governed by fairly strict rules, particularly in the strategic sphere. The situation is entirely different as regards the "secondary" crises--the confrontations using third powers as intermediaries which do not directly threaten the two superpowers' survival.

Mr Reagan, who felt that he was treading on dangerous ground, avoided, for instance, specifying what he would have done in Mr Carter's place in the Tehran hostages affair. However, from other statements by the Republican candidate, it is easy to imagine that he would never have had the Democratic President's patience and that he would have resorted to force well before the Tabas fiasco, at the risk of setting the whole region aflame and destroying fragile balance. The same worries are applicable to the Israeli-Arab conflict: Mr Reagan's arrival is likely to be interpreted by Mr Begin as the go-ahead for all kinds of intransigence. Although these again are just a candidate's statements, how can anybody forget his full approval of the Israeli settlements in the occupied territories? His veiled criticism of the Camp David procedure which was considered too brutal for Israel? His refusal to envisage any contact with the PLO?

The statements made so far by Mr Reagan on Africa and Latin America also give reason to fear serious lack of control and a definite step back compared with Mr Carter. Not only does the president-elect seem to think that North-South dialogue concerns only private capitalism but he also seems to attribute little importance to the rights of men he suspects of not sharing his ideas. For instance it was not very long ago that he was criticizing the Carter administration's excessive severity toward South Africa and criticizing his unfortuate rival for having supported the British plan which led to Zimbabwe's independence. Mr Reagan felt more in tune with Mr Ian Smith's plans....

However, it is in Latin America that Mr Reagan's Manichaean judgments are likely to do the most harm. Whatever people say, Mr Carter did have some understanding of this tormented subcontinent which the United States has exploited and abused all too long. Ultimately it does not matter whether his attitude was due to intelligence or weakness. He understood in particular that there are tyrannical regimes and systems of economic exploitation close to slavery which no democracy worthy of the name can help to perpetuate. Hence Somaza's fall and the continuation of economic aid to the Sandinist regime; hence the warning to Guatemalan leaders who never concealed how much they hoped for Mr Reagan's election; hence the pressures brought to bear on regimes like Chile or Argentina; hence the encouragements given to the few reformist countries on the continent.

That is a whole aspect of Mr Carter's policy--he was also accused of having "given way" over the new Panama Canal Treaty--which is highly likely to be destroyed in favor of multilateral denunciation of a Castroist virus which is the cause of all ills. Only advocates of calculated pessimism will be able to rejoice; indeed things will once again be clear....

In conclusion, let us repeat that a political program, especially in the United States, at best only represents intentions and at worst bait for onlookers. No man can aspire to run that country alone. Things which have been achieved are sometimes forced on him whether he likes it or not. Moreover Mr Reagan has already experienced this when he was forced to back down after announcing his intention to make U.S.-Taiwan relations official again. Influenced by the old "Chiang Kai-shek" lobby, Mr Reagan had forgotten that in so stating he was calling into question the normalization of relations between Washington and Beijing. His advisers reminded him of it. So did Beijing.

Future of French-U.S. Relations

[Maurice Delarue article: "Paris: Puzzled Silence"]

[Text] Behind the inevitable congratulations, what does Paris think of Mr Reagan's election?

If the matter is simplified to the extent of caricature, the reply is clear: Mr Reagan intends to restore the famous U.S. leadership over the Atlantic alliance, Europe and the world; France's objective since De Gaulle has been to end the "dual hegemony" which includes U.S. hegemony. This leads to the conclusion that a Paris-Washington conflict is inevitable.

The real political situation is much more subtle. Was General de Gaulle himself not anxious, in his effort to remove France and Europe from the "blocs," to maintain world balance and to support Washington on important occasions? On the eve of the 4 November election were people in Paris not recalling that, on 31 May 1973 in Reykjavik, George Pompidou told President Nixon that France attached "the greatest importance" to the maintenance of U.S. forces in Europe?

Has a Gaullist like Mrs M.F. Garaud, faced with the increase in Soviet military power, not given priority to a French-U.S. rapprochement? Moreover, of all the European allies of the United States, France is the only one which is making a real budgetary effort in the defense sphere.

The silence which was being observed in official French circles on Mr Reagan's program on the eve of the election did, however, betray some perplexity; restoring U.S. military power is indeed a vital objective in the present situation, but how will Mr Reagan achieve that while simultaneously reducing tax pressures?

U.S. overseas dependence is to be reduced, especially in the energy sphere? Fine! The entire West is bound to benefit by that. But how can such an objective be attained? Mr Reagan has not defined any credible methods for attaining it.

Supposing Mr Reagan were to succeed in restoring U.S. power, what conclusions would the Europeans draw from that? During Mr Carter's presidency the European Nine grew accustomed to speaking with "one voice" which was not always in tune with the U.S. voice on major world affairs such as Afghanistan, Iran and above all the Middle East, where the Europeans' vital interests are at stake.

Will this still fragile cohesion withstand a "resumption of control" by Washington? For us to know what should be understood by that remark Mr Reagan would have had to define a clear stance on the problems which could divide Europe and the United States. Of course, he is setting SALT II aside, but that does not really bother Paris, and he has been forthcoming in verbal support for Israel. However, was that attitude not primarily electioneering?

For the time being Paris is noting that Mr Reagan has objectives rather than a policy, and people in Paris are tempted to add: If he wants to restore his leadership, so much the better, provided it is leadership over the United States.

BERLINGUER EXPLAINS PARTY STRATEGY TO CENTRAL COMMITTEE

LD062127 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1800 GMT 6 Nov 80

[Report by Salvatore D'Agata]

[Text] At the Communist Party Central Committee Napolitano presented the document adopted at the end of the session. Berlinguer's speech was also released.

Berlinguer has not renounced his strategy although one of the party historic chiefs, Ingrao, has disassociated himself from it. His speech and the final document of the Central Committee have again proposed in a strong and full manner the aim of a government of democratic unity, understood as a joint effort to overcome the crisis and introduce a process of renovation and transformation. Berlinguer dealt at length with the overcoming [words indistinct] to bring about in a concrete manner a government of unity. It would be a grave error, the Communist Party secretary said, if we withdrew by a single step from this struggle because anticommunist prejudice is not just one of the questions but the central question of Italian political life. Once this road has been surmounted, Berlinguer insisted, conditions and a general climate will be created in which different types of government coalitions could be alternated, or in which free and fruitful dialectics would exist between the majority and opposition without, as Berlinguer put it, this leading to a clash and break. [Sentence indistinct] the defeat of Cossiga's government, Berlinguer said, is the defeat of an attempt to evade this question and this represents a success for the Communist Party. The type of Communist opposition to Forlani will depend on agreement on one of the great themes of the republic, that is, on the role which the Communists can play in opposition as a "government" party.

Relations with the Socialist Party (?are also based on this). The Communist criticism is based on the suspicion that Craxi and the leadership of the new policy aim at developing as much as possible the political dialectics leading to direct cooperation and competition with the Christian Democracy, cutting out or pushing to the side the Communist question. However, the Communists are also aware [words indistinct] that the overcoming of the prejudice which is excluding them from the executive is not demonstrated only by bringing down or by trying to bring down the governments which practice it but also and above all by an agreement with all the lay and Catholic leftwing forces on the things which should be done, and by promoting a mass movement on these things among the rank and file of the political parties.

This is our strategy, Berlinguer said, and it cannot be replaced--he added with a clear reference to Ingrao--until another, not confused but equally clear strategy of innovative importance is proposed and accepted by the party.

NEW INDICTMENTS IN OIL SCANDAL; ANDREOTTI DENIES COMPLICITY

[Text] Rome, 6 Nov (ANSA)--The number of indictments signed by Italian magistrates investigating the nation's colossal oil scandal climbed to fifteen last night when a close friend and aide of Aldo Moro, the late chairman of the ruling Christian Democrat Party, was arraigned on charges of contraband.

Rome police also took the precautionary measure of withdrawing the passport held by Serena Fresto, linked to the party leader who was kidnapped and slain by Red Brigade terrorists in the spring of 1978. Fresto and the others named in the indictments are among those whose names appear on the thousands of checks seized by magistrates during probes into the records of checking accounts in four Milan banks held by petroleum dealer Bruno Muselli, now sought by Italian police, and his confidential assistant.

Earlier in the day, Finance Minister Franco Reviglio delivered to the house Finance and Treasury Commission the "vitale report," a document compiled by the finance policy on the affair said to involve some 2.35 billion dollars in unpaid taxes on petroleum products with a cover allegedly provided by high-ranking finance, police, industry and political figures. The minister also informed the Commission that he will make available to its members all documents bearing on tax evasion in the petroleum sector.

Reviglio said he had cleared his decision with magistrates in Treviso, whose work has been largely instrumental in developing the case, and has received assurances that putting these documents into the public domain would not jeopardize the investigation.

In another development in the mushrooming scandal yesterday, Radical Party MP Gianluigi Melega filed a query in the house signed by other Radical MP's on an anonymous "memoir now in the hands of magistrates and forwarded in April 1979 to the finance minister of the time, Franco Maria Malfatti." The document cited by the Radical MP's contains the line: "The petroleum scandal represents an economic-political clash of gigantic proportions between two Christian Democrat clans headed by Giulio Andreotti (now the chairman of the house Foreign Affairs Commission ed note) and Moro."

The "memoir" also alleged that the Ente Nazionale Idrocarburi shelled out 120 million dollars in bribe money to wrap up a deal for the purchase of Saudi Arabian crude.

Andreotti immediately denied the allegation linking him to oil scandal.

BRIEFS

NEW SOVIET AMBASSADOR--Rome 3 Nov (ANSA)--The Italian Ministry of Foreign Affairs has communicated its agreement with the naming of an ambassador of the Soviet Union to Rome, Nikolay Nitrofanovich Lunkov. Ambassador Lunkov, 61 years old, is spoken of as an expert in European affairs and has been involved with issues in this area since the beginning of his diplomatic career in 1943. NEW AMBASSADOR TO USSR PRESENTS CREDENTIALS

LD051554 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 1300 GMT 5 Nov 80

[Excerpts] Dr Antonio de Medeiros Patricio presented his credentials in the Kremlin yesterday as the new Portuguese ambassador to Moscow. Our Moscow correspondent Carlos Fino reports :

The not-so-common fact that Dr Antonio Patricio was called to present his credentials less than 2 weeks after his arrivel in the Soviet capital could be seen as a gesture by Moscow to stress the desire to maintain relations despite the upsets they have suffered in the past 12 months. As a matter of fact, in his brief speech the deputy chairman of the Supreme Soviet Presidium, apart from generally referring to the aims of the USSR's foreign policy, expressly highlighted the Kremlin's desire for an evolution toward complete normalization of relations with Portugal.

CP OFFICIAL VIEWS EFFECT OF REAGAN WIN ON SPAIN, EUROPE

LD061514 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 0700 GMT 6 Nov 80

[Telephone interview with Manuel Azcarate, member of the Spanish Communist Party Executive Committee--live or recorded]

[Excerpts] [Question] They say Reagan is anticommunist, don't they?

[Answer] I think so.

[Question] Does that characteristic of the new president-elect frighten you?

[Answer] I do not think the term is frighten or not frighten, nor do I think the subject of anticommunism is the most important. What I think is that the election of Reagan is a very serious problem for the whole world; it is a subject which is raised (?at home) because it is linked--and I think Carter himself contributed to its emphasis during the electoral campaign--to the subject of war and peace. The question is whether Reagan in the White House is or is not going to be--and I think he is--an aggravating factor in the world situation and the growing threat of war. That is what I think is going to be the most serious aspect of the question.

In the international sphere, I agree with you that the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan has been a negative factor for the whole international situation, a violation of the norms of coexistence, of the independence of nations. That has facilitated a kind of propaganda in America, a kind of hackneyed patriotism.

[Question] What at first glance seems to be quite positive for our internal problems is Mr Reagan's attitude to the possibilities of revitalizing relations with Spain; perhaps a chiraroscuro which--according to one's wishes--could extend to Spain's incorporation into NATO?

[Answer] I know that Republican Party documents are quoted--with a moderate, liberal style --which are favorable to relations between Spain and the United States. Personally, I do not think this is an attitude with which we should face what I think the situation is going to be. In my opinion, the Republican administration of Reagan is going to make stronger, more desperate efforts to incorporate Spain into NATO.

[Question] Manuel Azcarate, can you forecast the next 4 years? At the end of that period, what is going to happen? Is the world going to be closer, God forbid, to a catastrophe?

[Answer] I think this situation could last, (?could) provoke in Europe an accentuation of the tendency toward an autonomous policy, an independent European policy--and I am referring to Western Europe--which is not subordinated to the United States. I think an independent European policy is now turning into a kind of necessary element, precisely to diminish the risks and dangers of international aggravation which we are facing, and within that independent European policy, I think the European left--the communists, socialists, the forces of other ideologies who want peace--we have to think, to maintain a dialogue, so that we can all contribute toward diminishing and averting dangerous situations, and I think we are going to be able to do this.

PSOE-FLN COMMUNIQUE FAILS TO MENTION FISHERMEN ISSUE

[Text] At the end of the visit by the secretary general of the Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE], Felipe Gonzalez, to Algiers, the PSOE and the Algerian National Liberation Front [FLN] issued a joint communique noting the most important aspects of the discussion held by the leaders of both parties. According to the joint communique, the two delegations agreed to broaden and dynamize the relations of cooperation between both their parties for the benefit of the Spanish and Algerian peoples.

As regards international problems, both delegations broached questions relating to Mediterranean security, the Iran-Iraq war, the Middle East conflict, and the situation in Latin America. It is noteworthy that the joint communique of the PSOE and the only Algerian party makes no reference to the problem of the 32 Spanish fishermen seized by the Polisario Front while fishing in waters of the Western Sahara. This question, which appeared to be the main object behind the Socialist leader's visit to Algiers, appears nowhere in the communique, although it does refer to the Polisario Front. The two delegations reaffirmed their complete support for the just struggle of the Saharan people under the leadership of the Polisario Front as its sole and authentic representative.

PERUVIAN PRIME MINISTER ARRIVES ON OFFICIAL VISIT

[Text] Manuel Ulloa, prime minister of Peru, arrived in Madrid today for an official visit. He formerly spent several years living in exile in Spain. Before he was due to be received by King Juan Carlos he was asked the following questions by Hector Arenas:

[Begin recording] [Question] After 5 months of democracy, and with a difficult economic and social situation, is the process of democratization being consolidated in Peru or is there a danger of revolt?

[Answer] I believe that after the experiences we have lived through there exists a clear realization that disagreements or differences of opinion cannot be carried to the point where they endanger the stability of rule. Indeed, relations with the armed forces in Peru are very constructive and harmonious. After a difficult period of transition we have managed to find forms of coexistence which also guarantee the support of the armed forces for the democratic regime. [end recording]

The Peruvian prime minister goes on to say that he has come to Madrid because he believes that Spain has roads leading out through the countries of Latin America:

[Begin recording] [Question] Are you here also to seek support in the political, economic, trade and finance fields?

[Answer] We have come here to talk, to look at the future, to try to intensify our relations and increase the volume of trade between us. We are here to talk about the new Peruvian reality and to get to know the Spanish reality--I lived in exile in Spain for many years. And I believe there are points in common, areas of common interest which we should explore.

[Question] For several years Peru lived under military regimes with two distinct ideological and political leanings. In escaping from this situation, the civilian powers were lucky in securing the support of U.S. President Carter. Mr Peruvian Prime Minister, do you believe that you will continue to enjoy the support of the new president, Ronald Reagan?

[Answer] I believe that American policy in this respect is a constant which will not change as a consequence of the outcome of yesterday's election. [end recording]

Comments on Reagan's Election

LD070002 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1830 GMT 06 Nov 80

[Text] Peruvian Prime Minister Manuel Ulloa concluded the 2d day of his official visit here in Spain with a press conference held this evening in the Institute of Ibero-American Cooperation. Our special correspondent has a report from this organization's headquarters:

At a press conference given this evening in Madrid, Peruvian Prime Minister Manuel Ulloa said that his official visit has the main aim of seeking Spanish aid for the development of Peru and to offer Spain in return the possibility of taking part in necessary activities within a wide range of fields, especially energy, fishing, developing the infrastructure, automation and iron and steel.

On the election of U.S. President-elect Ronald Reagan, he said that his election represents the continuation of certain constant factors regarding U.S. foreign policy which, in his opinion, will not be changed. For this reason he does not expect there will be any sudden turns. At the end of the press conference, the Peruvian prime minister, who is also the minister of economy and trade, had a meeting with leaders of Spain's official bank, the Bank of Spain.

Manuel Ulloa, who in addition to being Peruvian prime minister also holds the economy, finance and trade portfolios, will have talks with members of the government's economic team and with representatives of Spanish trade and private banking during his visit to Madrid.

SPAIN TO SIGN COOPERATION AGREEMENT WITH INDONESIA

[Text] As the result of a visit by the king and queen to Indonesia, Spain and Indonesia are to sign a scientific and technical cooperation agreement, which will represent the legal and political framework for bilateral relations. This was said in Jakarta today by the Spanish foreign minister. Speaking to the press this morning, Perez Llorca said that the trip has led to positive results, for Indonesia has a potential comparable to that of Brazil.

The Spanish minister went on to say that the Indonesians had shown great interest in Spain's policy on EEC and NATO membership; the situation in Europe; the CSCE conference; and Spain's attitude towards global relations and the attempts to construct a new international economic order in which countries such as Indonesia, thanks to their enormous potential capacity, have an important role to play.

Perez Llorca added that Indonesia is in need of technology which Spain is in a good position to provide, and that plans are already in hand—for instance the building of an aircraft factory at Bandung, a cement factory, a refinery and cooperation in shipbuilding. In exchange for this technology Spain in the future would be able to buy oil from Indonesia.

PAPERS COMMENT ON U.S. ELECTION RESULT

LD061618 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 0920 GMT 6 Nov 80

[From the press review]

[Text] The papers today comment on the result of the U.S. presidential election and its possible repercussions in international politics.

The national coalition paper AAMULEHTI notes that the elections in the United States did not turn into an exciting drama. Thus there is no need to make any accusations or guesses. Ronald Reagan's victory was undeniable right from the start, almost like a landslide, and at the same time the color of Congress also changed thoroughly.

According to AAMULEHTI, the most simple explanation is that Reagan gained a crushing victory because Jimmy Carter was so bad. The President's achievements during the 4 years were overshadowed by failures. As President, Carter made a poor and indecisive impression on the Americans. As the economic situation, affecting everyone's purse, also worsened at a decisive moment, an alternative was sought. The 69-year-old Reagan did not, perhaps, arouse general enthusiasm, but his concise slogan "let us begin again together" aptly reflected the present conservative mood of the people. The Americans want change, AAMULEHTI notes.

According to SUOMENMAA, the most significant difference in the views of the present and future presidents was chiefly in their statements on foreign policy. It is true that Reagan's uncompromising views on the cancellation of SALT II, the superiority of the United States, the acceleration of the arms race and so on, became milder on the final straight of the election campaign. Reagan strongly criticized the foreign policy of the Carter administration for its weakness and passiveness. In the view of SUOMENMAA, it is therefore no wonder that the NATO countries feel uncertainty, particularly about the future of detente and disarmament.

Although the first comments have been very cautious, anxiety has shown through between the lines. Thus Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, while congratulating the newly elected president, at the same time referred to the importance of disarmament. The NATO countries fear that Reagan will strive even harder than Carter to increase defense expenditure, which has so far been opposed by the small NATO countries such as Denmark, Norway and Holland, SUOMENMAA says.

EEC YIELDS TO ULTIMATUM ON FISHING DATA

[Text] The EEC Commission has given in to a Norwegian ultimatum and will now present its most recent data on its fishing in the North Sea, Fisheries Ministry Departmental Director Kjell Raasok has told AFTENPOSTEN. This means that there will be new negotiations between Norway and the EEC on 1 and 2 December.

The first round of negotiations on quotas for 1980 broke down because the EEC refused to present data on its catches. Norway then thought that there was little point in continuing the negotiations, and the two sides concluded their meeting without fixing the next. Then Norway sent a note to the EEC, in which it made it clear that the figures would have to be presented if a new meeting was to take place.

DAILY TELEGRAPH CONGRATULATES REAGAN ON VICTORY

[Editorial: "Reagan's New Dawn"]

[Text] Mr Reagan's sweeping victory gives him a national mandate to change the whole course of American policy at home and abroad. Away with the do-gooding liberalism which, after long and over-patient trial, has been decisively rejected as inappropriate to the harsh and dangerous real world and often as guilt-ridden, hypocritical, self-righteous and self-indulgent. Back to the tested virtues of self-reliance, free enterprise, national pride and sense of community. Mr Reagan has stood simply but persuasively fo this turn-round and, despite all the handicaps of his age and inexperience, and despite the all-too-familiar domestic and internatioal left and liberal vilification of him as a "warmonger", has triumphed.

The authority of his mandate should not be measured merely by his majorities in the electoral college and the popular vote, by the control the Republicans have gained of the Senate for the first time in decades and by the swing in their favour in governorships and in the House. Beyond that, the realities of the whole domestic and international situation has been so compelling as to induce President Carter, especially in an election year, to switch to some traditional Republican policies and parade them under a Democratic banner. Hence the split between him and Senator Kennedy, custodian of the Democratic grail.

The verdict on Mr Carter, with all sympathy, was not only that, despite heroic efforts, he just did not have what it takes for the job but that he was in any case attempting the impossible with a cargo of Democratic policies. Beyond that to what extent his bad luck was congenital or due to his own failings was largely immaterial. The hostages issue, to which he clung pathetically as an election winner, backfired in his face. In addition, the way he went on, despite all the evidence, desperately pretending to the last minute that release with honour was practically assured, verged on the patently dishonest. The rescue fiasco came to mind more decisively than his firm reaction on Afghanistan. Mr Carter was seen as the man who ran America's strength down, with the result that she was humiliated.

Mr Reagan faces a daunting and growing accumulation of problems, but they do not exceed America's enormous human and material resources if he can fully mobilise them and properly deploy them. Naturally the outside world is more interested in changes he will bring about in foreign affairs and defence than in domestic policies. Yet it is these latter which create the muscle, shield and sword on which the free world depends and the spirit which inspires and directs them. Mr Reagan's aim is to liberate the economy and the citizen from excessive government control and to administer a high-power Friedmanite package of reduced expenditure, big tax cuts and incentives. He is confident that the economy will recover its traditional vigour and confidence, meeting the challenge both of dying industries and of new-Asian silicon-chip competition.

Mr Reagan is overwhelmingly seen by the Amerian electorate to be right when he says that even the additions to America's military strength promised by Mr Carter in the election campaign would not be enough to meet the Russian threat. Neither the Americans nor their allies should be under any illusions about the effort and time that will be necessary to restore the ravages of detente. Mr Reagan is no firebrand for insisting on the re-negotiation of the SALT 2 nuclear arms treaty, which the Senate has been refusing to ratify for over a year. Russia will have to recognise that this is one she did not get away with. With growing trouble on the satellite, economic and food fronts she is in no position to insist on superiority if she knows that America is prepared to outspend her.

Yet the correction of the military balance will take several years of determined effort and resistance to Russia's huffing and puffing. It is here that, unless some of America's European allies adjust to the Reagan presidency and take advantage of the opportunities it offers, disastrous trans-Atlantic tensions could occur. Mrs Thatcher is already in tune. So should President Giscard d'Estaing be, in view of his own record increases in defence expenditure. Herr Schmidt and the others are however wedded to SALT 2 and the cosy but now busted illusions of detente, and profess to see Mr Reagan as a sort of trigger-happy cowboy. For this reason even more than usual depends on Mr Reagan's choices for the main offices in his administration. This also applies to the economy and the rest of home affairs, especially in view of Mr Reagan's age. Fortunately he is a good delegator and has a wealth of talent to choose from. Dr Kissinger, for example, would be acclaimed in Europe, and so would General Haig. As for Mr Reagan himself, we congratulate him on his appointment as sheriff of the free world's most important country.

CP PAPER SEES REAGAN CONTINUING CARTER POLICIES

LD061355 London MORNING STAR in English 6 Nov 80 p 1

[Editorial: "High Noon for us All?"]

[Text] The second half of President Carter's term of office in particular was marked by the revival of cold-war fever with the deliberate aggravating of tension in relations with the Soviet Union.

There was, for example, the decision to establish the so-called Ra Fid Deployment Forces to intervene wherever the United States considered that its interests were affected. There was the drive to give the arms race a further twist with the cruise and Perishing missiles, and this was accompanied by the campaign against SALT 2. There was the abortive and highly provocative raid on Iran in a desperate attempt to free the hostages. So the list could go on.

The election of Ronald Reagan to the U.S. presidency is both a continuation of this right-wing inspired campaign and its confirmation.

The ending of the Vietnam War and the Watergate scandal had led to important political developments in the United States. In particular, there was a climate of opinion hostile to any further military adventures overseas, and one which was more insistent on the checks and balances within the U.S. Constitution being firmly applied to the U.S. President.

It was this climate of opinion which the right-wing campaign set out to destroy, and in this Carter was a willing accomplice.

When the Kennedy campaign for the Democratic nomination bit the dust, the idealism which he had managed somehow to whip up behind him from sections as diverse as the young people, the women, and the black community could not be mobilised in favour of Carter, for Carter's increasingly regressive home policies had become the counterpart of his coldwar offensive overseas. Carter, like Reagan, was a man of the big business multinationals in the United States.

Yet it still remains true that the election of Reagan cannot be treated with indifference. For it undoubtedly strengthens the hands of the most right-wing elements throughout the world.

Whether Reagan can actually put into practice his more bellicose statements and attitudes depends on the balance of forces he has to confront. These have, in fact, shifted progressively against imperialism over the years, but an important element in them is the level of public opinion in favour of peace and disarmament. The best answer we can give to the dangers implicit in Reagan's election victory is to redouble all our efforts here in Britain to build up a massive movement for peace, and to compel the British Government to refuse entry to the U.S. cruise missiles.

ATAKOL: GREEK CYPRIOTS VIOLATE DENKTAS-KIPRIANOU AGREEMENT

TA061820 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1730 GMT 6 Nov 80

[Text] The minister of foreign affairs and defense, Mr Atakol, has said that the holding of a conference in Paris on the Cyprus problem with the support of the Greek Cypriot administration at a time when the intercommunal talks are in progress is contrary to point 6 of the Denktas-Kiprianou agreements.

In a statement today, Mr Atakol said it was reported that the conference is being organized by the so-called international committee of solidarity with Cyprus but it was actually being held with the encouragement and support of the Greek Cypriot administration. He said the meeting demonstrated the fact that the Greek Cypriot administration had no intention of ending the campaign of slander against the Turkish Cypriot community. Stressing that this administration had been constantly violating point 6 of the Denktas-Kiprianou agreement, he stated that the administration's latest stand clearly showed what little importance it attached to the intercommunal talks and to the agreements it had signed. Point 6 of the Denktas-Kiprianou agreement says that the two sides agreed to abstain from any action that might jeopardize the outcome of the intercommunal talks.

LEADERS, NEWSPAPERS REACT TO REAGAN ELECTION

Karamanlis, Rallis Congratulations

AT061404 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 6 Nov 80 p 1

[Text] President of the Republic K. Karamanlis has sent a congratulatory telegram to R. Reagan who has been elected the new president of the United States. In his telegram, the Greek president notes the following:

"Dear President, I express to you my warm congratulations on your election as president of the United States and my sincere wishes for the success of your mission. I am convinced that during your term of office the traditional bonds between our two people, which were forged in joint struggles for freedom and justice, will be further strengthened."

Prime Minister Y. Rallis has also sent a congratulatory telegram:

"Please accept the sincere congratulations of the Greek Government and myself personally on your election as president of the United States," says the Greek prime minister. "Although your term of office will begin during a period of serious international tension, I am convinced that it will prove valuable for the defense of freedom, justice and international peace, ideals that are shared by our two countries. Furthermore I am convinced that the existing traditional bonds of friendship between the United States and Greece will be strengthened to the benefit of both peoples."

Press Comments

AT061550 [Editorial Report] Most Athens Greek newspapers on 6 November carry editorials or commentaries on Reagan's U.S. presidential election victory. RIZOSPASTIS publishes a short commentary in the "Radical" column analyzing the reasons for Reagan's victory which it attributes to the "great economic difficulties, increasing inflationary pressures, and the trend toward increasing unemployment. The same is true regarding foreign policy problems which created a feeling of uncertainty and insecurity among the public." The commentary continues: "Rumors about plans to appoint individuals like Boeing's Senator Jackson or former Supreme Commander of NATO Forces in Europe General Haig to ministerial positions show a tendency to persist in the cold war turn that, after all, has been going on for some time now."

ELEVTHEROTIPIA's front page editorial claims that "at this moment three defamed persons are leading the United States. 1) The president is a failed actor of two-bit parts in cowboy films, Ronald Reagan, who entered politics when he received his pension from Hollywood. 2) The vice president is a former director of the notorious CIA, George Bush from Texas. 3) The state secretary is Washington's diabolical Metternich, Henry Kissinger, especially...known to Greeks and Greek Cypriots. Thus a BBC commentator's reaction to the results of yesterday's election is absolutely justified: 'my blood froze...'"

An AKROPOLIS commentary begins: "Normally Ronald Reagan's sweeping victory in the U.S. presidential election the day before yesterday should not have been such a surprise. There was a general conviction that his predecessor, as people say, had 'made a mess of things.' During his term of office the United States had endured many defeats abroad and had suffered serious blows to its prestige." Continuing, the commentary states that it does not expect the general direction of U.S. policy to change under the new president because "the two great parties which alternate in power in the United States are not separated by substantive and irreconcilable differences. They have unitary orientations in international relations." The commentary ends with the wish that the new president may prove to be more successful or more lucky than his predecessor.

ELEVTHEROS KOSMOS carries a front page editorial saying: "The adversaries of the United States wanted Jimmy Carter to be elected president. The friends of the American nation wished Reagan to win. The former preferred the defeated president because in his time the United States had lost both power and prestige, and the losses were expected to continue. The friends of America supported Reagan so that, on the one hand, Carter could leave and on the other, another way to govern the country could be tried." Then the editorial denounces public opinion polls which had presented an erroneous picture of the American people's preference and praises the American public for not having been influenced by such newspapers as the New York TIMES and Washington POST which had supported Carter. The editorial ends by asking Greece to also effect a radical political change because the "current political 'establishment' is an obstacle both to the tightening of Greek-U.S. relations and to the strengthening of our country--both internally and internationally. There is an urgent need for change because, if this possibility evaporates, Greece will lose the game in the end."

An ESTIA editorial attributes Carter's resounding defeat to the fact that people are not herds of diffident beings who accept without protest the mistakes or insults of their leaders; Carter "had made the mistake of ignoring a fundamental factor: the significance of credibility and consistency which a nation should provide, especially a leading nation, so that other nations may trust it." The editorial laments: "Of course, we do not have much hope that things will improve under Reagan--especially if he is to have as his basic collaborators Kissinger and Haig who are well known for their political cynicism--unless things change and the new leaders seriously take into consideration the lesson which the American people taught Carter...."

I KATHIMERINI Editorial

[Editorial: "The New President"]

[Text] Reagan's victory against Carter was no surprise. The inability of the current President to renew his term for 4 more years continues the logic that has prevented a series of his predecessors from being reelected--with the exception of Nixon who would better have lost the 1972 elections since only 3 months after he assumed his duties the writing of the Watergate "scenario" began which expelled him from the presidency. It is more than certain that the same logic will provide the arguments for terminating Reagan's political career in November 1984. For a long time to come, no U.S. president will be in a position to reconcile what he wants with what the United States can do, so as to give the picture of a "successful" term of office!

Undoubtedly inflation and unemployment were the strongest negative factors of current U.S. life that turned voters against Carter. In addition, an abundance of other failures, in both the domestic and foreign fields, can be ascribed to the debit of the departing President, although it is difficult for any third party to describe success or failure in the exercise of U.S. presidential power. It is so difficult to discern what the concepts of success or failure mean--especially on foreign policy issues--in the minds of U.S. citizens, that it is difficult for non-Americans to understand to what degree the inconsistencies, improvisations, ineffectualities of Carter's international policy influenced electoral tendencies.

The people who voted for Reagan certainly believe that he is more gifted than his predecessor to cope with the very tough duties he is assuming. Why do they believe this? This is another difficult-to-understand aspect of the issue "selection of a president." It is even more difficult to understand because the two parties which dominate U.S. political life actually do not differ on principles. [paragraph continues]

What separates them are petty disagreements between their guidng organizations regarding the best way to deal with this or that issue in order to serve corresponding organizations. Consequently, presidential candidates are not agents of principles but people with only external features that either attract or repulse voters. Yet, whatever the electoral qualifications of the candidates, they are of infinitesimal value as presidential qualifications. In recent years practice has proven that an unbridgeable gap exists between what the "candidate" promises and what the "presidnnt" does. This is easy to explain because what the "candidate" declares as his convictions and intentions many times directly conflicts with what the "president" can or is allowed to do. The "candidate" talks almost metaphysically about U.S. potential in peacetime. The "president" is asked to act with his country's specifical potential as the starting point.

The United States at present is not much related to what it was 30 or even 20 years ago. In those days, Washington spoke for all of the Western world every time an economic, military or political problem of international significance arose and, relying on its own military, economic or diplomatic means, it found the solutions. Now monocratic opinion is only the privilege of the other superpower in its own world. Washington is forced to consult with many of its partners before making a decision.

At that time, the balance of nuclear terror gave the U.S. a free hand in protecting its sphere of influence, principally with economic and secondarily with military "arguments." At present, the exploitation of nuclear terror by the economically impotent and morally degraded USSR allows it to have its own hands free for military penetrations in various areas which remain economically unprotected by the United States and which the "partners" usually do not agree to "protect" with military activities.

At that time, nobody asked where the U.S. zone of "national defense" began and ended in the world. At present, the relevant national economic interests of the West dispute the limits of U.S. "national interests," also recognizing the USSR's right to establish "stations" here or there for protecting its own "national" interests.

At that time, the U.S. Government still could take measures to control the activities of large economic complexes. Now these complexes, the U.S. multinational companies, take measures against U.S. administrations which try to control their activities inside and outside U.S. soil!

Starting from these facts which form the true, precise weight of the United States as a factor of international development, how credible can the newly elected president be when he promises that he will rectify "all the mistakes committed during Carter's 4-year term"? When he affirms that he will again make his country omnipotent in all fields? On what will he rely in order to achieve such majestic goals? Will he repatriate all the potentials that developments progressively removed from the United States and gave to other Western countries and countries of the Third World?

It is these grandiloquent declaracions of the new president that prejudge his own failure, that unfortunately justify our own uneasiness....

KARAMANLIS DEPARTS FOR OFFICIAL VISIT TO YUGOSLAVIA

AT051428 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1230 GMT 5 Nov 80

[Text] Today, President of the Republic Karamanlis will pay an official 3-day visit to Belgrade following an invitation by Yugoslav President Mijatovic. Karamanlis will have talks with the Yugoslav leadership on the international situation and on issues that concern Balkan cooperation. ECONOMIC DELEGATION RETURNS FROM ROMANIAN TALKS

AT062020 Athens Domestic Television Service in Greek 1900 GMT 6 Nov 80

[Excerpt] This evening Minister Without Portfolio Dhimas, who had led the Greek delegation during the seventh meeting of the joint Greek-Romanian interministerial committee which convened in Bucharest, returned to Athens. At Ellinikon Airport Dhimas made the following statement:

[Begin recording] The results of the trip were very satisfactory. Greek-Romanian relations are developing smoothly; our commerce has greatly developed. As an example, I can mention that in the first 6 months of 1980, Greek exports to Romania increased by about 100 percent. The same applies for Romanian exports to Greece. We agreed on all issues on the agenda in a spirit of great cordiality and in a friendly atmosphere. I can tell you that the results satisfy me fully. [end recording]

PASOK DENOUNCES MINERALS AGREEMENT WITH U.S.

AT061332 Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 5 Nov 80 p 2

[Text] The government is willing to allow the joint exploitation of the country's mineral wealth with the United States, and for this reason has included a relevant condition in an agreement that was signed on 22 April between Mitsotakis and [U.S. Ambassador] McCloskey. PASOK made this charge yesterday in the Chamber and, at the same time, revealed that the agreement provided for the establishment of an alumina plant to be jointly exploited with the United States.

PASOK parliamentary representative I. Alevras and Deputy I. Pottakis, who was the first to refer to the Mitsotakis-McCloskey agreement, denounced the "government's slavish policy which cedes to the Americans the exploitation of national resources, the only mainstays of our national economy and independence."

I. Alevras also referred to Soviet proposals for an alumina plant which, he said, are exceptionally beneficial.

Minister of Industry Manos replied to the above charges and confirmed the Mitsotakis-McCloskey agreement. But he said that "the United States has unfortunately not shown interest in purchasing the alumina to be produced and, therefore, the issue has not been pursued further."

On the contrary, Manos said, the Soviet Union, which has indeed made beneficial proposals for studying the establishment of an alumina plant, finally agreed to buy the product. Thus, a new agreement was signed on 3 September--the only one that is now in the development stage.

Finally Manos said that Greece has the potential not only for one but for many alumina plants which can be established in cooperation with the United States, the Soviet Union and European countries.

FOREIGN MINISTER DISCUSSES U.S. POLICY, TALKS WITH SAUDI ARABIA

[Statement by Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen at Esenboga Airport before his departure for Saudi Arabia on 6 November--recorded]

[Text] I do not believe that there will be a significant change in Turkish-U.S. relations following the election of a new U.S. president. Our relations are based on mutual interests and on a unity of views regarding world problems. A change in these relations is out of the question. We hope that our relations will continue to develop during President Reagan's administration as well.

I am going to Saudi Arabia to hold talks. As you know, there have recently been important developments and regional problems in the Middle East. The continuing war between Iran and Iraq is a source of concern for all regional countries. It is normal that we exchange views on the issue. Furthermore, there are other regional problems, namely the Middle East conflict and the Palestinian cause which is part of this conflict. This issue will also be discussed.

Work in connection with the visa procedures is continuing. Various administrative measures have been taken. Legal measures have also been prepared. Negotiations are continuing with all countries that have imposed a visa requirement on Turkish citizens. As I have repeatedly stated, our aim is to eliminate this visa requirement. At this stage, we are trying to solve this problem through diplomatic measures and negotiations.

'OUR RADIO' CRITICIZES GOVERNMENT STATEMENT ON REAGAN

TA071016 (Clandestine) Our Radio in Turkish to Turkey 0700 GMT 7 Nov 80

[Text] The military junta and its government have reaffirmed their loyalty to U.S. imperialism and NATO. Foreign Ministry spokesman Ambassador Savlet Aktug issued a press statement in Ankara regarding the election of racist Reagan--U.S. arms monopolies' man--as the U.S. president. In his statement on behalf of the military junta and the government, Ambassador Aktug has once more exposed the antipeople, pro-American and pro-NATO stand of the militarist Evren-Saltik clique against the national will of our people and the anti-imperialist forces. Ambassador Aktug said: We are convinced that the new U.S. president will further the close and friendly relations which have always existed between Turkey and the United States--and which have a particular significance within NATO--and will exert efforts for their promotion.

This statement by the military junta--which is gradually implementing the bilateral slavery agreements signed with the U.S. imperialists--has provoked a reaction among the anti-imperialist and democratic public. Our people as well as all forces which defend our national independence, territorial integrity, the survival of our country and people, peace and security are opposed to the sovereignty of U.S. imperialism in our country, as well as to its bases--the spy and provocation centers. The struggle for the removal of these is being waged and will be waged under the leadership of the Turkish working class. The rule of oppression and terror being implemented by the pro-American, NATOist junta in the country at large in favor of its imperialist masters' sovereignty and interests will not be able to disrupt the determination of the anti-imperialist, democratic forces in Turkey which are in favor of national independence and peace.

ARMENIAN PATRIARCH DENOUNCES ATTACKS ON TURKISH DIPLOMATS

TA061711 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 6 Oct 80

[Text] The archbishop of the Turkish Armenians, Kalustyan, has said that he strongly and vehemently despised attacks directed against our foreign representatives. In a written statement issued after he completed a trip abroad in a bid to collect donations for philanthropic organizations, Archbishop Kalustyan said there is great freedom of religion in Turkey and that he announced this fact in every country he visited. Pointing out that Turkish Armenians genuinely and deeply regreted attacks conducted against Turkish diplomats abroad, the Armenian archbishop appealed to Armenian churches abroad to immediately denounce all anti-Turkish incidents.

The archbishop concluded his statement by praying for the unity and happiness of the Turkish people, for the continuation of century-long brotherly relations with our community and the further success of our honorable state administrators.

HURRIYET ON INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS, WALDHEIM PROPOSAL

C071210 Istanbul HURRIYET in Turkish 5 Nov 80 p 3

[Editorial by Oktay Eksi: "Cyprus on the Scene Again"]

[Text] About 10 days ago when the leader of the Turkish Cypriots, Rauf Denktas, came to Ankara, he expressed the view that the Cyprus issue had reached a "developing" stage toward a final settlement. We do not know whether these words were the outcome of his visit to Ankara or whether they had slipped out of his mouth because he thought it was not "Cyprus' turn" after Greece's return to NATO.

Rauf Denktas is in Istanbul now because of his "indisposition." Nevertheless, it is widely believed that this "indisposition," more than his health, is linked with the Cyprus issue because this issue has, in the past week, "developed" much faster than Denktas had expected. What is more, this development has taken place not within the framework of the intercommunal talks, but outside it. As is known, the intercommunal talks began on 16 September following a mutual decision. Let me sum it up: While the intercommunal talks were going on, UN Secretary General Kurt Waldheim sent messages to the foreign minister of the Turkish Cypriot community and to the foreign minister of the Greek Cypriot administration "requesting them to proceed to New York for consultations."

Although the contents of the message to both sides were not divulged, the Turkish Cypriot community, suspecting a snag somewhere, adopted a "positive" stand toward the message. On the other hand, the response of the Greek Cypriot side, which had proclaimed to the world that they had rejected the invitation, was something like this: "We will not participate in this call as it gives the impression that we are viewed on the same footing as the Turkish Cypriots."

But in the meantime, it was understood that Waldheim had made this call for the purpose of talking the Turkish Cypriots into accepting a plan compatible with the aspirations of the Greek Cypriots. For, in accordance with the 10-article agreement reached between Denktas and Kiprianou on 19 May, 1979, Waldheim was trying to secure "an agreement for Varosha to be opened for settlement under the auspices of the United Nations before a final solution had been reached."

In return, Waldheim was hoping to secure the implementation of the following sentence which occurs in another article of the Denktas-Kiprianou agreement: "...The sides have decided to comply with the practical measures to be taken by both sides toward the restoration of understanding, confidence and normal conditions."

Waldheim hoped that this would bring to the negotiating table such matters as the lifting of the economic embargo imposed on the Turkish Cypriots, the termination of the propaganda campaign waged against the Turks at the international level and the release of funds belonging to Turkish Cypriot banks that are now held by Greek Cypriot banks.

However, the truth is that once the Varosha dispute is resolved in a manner compatible with the desires of the Greek Cypriots, it would be a vain illusion for the Turkish Cypriots to think that they could secure anything from the Greek Cypriots in return.

To put it more clearly, in the light of the experience he has acquired from his negotiating with the Greek Cypriots over the years, Denktas has come to know that the Greek Cypriots cannot be trusted. That is why he refrains from making the concessions which Waldheim suggests. In view of the fact that Kiprianou continues to violate the 19 May 1979 agreement through his efforts to have resolutions adopted at the international level against the Turkish Cypriots, a one-sided concession of Denktas would plunge him into an extremely difficult position in the eyes of his community. This is why Denktas is "indisposed" at the moment.

ECONOMIC ACTION PROGRAM SET BY ISLAMIC CONFERENCE IN ANKARA

TA061617 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 6 Nov 80

[Statement by Rashi Gumrukcuoglu, Foreign Ministry General Secretariat's deputy assistant for economic affairs and head of the Turkish delegation at the Islamic cooperation meeting, at a news conference in Ankara; date not specified—recorded]

[Text] This meeting was held in accordance with a Turkish proposal approved at the 10th and 11th Islamic countries conference held in Morocco and Karachi [as heard] in order to provide an occasion to examine the issue of economic cooperation among the Islamic countries and to reach the necessary resolutions. As a result of this proposal, this meeting which has now been completed was held in Ankara. Opportunities for cooperation in the fields of industry, economy and trade among the Islamic countries were meticulously examined during this meeting. As a result of these deliberations an action program has been determined.

This program envisages the rearrangement, systemization, expansion and enhancement of cooperation among Islamic countries, taking into consideration work conducted earlier on this subject. The promotion of cooperation in trade relations has been examined in detail. Measures to provide this development have been included in the action program. Customs exemptions, the creation of complementary industries, the promotion of joint enterprises and the signing of long-term supply contracts are among the measures envisaged in the program.

Another subject discussed during the conference was the issue of technical cooperation. As is known, the Islamic countries are all at different levels of economic development and technical capacity, and each country has gained a different experience and knowledge in this field. Therefore, it is only natural that this various experience and knowledge should be available to all countries. This is another aspect of the cooperation envisaged in the program.

This action program will go into effect as soon as it is ratified by the concerned countries. I am convinced that it will be beneficial to all the Islamic countries in various fields. Whenever a need arises—and not later than 2 years—the concerned technical ministries will meet in order to provide for the necessary cooperation, directives and measures. This will provide opportunities for reaching greater dimensions in cooperation among these countries in the future.

Conference Ends

[Text] The Islamic countries economic cooperation meeting which opened in Ankara the other day has ended. An action program that envisages the strengthening of economic cooperation among Islamic countries was adopted at the meeting. The action program will become effective after it is approved at the third summit meeting of Islamic countries to convene in Saudi Arabia in the beginning of January. The action plan, adopted by the representatives of 24 Islamic countries that participated in the meeting, envisages cooperation for the next 10 years in the fields of food, agriculture, trade, industry, tourism and communication, financial matters, manpower and social affairs, population, health, energy, and science and technology. According to the commercial issues section of the action plan, the foreign trade of Islamic countries will be developed and gradually unified, obstacles limiting trade will be eliminated, and a system of trade privileges based on mutual interests will be established. The section of the plan dealing with financial and monetary problems stipulates that the development program of oil importing Islamic countries be supported and that a joint capital market be established among these countries. The action plan also calls for priority to Islamic countries in the flow of manpower and for determining a joint social security model. According to the plan regional food supplies are to be kept to used in times of emergency.

The economic affairs aide of the Foreign Ministry secretary general and head of the Turkish delegation at the meetings, Rahmi Gumrukcuoglu held a news conference at the conclusion of the Islamic meeting. Gumrukcuoglu expressed the conviction that the meeting will yield positive results for Turkey. Nothing that the action plan formulated at the meeting aimed at regulating cooperation among Islamic countries, Gumrukcuoglu added that, thus, this cooperation will gain new dimensions. Recalling that a decision had been made at the meeting for OPEC countries to give priority to oil consuming Islamic countries on the issue of oil sales, Gumrukcuoglu added that this decision will become effective after the governments of the concerned countries approve it. He also noted that Islamic countries are determined to continue their aid to the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus in a bid to contribute to its development and to revive its economy. Gumrukcuoglu said that the participating countries decided to meet at the ministerial level at least every other year in order to ensure the implementation of the decisions made at the Ankara meeting. He concluded by saying that at these meetings the necessary coordination will be secured and measures to enable implementation will be taken. In reply to a question, Gumrukcuoglu said the issue of aid by rich Islamic countries to the other Islamic countries had not been taken up at the meeting, but that cooperation in the exploitation of resources had been discussed.

The delegations that participated in the Ankara meeting left for Istanbul by air this afternoon. The delegations will visit various historic and tourist sites and industrial installations. The delegations will leave Turkey on Saturday 8 November.

EURO-MPS VOTE TO RESTORE EEC BUDGET CUTS

LD071217 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 7 Nov 80 p 5

[Alan Osborn dispatch: "Europe-MPs Reject Budget Cuts"]

[Text] Luxembourg--A new confrontation between the European Parliament and Common Market budget ministers over the level of EEC spending next year is on the way.

After a special four-day sitting in Luxembourg, Euro-MPs voted yesterday to restore practically all the cuts ordered in the next year's budget by ministers last month.

Specifically they put pounds 170 million back into the regional fund and pounds 153 million back into the social fund.

They also voted to freeze 2 per cent of proposed agricultural spending which takes three quarters of the entire budget--as a reserve to help finance any increases in farm prices that they be agreed next spring by ministers.

Overall, the package approved by Euro-MPs yesterday calls for the EEC to spend pounds 12,400 million next year. This includes more than pounds 600 million to be paid back to Britain in order to reduce its EEC budget bills.

In essence the Europe-MPs have voted to reverse the cuts made by ministers and restore the budget to the original plan drawn up by the Commission in Brussels.

But the major question--and it remains unanswered after the first reading--is whether the Parliament will feel strongly enough to press its opposition to the point of rejecting the budget, as it did last year.

It is unlikely that it will reject the budget. Last year's revolt petered out in disarray after five months and left the Parliament with little to show for its action.

Many MPs believe the Community is approaching a financial crisis as its sources of finance run dry and say that the Parliament would be best advised to hold its fire for the time being.

Also many of the British Tories, who played an important part in last year's revolt, will be less inclined to rock the boat this year in view of the big refunds for Britain contained in the budget.

Nevertheless the Parliament will lose all credibility if it does not take a strong stand over spending and some tough fighting is expected in Luxembourg. The next step is for EEC budget ministers to reconsider the proposals and then the Parliament will have its second, and clinching, reading of the matter next month.

The impression in Luxembourg is that the ministers of member states will have to give way to some extent on the regional and social funds, but it seems highly unlikely they will agree to anything that restrains farm spending.

SCHMIDT VIEWS EAST-WEST RELATIONS, GOVERNMENT POLICIES

LD071110 Hamburg DPA in German 1035 GMT 7 Nov 80

[Text] Bonn, 7 Nov (DPA)--Following the election of the new U.S. president, Ronald Reagan, Federal Chancellor Schmidt considers a "pause for thought" inevitable in the relations between the two world powers, the United States and the USSR, although he expects a continuation of the East-West dialogue in the coming year.

In a DPA interview Schmidt said today that the "inevitable pause for thought" necessitated by the formation of a new government in Washington, which he does not regard as the start of a standstill in East-West relations, will, probably also have an effect on the CSCE followup conference in Madrid, the Vienna talks on forces reduction in Europe and the U.S.-Soviet negotiations in Geneva on medium-range strategic missiles. Even so, the United States and the USSR both have a continued interest in disarmament negotiations.

In his first interview since his reelection as head of government, Schmidt also stressed as a result of the coalition talks the Federal Government's readiness and intention to continue its policy of cooperation with East Europe, especially with the GDR, despite the recent fence-building measures, and rejected any retaliatory measures against East Berlin. On the other hand, he was doubtful of any rapid progress being possible. Overcoming the present "severe setback" in relations with the GDR also depends on the overall political situation in the world.

On domestic policy, the chancellor stressed that the difficult financial situation does not mean that the policy of reforms has been abandoned, although reforms costing a great deal of money will have to wait. The SPD and FDP will seek an early agreement on legislation concerning joint decision-making in the coal and steel industry, which was not reached during the coalition talks.

On Reagan and East-West relations: After the change of leadership in the United States, it would take some time--if only because of the appointment of many new persons--before the details of the political contours of the Reagan administration became fully apparent. This applied both to the allies of the United States and to the relationship with the USSR as well as the field of arms control. During the election campaign, Reagan rejected SALT II but not the SALT process altogether, and he declared that he wanted agreements on arms limitation. The USSR, whose leadership in the past had always reacted realistically to facts, would have to wait until the end of the initial period of the new leadership in Washington. "I believe that the dialogue between the two world powers, which seemed very much endangered after the intervention in Afghanistan, will be continued under Reagan in 1981, perhpps with fresh accents, but certainly with care."

On contributions to NATO: In connection with U.S. demands for a greater defense contribution by the Federal Republic, Schmidt rejected "complaints in advance" that Bonn would fail to reach NATO's target of a 3 percent increase in arms expenditures during the coming year. The same had been said at the beginning of this year and yet the Federal Government had increased its defense expenditure by 2.8 percent in real terms. "This kind of accusation is always made at the beginning of a new budget year, yet at the end everybody is satisfied." The coming year would see a similar development.

Schmidt said that in the event of a conceivable lasting reduction in economic growth throughout the Western world a "fresh look will be needed" also at NATO's declaration of intent of an annual 3 percent increase in expenditure. Alluding especially to the United States, which has no compulsory military service, he stressed: "Western freedom is defended not by paper money but by human beings." Compulsory military service in European NATO states was a very major and psychologically important contribution to preservation of the military equilibrium and defense capability.

On the GDR and Eastern Europe: "It remains our firm intention to cooperate, based on the equilibrium in Europe, with the countries of Eastern Europe, especially of course with the GDR." Following the severe setbacks resulting from the increase in the minimum exchange requirement for Western visitors to the GDR, this will not "produce fresh progress very quickly at the present time." The chancellor gave this assurance: "We stand by our offer and our inherent readiness to cooperate and, for our part, we are not considering any retaliatory measures, nor shall we pursue a policy of the empty chair vis-a-vis East Berlin." Schmidt confirmed that Bonn has set in motion the procedure for accreditation of State Secretary Boelling by the GDR as the new permanent representative in East Berlin. Asked whether he expected an early agreement by the GDR to this new appointment, the chancellor said: "I very much hope so."

On finance and the economy: Schmidt conceded that the present financial situation was difficult, but warned against excessively "gloomy forecasts." He stressed: "There is certainly no need to bid farewell to the policy of reforms. However, one must not at present embark upon reforms which cost a great deal of money." The Federal Republic had always shown itself capable of coping with economic difficulties. This gave him the confidence which all Germans, employers and workers alike, should share, that the worldwide problems ahead could be mastered.

GENSCHER ON NEW U.S. ADMINISTRATION, SALT, MADRID CSCE

DW071231 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany
0617 GMT 7 Nov 80

[Correspondent Lenz interview with Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher in Bonn--live or recorded]

[Text] [Question] In reply to questions about U.S. President-elect Ronald Reagan and his policy, politicians all over the world are coming up with the hopeful anticipation of more steadiness in U.S. policy, this at the same time being a passing shot at departing President Carter. Does steadiness mean predictability, which the Federal Government as well desires of the American partner?

[Answer] Yes, German foreign policy is steady and predictable. This is highly significant for every partner in the alliance, and this naturally also holds true for the new U.S. administration. We are very confident in this respect. The U.S. president, the president-elect, during his press conference yesterday expressed his determination to make political decisions in close coordination with the European allies. We are familiar with quite a few of his closest aides with whom we have worked in the past in shaping the joint policy of the Western alliance. This, too, is a guarantee for the steadiness of U.S. policy, for U.S.-European and U.S.-German relations which, after all, rest on a very solid basis, namely, on the common concept of values of freedom, human dignity and self-determination. This makes us confident that we will cooperate well with the new U.S. administration as well.

[Question] Are these pleading words across the Atlantic; or do you consider them a description of the present state of affairs?

[Answer] I regard this as a description of the present and future state of affairs. There can be no doubt about the fact that the new U.S. president, too, will endeavor as we do to guarantee the security of the partners of the Western alliance through common efforts and that he will also seek cooperation and compromise in the dialogue with the Soviet Union and the states of Eastern Europe on the basis of the security thus created. When I say on this basis I mean the basis of the balance of forces. Superiority on one side, after all, would automatically impair stability in Europe. No doubt the new president will do everything in his power to ensure this balance of forces under any circumstances through the necessary Western efforts, but that he will endeavor, as we do, to achieve this balance on as low an arms level as possible through talks on questions concerning arms control and disarmament. Naturally there are two sides to this coin, which means that the other side must go along with the idea.

The will to make all spheres of East-West relations and of U.S.-Soviet relations the subject of dialogue with the Soviet Union shows that the U.S. leadership that will man the helm in Washington at the beginning of next year plans to continue the dialogue with the East, that it wishes everything included in this dialogue that we, too, would like to see included, because we are convinced that the acceptance of the principle of the indivisibility of detente policy alone can in the long run ensure stability, that is peace, in the world.

[Question] If I understand you correctly you do not share a certain anxiety that this new U.S. administration will be much less prepared than its predecessor to avoid the closure of the arms gap in Europe?

[Answer] I am firmly convinced that this government will do everything in its power, as we will, to guarantee the security of all partners, but that it is determined, as we are, to achieve arms control and disarmament if the other side cooperates--and this is reflected by the will to hold a dialogue with the Soviet Union on all important issues. I believe that in the new U.S. Government, and by that I mean the president-elect as well as the individuals he introduced yesterday as his closest aides, we are dealing with responsible politicians with whom we can cooperate in the confidence that the policy of the Western alliance will be consistently continued. This policy means safeguarding peace, preserving freedom and efforts for cooperation wherever possible on the basis of the security jointly created; it means knowing that detente in the long run can last only if it is not violated in certain fields. This is what we mean by indivisibility of detente policy.

[Question] Is it at all possible that the dialogue on the limitation of nuclear medium-range arms in Europe--which has hardly begun--that this dialogue can be continued without Washington ratifying SALT II?

[Answer] The new president has said that he will discuss all fields, that means strategic arms as well. He probably means strategic medium-range arms as well as strategic intercontinental arms. It means that he does not rule out talks on these arms, he wants to discuss them in connection with other issues. I believe that once the dialogue is begun it will soon turn out that interests on both sides will make progress necessary here as well. In other words, the new leadership does not refuse negotiations on SALT, it wants to negotiate on this, but within a somewhat larger framework.

[Question] It means that the Soviet Union will have to be prepared to negotiate on the SALT II treaty if it is greatly interested--and it is--in new arms control agreements, as they are planned for SALT III?

[Answer] Yes, I believe that all sides--in saying this I mean the East as well as the West--will strive for such progress at the conference table, after having first discussed various points of view on international policy.

[Question] American-German relations are very close for several reasons. Doesn't it almost necessitate changes in Federal German policy if there are changes in American policy?

[Answer] You are absolutely right. We have particularly close relations with the United States. We know that these particularly close and friendly relations are a most indispensable guarantee for our independence and freedom. I have always maintained that our position, the position of the Federal Republic of Germany, is not between the two world powers, but at the side of the United States--together with our European partners. In voicing this opinion I feel I can also speak on behalf of all democratic parties in this country and do so as a German and as a minister. Politics is never something static; foreign policy is not either. It must be further developed.

If one takes into consideration that most of the advisers of the new American president are persons with whom we have formed a common policy in the past, I am absolutely certain that the continuity of American policy you mentioned in the beginning will continue in the future--continuity also with regard to the further development of a common policy.

The announcement by the new president that he will shape his new policy in close coordination with the European allies demonstrates that he will maintain continuity retarding the existing close and friendly cooperation.

[Question] Does this announcement make you optimistic that it will be easier in the future to better point out Federal German and thus identical European interests in the Atlantic dialogue?

[Answer] This will be possible also in the future in trustful cooperation.

Opposes Postponing CSCE

LD091404 Hamburg DPA in German 1321 GMT 9 Nov 80

[Excerpt] Bonn, 9 Nov (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher spoke out against a postponement of the CSCE followup conference in Madrid in view of the tense relations between East and West. The conference should take place, thereby providing an opportunity for discussing the East-West situation overall and the implementation of the Helsinki Final Act, said the minister on Sunday evening to ZDF.

The minister stressed the West's intention to thoroughly discuss the state of affairs concerning the implementation of the Final Act. The latest measures in the GDR's policy of delimitation, above all the raising of the compulsory minimum exchange requirement for Western visitors, also belong in a discussion of the East-West situation. The folowup conference should not be like a court of justice, but neither do we want a collection of eloquent speeches. "On the contrary, we should state openly and unequivocally what the situation is, what is yet to be done and what we don't like."

POLITICIANS COMMENT ON U.S. ELECTIONS, ECONOMIC ISSUES

DW071556 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 2020 GMT 6 Nov 80

[Excerpts from the "Bonn Roundtable" made up of Federal Economics Minister Otto Graf Lambsdorff, Federal Finance Minister Hans Matthoefer, Schleswig-Holstein Minister-President Gerhard Stoltenberg and CDU/CSU economic spokesman Theodor Waigel, with Johannes Gross moderating--live or recorded in the networks Bonn studio]

[Excerpts] [Lambsdorff] Surely concentrated efforts will be made in the United States toward cutting down the inflation rate, which are bound to have some currency policy repercussions. I assume that we will be able to achieve a great deal of conformity very soon on questions concerning economic and currency policy.

[Stoltenberg] Without indulging in any speculation, I would say that on one point a clear demand will be addressed to us. I am positive that the Federal Government will be confronted with the urgent demand to implement fully the agreement NATO made with respect to defense spending. And this, after all, is one of the difficult points in the financial discussion in our country.

[Matthoefer] I would like to address a wish to the new administration: We would like to see a bit more steadiness so as not to create fluctuations but to concentrate on creating better framework conditions for the economy to develop calmly.

[Lambsdorff] It is part of the election campaign equipment of any presidential candidate in the United States to promise a balanced budget at least by the end of his term; not a reduction of the national debt, nobody will reduce that, nor does anybody promise to do so.

But what they do propose is balanced budgets, that is to say, a decelleration of additional indebtedness with a simultaneous tax cut, measures against unemployment and measures against inflation. At the moment this sounds utopian, but there must indeed be a lot of good reasons to cause a person to rely on having investment forces released in the economy to ensure that unemployment, above all, and also inflation will be tackled in the United States. I believe that those tackling this task are realists, that they have a lot of know-how and that they stand a fair chance of succeeding, even though, admittedly, the simultaneous tasks in the field of defense policy surely represent a significant burden. Besides, and may I be allowed to say this as my personal opinion as I am not a defense expert, the issue will not be settled in the United States solely by spending money.

[Gross] Conscription and a lot more which the Americans must now keep in mind. Mr. Stoltenberg has asked about the promise by the Federal Government to increase our NATO contribution by real 3 percent. Do you really believe that this can be upheld?

[Matthoefer] I believe we must really start a defense discussion for a change, and then it will be necessary to point out what we Germans can do in that particular field. What we can do, for example, is deploying within 12 days more than 4 trained million men, armed, aware of their combat mission and motivated to defend their homeland. It would be a matter of finding out whether other countries which are four times as big as we are can do that. When I take a look at the Bundeswehr, which represents a cross section of our people of average intelligence—we do not have a drug problem, we have a well-trained force with modern arms representing a good defense army. All this must be kept in mind before mechanistic criteria are applied. After all, we are friends of the Americans. Ways of jointly enhancing our defense force will be discussed

[Stoltenberg] Basically all this sounds very good, and we are agreed in certain principles. But there is no dodging the fact that Chancellor Schmidt not so long ago, and supported by a cabinet decision which both of you gentlemen endorsed, clearly undertook a commitment: 3 percent real growth. You know at the time that financial situation of the Federal Government would be difficult, to put it mildly. Now you are lagging behind because the financial situation has become extremely aggravated. For the sake of the discussion here, I will also tell you that you will get into a foreign policy discussion with the new U.S. administration, you may be sure of that. We don't need to even speculate about that.

But let me talk about the internal situation. That is not what the Bundeswehr is like. The most recent decisions are resulting in a situation where the new weapons systems ordered by the Federal Government, including those still under development as well as those in serial production, are not completely covered financially. The consequence is that in the fall the federal defense minister will have to write letters to many companies in the Federal Republic down to middle-level ones delivering socks or other textiles, telling them that the goods must be delivered by 1 November but that he will be unable to make payment for them before February or March. The measures have the effect that the envisaged maintenance funds under the emergency program for the upkeep of old barracks will be cut. This is part of the other side of the generally fine looking picture. I see with concern that extreme burdens will be forthcoming in this field, and this is but one aspect of the further dramatically worsened financial situation under public assessment since 5 October, and of the immense difficulties which you obviously had to cope with in the negotiations of the past 10 days.

[Matthoeffer] There is no such thing as a dramatically aggravated financial situation, of course. What is it that we are doing, anyway? We are increasing our spending next year by 4 percent. We had a medium-term finance plan under which we intended to borrow DM27 billion. This is what we decided to do 1-1/2 years ago, and this is exactly what we will do. After all, it goes without saying that immense demands are put on the Federal budget and that the federal finance minister must fight to ensure that the tax funds are used as effectively as possible. In the coalition talks we decided, first of all, to jack up the defense budget by an additional DM620 million beyond the medium-term finance planning.

I would not call this a financial crisis. This is a sizeable amount indeed. Now of course you can say that somebody wrote a letter that socks should be delivered but that payment could only be made later. I cannot verify this now, but we will track it down. I do not know whether there are any criteria or tests by which the combat value of an army can be judged in peacetime. If there were such tests, then the Bundeswehr would come out at the top with flying colors among the best armies in the world. No doubt about that.

[Waigel] Minister Matthoefer, what you failed to take into account at all was the change in the international situation. We cannot only discuss our situation and what the Bundeswehr is like. In that respect favorable things may be said, but negative aspects can be noted, too. Yet a decisive question is where do we go from here in foreign policy, what about detente, how is detente being assessed, hasn't the concept of realistic detente as we of the opposition have always used it now prevailed more strongly in the United States? If and when the Americans assume burdens on our behalf elsewhere in the world and massively increase their defense efforts, then it will be very hard for us to prevail with the arguments you advanced a while ago.

[Matthoefer] After all, DM620 million in not peanuts. We must say that the governments of the democratic capitalist countries made two mistakes in the great crisis of the early thirties. They allowed the world currency system to break down, and they isolated their own economies through protectionist measures, thus destroying the world market. They also pursued a wrong finance policy.

We have successfully avoided making the first mistake so far. We meet regularly in many bodies, with the world economic summit being one of the most important. The others demanded that we produce 1 percent of our gross national product as additional purchasing power. We refused for a long time, and we probably would not have made quite as much in 1979 as we did later on because of this international agreement. Taking this decision—which, by the way, has led to an economic growth rate of 4.5 percent and lower price increases than anywhere else in the world—out of its international context and criticizing it can only be strongly rejected. Also, I do not believe that the effect of the oil tax yield of some DM2 billion in 1981 will be the most important matter. For me the most importanat matter is the effect this tax will have in addition to its fiscal effect, namely, the additional curtailment of oil consumption.

[Gross] Don't you fear that an oil tax increase could indicate to the OPEC countries that they can easily increase their prices a bit if we impose additional fiscal burdens?

[Matthoefer] We consume too much oil. If oil prices increase, this will lead to a foreign trade deficit. The foreign trade deficit can be financed only by use of our foreign currency reserves and through bringing capital in. If one wants to avoid an exodus of capital and if one wants to have capital coming in, one must keep interest rates high. If one keeps interest rates high, that has a dampening effect on investments and thus on jobs. So those who want to have full employment or close to a state of full employment must support low interest rates. In order to facilitate such action by the issuing bank, the foreign trade balance deficit must be curtailed or eliminated. In order to achieve this, oil consumption must be drastically cut. That is a logical chain which is absolutely necessary, even if this is not popular. How will the OPEC countries react? They will continue to increase the oil price until oil consumption sinks drastically. We must, therefore, decrease oil consumption through own national measures.

Stobbe Remarks

LD081110 Hamburg DPA in German 0918 GMT 8 Nov 80

[Text] Bonn, 8 Nov (DPA)—In the opinion of Berlin's governing mayor, Dietrich Stobbe (SPD), the election of the American president, Ronald Reagan, holds out the "great hope that American foreign policy will become more predictable than hitherto for the U.S. partners."

Stobbe, who took part in meetings of leading SPD bodies in Bonn this week and had a series of talks including one with Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, said in a DPA interview today that at a time when there are many problems to be solved in the international field, predictability is of "great political value."

Stobbe said that Reagan's remarks after his election showed a willingness to make a joint assessment of important questions in the Western alliance and to this extent to take European interests seriously. This is also in Berlin's interests, since the city is dependent on a united West.

It is of crucial importance for the future of Berlin, Stobbe said, that the great powers, the United States and Soviet Union, remain aware of their joint responsibility for settling conflicts in the interests of peace. It is only if approached in this spirit that the Quadripartite Agreement on Berlin can be applied in full. The basic idea of a balance in East-West relations must be a yardstick for the actions of both sides. It is of prime importance that the issues which have put a strain on East-West relations recently, such as the armament problems and the handling of crises in areas outside the sphere of NATO and the Warsaw Pact, should be resolved.

Touching on the tense situation between Bonn and East Berlin Stobbe said that the present position in inter-German relations shows that the old rule still applies that in the long term inter-German relations cannot develop better than East-West relations in general, especially those between Washington and Moscow. It must therefore be made clear that the revival of "inter-German dynamism," important though it is, cannot be brought about by Bonn and East Berlin alone. "We must use the pause for thought between the two superpowers for a thorough discussion of the bases and prospects of our policy concerning Germany as a whole."

A fresh inter-German dialogue which was started then could have a prospect of success only if the GDR "removes the barriers it has put up by raising the minimum exchange requirement and by unrealistic demands." It must remain the fundamental aim of inter-German policy that the two German states should make a decisive contribution to the safeguarding of peace, by making possible, notwithstanding the division, a peaceful change in relations.

CDU Expert Woerner Interview

DW071603 Cologne Duetschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0618 GMT 6 Nov 80

[Reporter Hauschild interview with Dr Manfred Woerner, CDU Bundestag deputy and foreign policy expert, in Bonn--recorded]

[Text] [Question] While the representatives of the coalition parties maintained quite a bit of restraint yesterday in their comment on the election victory of American presidential candidate Ronald Reagan, the CDU/CSU Union clearly said it was pleased. What hopes do the CDU/CSU place on Reagan?

[Answee] Primarily we expect him to energetically lead the Western world and the alliance, to follow a clear and continuous American foreign policy course, and eventually we expect him to upgrade the foremost world power, the Americans and their position in the world.

[Question] Ronald Reagan stressed his firm intention repeatedly in the election campaign to face the Soviet Union more firmly. He said that if need be, we would have an arms race with Moscow if the Kremlin was not prepared to limit its military potential. Moscow will not be able to stand a long arms race, as Reagan knows. Won't East-West relations face a new glacial period that way?

[Answer] First of all, I believe that you have not quite correctly interpreted Reagan's intentions.

He only said that the West must reestablish a balance, that the West must make it clear to the Soviet Union that one-sided rearmament--such as in the Soviet Union--cannot be accepted just like that. Then one must also say that the glacial period has begun long ago, and not due to the fault of the Americans or of the West, but because the Soviet Union obviously has introduced a new phase of delimitation. So I do not believe that a somewhat more energetic stance by the Americans vis-a-vis the Soviets will bring about a glacial period. I much rather believe that this would be a chance to make the Soviet leaders realize that they must be frankly and honestly prepared to take part in worldwide cooperation and disarmament, if they do not want to conditions which will safeguard the survival of the free West. I think that is legitimate. So I do not believe that we are threatened with a relapse into cold war. I believe that we have a chance here to really rebuild world politics by making it clear to the Soviets that they cannot expect help from the West while steering a confrontation course and threatening the lifelines of the West.

[Question] Reagan stressed repeatedly in the election campaign--literally--that he wants to negotiate with the Soviets from a superior position. In other words, he wants to rearm in order to achieve the superior position. Is that acceptable at all for the Soviets, is that at all predictable?

[Answer] Well, I believe that he modified his position already in the election campaign, so that fears seem unfounded to me that a new arms race could be in the offing. Facts will make him follow a line that will certainly not aim for military superiority but at best for the reestablishment of a balance of forces.

[Question] If there will not be a new and intensified arms race, there is still the intention of the United States to intensify its armament efforts. If the United States really wants to increase its armament as planned by Reagan while simultaneously increasing its worldwide involvements, the Federal Republic will probably have to face new financial burdens. Will an increase of the defense budget by a real 3 percent of the gross national product then probably not suffice?

[Answer] I can merely tell you that this statement is certainly correct. I expect three things from Reagan in the Atlantic alliance: first, intensified defense efforts; second, Reagan will press much stronger than his predecessor for individual contributions by the Europeans; third, I believe that he will achieve a--let me say--examination of some detente policy elements.

We must clearly see that the Federal Government in deciding to increase the budget by just 1.7 percent has made a most risky decision. I reckon with a very grave and maybe even crisis-like aggravation of our relations with the Americans. I cannot imagine the Americans will accept it simply like that, particularly since the Federal Republic of Germany has solemnly and repeatedly promised this.

I believe that the pleasant times have gone when we expected the protection of the Americans as something natural without being prepared to stick with our commitment. I think this is a catastrophic foreign political mistake right at the beginning of the time in government of the new Federal Government. I want to repeat that nobody should believe that more armament and more defense will be the main things of this new policy. We will see very quickly that Reagan will make other efforts and that the whole alliance must make efforts to seek a disarmament dialogue with the Soviet Union--maybe on a new basis. There is no such thing as maybe disrupting the talks with Moscow; they will just be held on a new basis.

[Question] Does a new basis mean a policy of strength?

[Answer] Well, that is too simple a formula. It means first of all a seriously-taken balance policy.

[Question] You just mentioned a European increase and the preparedness of the European partners to do more. If the Federal Republic has difficulties cooperating due to its budget means, what can the Belgians, the Dutch and the Danish alliance partners do?

[Answer] Well, that looks bad, as we know. But that cannot be an excuse for us as one of the strongest European powers to lag behind with our contribution promise. I ask you to please not forget that we have confirmed it solemnly. The German foreign minister went over there last year, he said it repeatedly to the Bundestag. The federal chancellor has promised it.

We have been over there often enough and I know a number of people from Reagan's staff of advisers myself. The Americans come over here--I have talked to Reagan myself for more than 2 hours when he was here in Bonn 2 years ago--and I can just say that the Americans will make us face the problem making our defense contribution according to our efficiency. They are not prepared any longer to carry all or most of the burdens for the whole free Western world alone, particularly since they have serious economic problems themselves. The Europeans are not the only ones who have problems. I think we ought to put ourselves into the position of the Americans; we then would react exactly the same way.

The times have gone--I say again--when we believed that the great and rich uncle over there would handle matters for us. We have certainly more of a say, but we must contribute what we have promised ourselves, what has been solemnly promised in the alliance. It was not promised just for fun, but because the Soviet Union has doubled its armament efforts in the last decade.

[Question] Yes, but the opposition knows about the federal budget's austerity pressure. The opposition has warned long enough against the effects of a policy entailing expenditures. Where should the money be taken from? There have not been particular efforts to economize.

[Answer] I would say that the current performance of the government does not indicate a will to economize. We see the intention to increase taxes. One must compare the part ot be achieved through economization with the part to be achieved through tax increases. Then one will see that one has embarked on a wrong way. We said prior to the elections--and we stick with it--that we are forced to economize. We will certainly be prepared to carry some of the burdens in this field. But first of all it is the government's turn to make a move. It cannot yell right away again that the opposition should make suggestions, if the government is not prepared to set the right priorities and energetically use the reserves.

APEL ON EFFECT OF FINANCIAL RESTRICTIONS ON ARMED FORCES

LD100952 Hamburg DPA in German 0105 GMT 10 Nov 80

Apel said that he does not want to "conceal the fact that the financial restrictions of the public budgets will also affect the future defense budget." Focal points must now be established without incurring reduced defense capability. "The times of ample funds are past." At the same time ministerial responsibility will not be affected, and this also applies to the competencies of the legislature and its defense committee, nor will any sort of body be set up which obscure existing responsibilities. The coalition agreement confirmed this and it cannot be changed by "deliberate false information."

Apel said that the first closed meeting will be held on 19 November to assess the consequences for the 1981 defense budget. A second closed meeting is scheduled for the second half of February, "which must then deal with and decide on matters which go beyond 1981, particularly the next generation of weapons for the nineties." Here decisions must be made which, in view of the scarcity of funds, demand a new concept of research and technology on the part of the Defense Ministry. Apel said that there are some unorthodox considerations, such as not routinely equipping all of the next generation of armored vehicles with tracks. It also must be critically examined whether, in view of the capacity to operate at long distance with missiles, long-range warships will in future have as large a role to play in the Baltic as hitherto.

FOREIGN TRADE DEFICIT DECREASED IN SEPTEMBER

DW071558 Bonn DIE WELT in German 7 Nov 80 p 9

[Claus Dertinger article: "Deficit Decreased in September; So Far 25 Billion in the Red"]

[Text] Frankfurt--Thanks to a seasonally increased foreign trade surplus the German foreign trade deficit in September decreased from DM4.4 billion in August to DM2.7 billion. The deficit thus was only slightly greater than a year ago (DM2.5 billion). For the first three quarters of this year the deficit in the foreign trade balance thus adds up to DM24.5 billion. Compared with the same period of the preceding year this is tantamount to a worsening by nearly DM16 billion, attributable primarily to the fact that the foreign trade surplus has shrunk to barely DM6.1 billion, or one-third of the preceding year's level, because of greater import expenditures above all due to higher oil prices. At the same time the traditional deficits in services and transfers increased by DM4.3 to 32.1 billion.

Since the DM13.3 billion in capital imports was not sufficient for financing the foreign trade deficit of DM24.5 billion and the DM6.9 billion deficit that emerged in addition in the remaining categories that cannot be broken down statistically, including primarily German trade credits, it was necessary to fall back on DM17.6 billion in Federal Bank currency reserves which decreased by another DM3.5 billion in October. The capital predominantly imported by companies nearly exclusively was of a short-term nature (DM12.6 billion). In long-term business DM9.7 billion in public capital imports was nearly completely offset by DM9 billion in private capital exports. In that respect German direct investments abroad as well as German purchases of foreign bonds and the emission of German titles abroad play the main role.

GDR REQUEST FOR EXTRADITION OF SOLDIER REJECTED

LD072123 Hamburg DPA in German 1549 GMT 7 Nov 80

[Excerpt] Berlin, 7 Nov (DPA)--The 19 year-old GDR border soldier, Egon Bunge, who fled last Tuesday to West Berlin is not being extradited to the GDR. The prosecutor general at the West Berlin Superior Court of Justice today rejected by telex the judicial assistance request from the GDR prosecutor general for the extradition of the escapee. A judicial assistance request for the handing over of facts which might help clarify the case was also passed on to the GDR. Bunge is said to have shot a colleague during his escape. The reasons given in the telegram to the GDR prosecutor general for the rejection of the judicial assistance request were that juveniles in the GDR between the ages of 18 and 21, regardless of their stage of development, come under adult criminal law. This, however, contradicts according to permanent higher court jurisdiction the purpose of the youth law applicable in the Federal Republic and West Berlin. The telegram states that this did not, however, mean that punishable conduct should remain unpunished. It was pointed out that the public prosecutor at the regional court had instituted preliminary proceedings against Bunge for homicide and that the Tiergarten local court has meanwhile issued a warrant for the arrest of Bunge.

GISCARD, SCHMIDT TO DISCUSS RELATIONS WITH U.S.

LD091812 Paris Domestic Service in French 1700 GMT 9 Nov 80

[Text] The French head of state is to meet Helmut Schmidt at the Elysee tomorrow. The German chancellor will pay a lightning visit to Paris 10 days before the one he is due to make to the United States, where he hopes to meet Ronald Reagan. Of course, the election of the latter and its consequences for East-West relations as well as Washington's relations with its European allies will be at the center of the Schmidt-Giscard d'Estaing talks. It is further stressed in France that this meeting comes on the eve of the opening of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe in Madrid.

FRANCOIS-PONCET ON WEST'S REACTION TO POLISH CRISIS

LD081554 Paris Domestic Service in French 1400 GMT 8 Nov 80

[Text] In the view of French Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet, on the whole the West reacted appropriately in the face of the Polish crisis. In an interview published by LE FIGARO magazine only a few days before the foreign policy debate in the National Assembly, the minister states that all that the West should desire now is for Poland to be able to overcome its difficulties.

FRENCH REACTIONS TO REAGAN VICTORY EXAMINED

[Noel-Jean Bergeroux article: "The Newcomer Is Taking Advantage of His Predecessor's Shortcomings"]

[Text] Is it Mr Reagan who is arriving or Mr Carter who is going away? In a way, French political circles in reacting to the U.S. election seem to be responding to rather similar motives to those which guided the U.S. voters. The latter are said to have ousted Jimmy Carter from the White House rather than to have elected Mr Reagan to it. In France people are commenting considerably more about Carter's defeat than expounding about the prospects opened up by REagan's success.

Of course, the left is more inclined to express the anxiety which might be inspired by a tougher and more dominating United States. Jean-Pierre Cot (PS) has spoken about the "big stick" which he thinks the "strong man" Reagan is brandishing and Mr Fabius, a spokesman for the PS, stressed the "dangers of confrontation" and the questions raised. PCF Central Committee Secretariat member Maxime Gremetz possibly went too far when speaking on French Television Channel 1 Wednesday evening by sneering in a very unfair way about U.S. democracy and asserting that America's real problems had not been raised during the campaign. However, aside from anxiety, the predominant feeling on the left does seem to be a degree of realism, rather like resignation: Jimmy Carter was decidely too unsafe and too unpredictable to be reelected.

This is undoubtedly the predominant reaction in the majority and perhaps even in the government; of course, Mr Carter might have been more in keeping with the idea of a desirable ally for those taking part in the Giscardian republic: democratic and rather progressive. However, in the majority, too, weariness has given way to resignation.

However, the remarks made by Mrs Garaud bring us to a type of commentary in which clear allusions to the French situation mingle: The former adviser to [RPR President] Chirac and [former French President] Georges Pompidou bluntly accuses the French Government of having been "too quick to judge" America incapable of playing its part on the international scene. [RPR leadership member] Debre made remarks which would not have to be changed very much to be applied perfectly aptly to our government. The effect is intentional, as it is in the commentary published by the RPR. In both cases laxity and "lack of political will" are condemned.

The government analyzed the election results at length in Wednesday's cabinet meeting. At this level too a political preference for Mr Carter runs parallel to taking reality into consideration. Questions are being asked about the future, or rather there is a wait-and-see attitude, but the atmosphere is certainly not hostile. Of course until then (or virtually until then) the predominant tendency had been to treat Mr Reagan with disdain: In November 1978 Mr Reagan was received...by Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs Olivier Stirn. General de Gaulle did not make the same error of judgment in June 1967; he received candidate Nixon in person and spoke with him for 40 minutes. It is true that the election was closer then and that Mr Nixon was a former U.S. vice president.

Despite that, it seems that the general feeling is not negative. In fact the semiofficial analysis is that the outgoing President would have started work again excessively weakened by a badly damaged image. In any case a new president has a better chance.

It is being said that it is vital to "end a period of inconsistencies and uncertainties." Although Mr Carter was seen in high places as an "intelligent" man who knew his facts thoroughly, his "inability to govern" had been demonstrated rather too obviously (particularly in the most recent phase of negotiations with Iran) for people not to doubt his victory. For him the tragedy was the "contradiction" between his nature and the international situation; between his propensity for an "American-style biblical life" and a "world of confrontations and conflicts."

The question now is what consequences Mr Reagan's election will have in two delicate spheres: the Middle East (the government thinks that the president-elect has virtually espoused Mr Begin's ideas) and the question of leadership; of course Europe needs a strong America facing the USSR, but it must not allow itself to be dominated. Quite the reverse: Europe must make an "effort to strengthen and restructure itself."

These questions obviously prompt some perplexity, but they also spark off this thought: "It is all very stimulating after all." These are questions and thoughts which might have been those of many Americans....

MARCHAIS STRESSES IMPORTANCE OF MADRID CSCE PARLEY

LD061645 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 1 Nov 80 p 7

[Roger Faivre report: "The Preservation of Peace Requires Action by the Workers and Public Opinion"]

[Excerpts] Georges Marchais was present at the Swiss Labor Party's festival in Geneva yesterday [30 October]. He had been invited to attend by Swiss Labor Party Secretary General Armand Magnin and by the party leadership. At noon the PCF secretary general took part in the fraternal meal attended by the representatives of communist and workers parties' press organs and representatives of the Swiss trade unions' general union and the Geneva press.

On this occasion, speaking after Armand Magnin who had welcomed his guests, Georges Marchais expressed his thanks for the invitation sent to him and stressed the close links which unite the two parties in mutual respect for the independence of each.

The PCF secretary general recalled the analysis of the international situation which our party made at its 23d congress. "We are," he said, "actors during a great shift in the human species.... We do not say that everything is simple and settled in advance, that the battle waged by the forces of progress is easy. No. The battle is hard. The confrontation is bitter, harsh and characterized by inconsistencies and sometimes by setbacks. However, the general direction of the world's evolution is clear: It is in favor of the forces of social, national and human liberation that the balance of forces at the world level has been permanently changed.

"Indeed what do we see? That socialism is progressing and that it is showing its ability to settle the new problems of its development. That the struggles being waged by the working classes and peoples in capitalist countries are spreading and are frequently meeting with success. That important points have been scored against imperialism by the Third World peoples in recent months and years."

It is the anxiety which imperialism feels at this development which explains its aggressive attitude, particularly the revival of the arms race. "I will not hide the fact," Georges Marchais stressed, "that we French Communists think that imperialism's viciousness poses real and serious threats to peace on our European continent. All the measures adopted so far in fact form a full part of the line embodied in the U.S. President's Directive 59 published this summer which coldly envisages--and I quote--a 'limited nuclear war,' a war which would spare America and unleash the apocalypse in France."

Georges Marchais forcefully reaffirmed our party's determined opposition to those objectives. Then he added:

"We who oppose the decision to develop the evil neutron bomb in our own country, we who are struggling to ensure that each people's security is sought through balanced arms reduction and not in an insane escalation, see as an initial success the recent opening in Geneva of preliminary discussions between the Soviet Union and the United States on all medium-range missiles--discussions which must take account of all aspects of the problem.

"The fact that these negotiations are the result of a Soviet proposal is another illustration of the decisive role played by the socialist countries in increasing international security and pursuing the detente process.

"These discussions are also the result of action by the people's forces in the world. Indeed the preservation of peace, detente and peaceful coexistence now requires action from workers and public opinion more than ever before. That is what we are trying to bring about in France. We are doing it with confidence, in the knowledge that is the best and only way of preventing imperialism plunging the world into a new holocaust, preventing the deployment of new U.S. missiles in Europe, obtaining Washington's ratification of the SALT II agreements and creating denuclearized zones without foreign nuclear bases.

"We are convinced that, with all the forces of peace and all the world's peoples, we will deal imperialism new blows. We will force it to respect peace and peaceful coexistence. We will progress toward our ideal: a world without arms and without wars!"

An Important Date: Madrid

"An important date in this battle for peace is approaching with the opening of the meeting in Madrid in 2 weeks time between representatives of the 35 states which signed the Helsinki CSCE Final Act.

"On the pretext of the tensions they themselves have created, some capitalist countries were envisaging simply canceling that meeting. Others advocated its postponement. Those maneuvers failed; the preparatory meeting opened as scheduled.

"We communists think it is now vital to prevent detente's enemies leading the meeting itself into deadlock, diverting it from its purpose by concentrating on or disregarding a particular principle proclaimed in Helsinki. Military detente is our priority. Indeed it is vital to extend confidence-building measures. That is why we said that a crucial pledge by the meeting's participants should be the convening of a conference on disarmament in Europe. It is high time such an initiative was taken--and many states have adopted this idea--in order to reduce military tension on a continent where the biggest and most destructive armed forces and arms are concentrated. We are convinced that the European peoples expect that decision which could mark the start of a positive disarmament process.

"We also attach great value to strengthening cooperation at the economic, scientific and technical levels, as well as in the cultural and humanitarian spheres. All these forces of cooperation are bound to encourage friendship, better understanding among peoples and, consequently, peace. Yes, Madrid could certainly be an opportunity for beneficial progress, provided, of course, the peaceful forces mobilize and the peoples increase their vigilance."

PCF SPOKESMAN JUQUIN INTERVIEWED ON TIES WITH USSR

["Let's Talk Straight" program interview with Pierre Juquin, PCF spokesman, by Joseph Paletou--live]

[Excerpts] [Question] Today the 63d anniversary of the Great October Socialist Revolution will be festively marked in Moscow, and on this occasion France Inter will tell you more about the USSR. Mr Juquin--I am aware that elections mobilize your entire energy--can you tell me a little more about the exact nature of the disagreement between the French Communist Party and the USSR regarding the functioning of democracy, because during the big French Television Channel 1 debate the other night, Georges Marchais merely touched on this matter which will come up often in the debates between now and next spring.

[Answer] Mr Paletou, I am forced to make a clarification. I just heard a few moments ago, during the newscast by France Inter and then in the report broadcast by one of your usual reporters, Mr (Joannes)--I now understand that the invitation issued me to speak this morning on the "Let's Talk Straight" program meant to you--Mr (Joannes) stated as black and white, if I may say so, that the French Communist Party decides on its policies in relation to the Soviet Union and its relations with the Soviet Union. I protest with the utmost strength against this calumny, a calumny for political reasons and, in fact, completely worn out. I answer your question: The October Socialist Revolution of 1917 in Russia is one of the, and probably the most important historic event of all times. It is an event which turned the world upside down and which still has important consequences for us. It is impossible to deal with this in the short time allotted here. I confirm to you that the policy of the French Communist Party is an absolutely independent one, determined exclusively in relation to the interests, concerns and needs of the French and of the French nation. Naturally, when drawing up this policy we take into account changes that have occurred, movements taking place in the world. As for relations between the French Communist Party and the CPSU, these are relations of independence and, at the same time, of fraternal links and solidarity which were explained several times by Georges Marchais, by our party....

[Paletou interrupts] As for the nature of the disagreements [words indistinct--both speak at the same time]

[Answer] It is the case of disagreements on various points and in particular on certain aspects of socialist democracy.

POLL GIVES MARCHAIS, ROCARD LEAD OVER MITTERRAND

LD061239 Paris LE MONDE in French 5 Nov 80 p 9

[Text] According to an opinion poll carried out by Indice-Opinion and published by LE QUOTIDIEN DE PARIS on 4 November, Mr Giscard d'Estaing would obtain 60 percent of the votes in the second presidential election ballot if he were opposed by Mr Mitterrand and 56 percent if he were opposed by Mr Rocard. It appears that in the first ballot Marchais would come second, that is, after the outgoing president and before Mitterrand. The PCF secretary general would be overtaken by Rocard if the latter were the Socialist Party candidate. This poll was carried out from 22 through 25 October among a population sample of 1,024 people aged 18 and over, representative of the French people.

FOREIGN MINISTER COLOMBO SET FOR POLAND, USSR VISITS

AU082012 Rome ANSA in English 1950 GMT 8 Nov 80

[Excerpts] Rome, 8 Nov (ANSA)--Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo will leave Rome tomorrow for the Soviet Union, where he will have talks with his Soviet counterpart Andrey Gromyko and probably also with Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev. On his way to Moscow, Colombo will stop in Warsaw for a talk with Polish Foreign Minister Josef Czierek whom he will brief on the recent European Economic Community (EEC) decision to assist the [word indistinct].

The Italian foreign minister's visit to the Soviet Union signals a resumption of Italo-Soviet relations after the freeze which followed the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan last December.

Colombo will reiterate Italy's call for a withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan so that East-West relations (?can return) to a better footing and so that the imminent Madrid Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe can have better chances of success.

With respect to Italo-Soviet relations, there could be some novelties, since they had been for the most part frozen after the government of Premier Francesco Cossiga decided to align itself with its Community and NATO allies after the intervention in Afghanistan and applied restrictive measures against the Soviet Union in the political, economic and cultural fields.

Later in the month, French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing will come to Rome for a two-day working visit to include talks with head of state Sandro Pertini and the premier. Giscard's visit has been put on the calendar for November 27 and 28.

BERLINGUER: REAGAN VICTORY RAISES 'DISQUIETING' QUESTIONS

AU071747 Rome ANSA in English 0810 GMT 7 Nov 80

[Text] Rome, 7 Nov (ANSA)--The conclusion of the Communist Party (PCI) Central Committee meeting and Socialist Party (PSI) Secretary Bettino Craxi's testimony before the committee investigating the Moro case were the two most important events on the Italian political scene yesterday. Addressing the Central Committee, PCI Secretary Enrico Berlinguer said that the election of Ronald Reagan as the new United States president raised disquieting questions as to future American policies and their repercussions on international relations.

Berlinguer also reconfirmed his inner party line, stating that it would be a mistake to abandon the goal of a government of wide democratic unity which included the Communists. In this context, Berlinguer said it was necessary to improve relations between the PCI and the PSI. He urged Socialists to abandon anti-Communist leanings, so as to exalt the PSI's specific function as a leftwing force freely cooperating in the job of transforming Italian society. Turning to the abortion issue, Berlinguer said the Communists would defend the present law, approved two years ago, which allows women to halt their pregnancies. The PCI would oppose the repeal referendums promoted by various groups, he said.

COLOMBO OUTLINES COMMITMENT TO NORTH-SOUTH DIALOGUE

AU071657 Rome ANSA in English 1535 GMT 7 Nov 80

[Text] Rome, 7 Nov (ANSA)--Italy intends to transform its commitment to the North-South dialogue, the search for improved relations between the industrialized and developing nations, into a pivotal point in foreign policy, Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo told the house Foreign Affairs Commission today.

Outlining the results of the United Nations special assembly on a "new world economic order", held August 25 to September 15, Colombo cited as the most noteable achievement of the assembly the draft of a strategy document on development in the 1980's. The diplomatic chief said that though the document was delegated to a regular session of the General Assembly, he had no doubt that it would receive the "definitive sanction" of the world body.

He warned, however, that "this outcome contains a limited practical significance" and that, "it is not possible to foresee immediate prospects for lending concrete contents to the negotiations" with the less developed countries, "at least until decisive progress is made in the area of comprehensive negotiations". To balance this statement, the foreign minister affirmed that it is of "great importance that a recognition has come about of everyone's responsibilities, those of all nations, in defining the guidelines and management of a policy for North-South equilibrium".

Moving on to the Rome government's "growing commitment" towards developing countries, the foreign minister named the 1,000 billion lire (1.1 billion dollars) earmarked for development aid in 1981. He reported that by 1983, Italy's allocations in this area will account for 0.34 of the nation's gross national product, a goal which will translate into 4,500 billion lire over the four-year period.

Another hike in Italy's development aid is planned for the 1984-85 period to bring the funds earmarked annual close to 0.7 percent of GNP by the end of the decade. "This commitment," Colombo said, "denotes special political significance if we consider that a number of other countries, in the wake of the economic crisis, have blocked their aid increases in real terms and that Italy has the lowest pro-capita income among those nations whose average aid allocations we propose to equal".

The diplomatic chief then called on Parliament for speedy approval for those legislative measures applying to economic assistance which maintain, he said, "the high element of generosity which is characteristic of our cooperation policy." Colombo then referred to the controversy, which he termed a "very delicate matter", between the "advocates of negotiations in New York", where the developing nations would hold the majority, and "those favoring decentralized negotiations which would leave the management of the talks in the hands of the UN specialized institutions, controlled by majorities favorable to the industrialized countries".

After mentioning the failure of the Yugoslav compromise proposal to pass the assembly by a slender three-vote margin, with aye votes cast by the United States, Italy, West Germany and Great Britain among the 150 in favor, Colombo said that "the issue of comprehensive negotiations still has a long road to travel. We must rebuild the bridges to these Western nations which have disassociated themselves and urge the participation of those socialist nations which have maintained a detached attitude. We must overcome the reluctance of the oil producers who fear a scapegoat role in the development process".

The diplomatic chief concluded his statement by indicating as priority matters energy, balance of payments deficits, and improving the world food situation by achieving, if necessary, extraordinary allocations for this purpose.

MADRID REPORTS ON CSCE PREPARATORY SESSION

LD072102 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1400 GMT 7 Nov 80

[Text] The work of the CSCE continues. Jose Manuel Salgado reports from the Palace of Congress:

The man in the street should be asking himself what this CSCE, whose preparatory sessions are about to come to an end in Madrid, really is. This morning there was another paper, this time submitted by Luxembourg in the name of the EEC Nine. It is different from the Swedish paper submitted yesterday at the morning session and the Eastern bloc paper of yesterday afternoon. In short, the EEC Nine propose that the first 4 weeks be devoted to the study of the fulfillment of the Helsinki agreement, something which the Soviets do not agree with, and that after the Christmas break they start on the new proposals without there being what in conference circles is called a "guillotine," that is, the complete elimination of the first stage. But they add that they have to try to finalize the study before that date [as heard] and, naturally, they quote the need to set the place and date of the next conference.

Ambassador Dubinin, chief of the Soviet delegation, told journalists that the role of the Eastern countries--Hungary, the GDR and Czechoslovakia--is constructive and provides the possibility for an agreement. And referring to the weekend and to the work of the preparatory meeting, he said: I prefer to lose this weekend rather than lose optimism.

On the other hand, Ambassador Kampelman, chief of the U.S. delegation, seems somewhat more pessimistic. Having recently returned from the NATO meetings in Brussels, he reconfirmed the unanimity of the 15 countries.

This afternoon's session, in which the unofficial Luxembourg document will be officially submitted, will not be very long because today the Soviets celebrate the anniversary of the revolution. So, a long weekend, laborious and full of doubts and uncertainties.

Spanish Delegate Comments

LD092038 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1900 GMT 9 Nov 80

[Text] With just 1 more day of the CSCE preparatory meeting remaining, the prolonged sense of pessimism continues. Over to our team at the Palace of Congresses and Exhibitions:

Today, Sunday, with 2 days to go to the opening of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, no agreement has been reached. Two plenary meetings have been held but they both lasted only a few minutes. It has been reported by all the media here that efforts have been made to seek a mediator or a go-between to assist the course of events, and that such a person has been found in the Swiss delegate. But he, too, is tending toward pessimism this evening. He told us he has left his telephone number with the various delegations so they can contact him if they have anything to say.

And now at our microphone we have Javier Ruperez, chief of the Spanish delegation. Mr Ruperez, can you sum up for us how the situation stands at the moment?

[Answer] Well, clearly, things are bad. The fact you have just mentioned, namely, that it is only a matter of hours to the opening of the main conference on 11 November, makes the situation even worse. Nevertheless, I feel the fact that we have spent 9 weeks discussing only two matters and that we have still not reached agreement on those matters should not be seen as criticism of how much time has been taken, but merely as condemnation of the lack of political will.

This means, moreover, that though there may be little time left, this should not totally rule out the possibility of agreement being reached. The 24 hours remaining could suffice because, I repeat, it is not a question of how much time is available, it is exclusively a question of political will. The differences are perfectly delineated, the positions are very clear, and all that is needed is the will for movement in their negotiating position on the part of the socialist countries, a movement which has so far systematically eluded us.

[Question] The negotiators of the Soviet Union and, later, the United States arrived in Madrid today. What would happen if Tuesday came and there is still no agreement on the conference agenda and timetable?

[Answer] Look, we still have hours ahead of us, hours enough to reach that political accord. And I am almost convinced, both morally and politically, that we shall reach that accord. My reason is that the responsibility for not reaching such an accord is one which neither we nor the other Western countries could bear.

The arrival of these two figures, one Soviet and one American, is significant. It could mean something important, especially in the case of the arrival of the head of the Soviet delegation. I hope his arrival at this early moment is to be interpreted as a positive sign. I, that is the Spanish delegation and the Spanish Government, at this time are going to concentrate on the contents of the negotiations ahead rather than on considerations of emergency or contingency plans which will have their time for discussion.

INTERIOR MINISTER COMMENTS ON BASQUE SITUATION

[Martine Garcia Vega report on 8 November press conference held at the Moncloa Palace]

[Excerpt] This morning a press conference was held at the Moncloa Palace to report on matters discussed at yesterday's meeting of the Council of Ministers. Most notable was the attendance by Juan Jose Roson, minister of the interior, who spoke on matters of public security. He said that next Wednesday there will be a meeting with representatives of the Basque Government to discuss the commencement of the Basque Security Council and the autonomous police. He also gave an evaluation of the front for peace, which, as we know, is formed by the Basque Nationalist Party, the Socialist Party of Euskadi-PSOE, the Communist Party of the Basque Country, the Carlist Party and Euskadiko Eskerra. The minister said: We are witnessing, in the Basque Country, a very important change in the Basque political class and on the part of public opinion with regard to terrorism. Later he said:

[Begin recording] For the first time in the Basque Country, the Basque citizens are demonstrating a general rejection of what ETA stands for. I do not know if you are aware of the communique issued [passage indistinct] [end recording].

We are facing a general offensive which is a sign of desperation because, for the first time, the Basque people have reacted clearly. We are in a situation of change—which does not mean that the ETA is going to disappear immediately, Roson said. The attacks will continue; nevertheless, the ETA is crumbling. (?In my opinion) the ETA's basis of support no longer exists; it is going to find itself more and more against the ropes. These were the important statements made by the minister of the interior.

NORWAY

STEEN COMMENTS ON 'TOUGH' TALKS WITH CPSU AIDE

LD071615 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 5 Nov 80 p 8

[Excerpt] Moscow, 4 Nov—"I am more optimistic now than before I left Norway about the possible effects on bilateral relations between Norway and the Soviet Union of contingency stockpiling, and I think that the Soviet Union is not ignoring the fact that we have taken this into account by siting the stockpiles in central Norway," Labor Party Chariman Reiulf Steen said after 4 hours of tough discussions at the CPSU Central Committee on Tuesday.

It was Steen himself who described the talks he had had with Central Committee International Section Deputy Chief Vitaliy Shaposhnikov in this way. But his optimism was due to the fact that both parties had shown willingness to turn their attention to the future.

"We both consider it a major task to recreate the detente situation of the first half of the seventies," Steen said.

As expected, contingency stockpiling was the main topic during the talks, although East-West politics, negotiations on the limitation of medium-range missiles in Europe and the fate of the SALT II agreement were also discussed.

The arguments put forward by the Soviet side were more or less those one could expect from the article in PRAVDA last week. In it, PRAVDA asserted that contingency stockpiling could mean the undermining of Norwegian nuclear and bases policy. This argument was repeated at the Central Committee meeting, and the Soviet Union stressed that developments in arms technology could lead to the emasculation of Norwegian bases policy.

"To this I replied that it is the Norwegian authorities who decide what sort of arms the stockpiles will embrace, and that we therefore determine that the stockpiling is in harmony with the declared Norwegian bases policy," Steen said.

Another of the arguments he put to Shaposhnikov was that Norwegian Armed Forces were decidedly defensive, and that the stockpiling of arms and equipment does not alter this fact.

Nor did Reiulf Steen have the impression that the Soviet Union now considers that the northern regions will become an area of greater tension as a result of the Norwegian decision to adopt contingency stockpiling. But after Tuesday's talks it is clear that the Soviet Union is following developments in the debate very closely and has detailed knowledge of all the arguments being used.

ELEVTHERI KIPROS CITES RUMORS ON DENKTAS' POOR HEALTH

NC071520 Nicosia ELEVTHERI KIPROS in Greek 7 Nov 80 p 1

[Text] Persistent rumors circulated yesterday that Turkish Cypriot leader Denktas' sudden departure to Turkey—for private reasons as it was announced—had to do with a serious health condition, to the extent that it inspires great concern. Other unconfirmed information said that Denktas' ill health is due to a serious heart complaint or even a critical heart condition. The rumors about Denktas' condition became known to the Cypriot and the Greek Government early yesterday. These rumors had stressed the fact that the Turkish Cypriot leader had only recently returned from Ankara and that now he had gone to Istanbul instead of to the Turkish capital. As is known, there is a special cardiology hospital in Istanbul. The rumors on Denktas' health have reached the point of speaking about his death.

Meanwhile, correspondents, who contacted Turkish Cypriot newspapers and asked for facts, were told that nothing is happening or, at least, that they knew of. The same reply was given to the press agencies that took the trouble to investigate the rumors. However, the Turkish side is expected to make a statement on the matter today.

ROLANDHIS REPLIES TO TURKISH CYPRIOTS ON NEW YORK TALKS

NC071558 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1500 GMT 7 Nov 80

[Text] Foreign Minister Rolandhis, in an open letter today, replied to leader of the Turkish Cypriot Republican Party Ozgur's letter to him regarding his refusal to go to New York with Mr Atakol. Mr Rolandhis remarked that not only does he not torpedo the talks but on the contrary with his action tried to preserve and save them, being convinced that the talks contain all the hopes of the country for the future. The talks, he added, continue in a satisfactory way and in a friendly atmosphere. He points out that that 5 Nov meeting was one of the best. Mr Rolandhis stressed that the existence of the Cypriot state, on scores of occasions yearly, is being disputed by Turkey at international conferences.

In conclusion, the foreign minister reiterated his adherence and devotion to the intercommunal talks and to anything that will bring the two communities closer together. He stressed that there must be no return to the stalemate of the past, but intercommunal communication and contact.

Refutes Press Accusations on Invitation

NC091252 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 9 Nov 80

[Text] Foreign Minister Rolandhis issued a statement today describing a report in today's issue of I SIMERINI newspaper as completely unfounded. The newspaper report alleged that Mr Rolandhis intentionally leaked the UN proposal for meetings in New York to the newspaper ELEVTHERI KIPROS with the aim of torpedoing this initiative. The statement adds: Undoubtedly, such press reports not only do not serve any useful purpose, but they also cause confusion and mislead the people and tend to disturb the carrying out of the dialogue, which constitutes the goal of the government and the United Nations. The statement goes on: Besides, by what logic could the alleged aim for the failure of this initiative be achieved through publicity, and how could it be possible to cultivate the impression that rapprochement in Famagusta was merely a question of setting a date for its return.

In his statement, Mr Rolandhis also notes that it would be inconceivable for him to channel, in any way, such information and, for personal reasons, he had not had any contact with ELEVTHERI KIPROS newspaper since last July.

ANARCHIST GROUPS STEP UP EFFORTS TO CAUSE UNREST

NC070748 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 7 Nov 80 pp 1,8

[Text] The three anarchist fronts [not further identified], which have organized groups in Cyprus with the help of a foreign secret service, have implemented a satanic plan that aims at creating confusion and agitation. In the first stage, the plan provides for the planting of bombs.

The government has had information about the formation of anarchist groups for over 5 months and it also had clear indications that they would seek to cause agitation through various dynamic acts despite the disagreements existing among these groups—disagreements not over the goal, but over the manner in which they would act.

According to information given to the authorities, the anarchist groups were to prepare for the occupation of government buildings for purposes unknown to the government.

According to reliable reports, the government has evidence that members of these anarchist groups were involved in the recent demonstrations staged in Cyprus to protest against Greece's reintegration into the military wing of NATO. The purpose of their involvement was to cause incidents between the demonstrators and other people in an attempt to create unrest, but they failed.

Their efforts to find a roof under political parties in Cyprus have so far been rejected. The aim of these efforts was to incite, through their activities, reprisals among the followers of the political parties.

Interior Minister Urges Counteraction

NC070933 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 7 Nov 80 p 1

[Text] Interior and Defense Minister Veniamin has ordered competent authorities to declare a relentless war against anarchists. Recent bomb explosions were the subject of discussion at a conference of senior police officers held under the chairmanship of the interior minister.

The House of Representatives has decided to request the interior minister to appear before the Internal Affairs Committee of the House and brief it on the questions concerning threatening telephone calls [made to deputies], bomb explosions and illegally possessed arms.

Suspects Detained

NC100706 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 0530 GMT 7 Nov 80

[Text] Yesterday, the Nicosia District Court ordered the detention of five persons for 8 days to aid police investigations into participating in an unlawful organization, causing damages with explosives and holding a fundraising drive. [Nicosia DHIMOKRATIKI in Greek for 10 November on pages 1 and 10 reports that the five detainees belong to the "Cyprus Marxist-Leninists" terrorist organization whose purpose is to organize a revolution on Cyprus and impose a new Albanian-type constitution on the island].

In requesting this detention order, a police officer said, among other things, that they were investigating if the suspects were guilty of causing the recent explosions in Nicosia and Limassol.

PLO OFFICIAL ADDRESSES RTP SIXTH PARTY CONGRESS

TA091320 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1030 GMT 9 Nov 80

[Text] The Sixth Congress of the Republican Turkish Party [RTP] is being held today. It began at the Misirlizade Theater in Lefkosa [Nicosia] at 1100 this morning. Dr Bekir Avgin was elected chairman of the congress. Addressing the congress, the honorary leader of the RTP, Ahmet Mithat Berberoglu, noted that the party was increasingly strengthening. He stressed that the party's goal was to ensure that the Cypriots lived in prosperity and peace and that they treated each other justly. He said the Turkish Cypriot community did not reach the standard of prosperity it yearned for since the Turkish peace operation of 1974.

Referring to the Cyprus problem, Berberoglu criticized the terms "bizonal" and "bisectional" [both terms in English] and said the term "biregional" [last word in English] must be used.

Later, a PLO representative, Muhammad Sa'id (Taraniyah), addressed the congress and said the Palestinian question, the Cyprus problem and other world problems were first created by the British colonialists and that U.S imperialism was now pursuing similar tactics and strategies. Commenting on Ronald Reagan's description of the PLO as a terrorist organization, (Taraniyah) said: We are not terrorists. We are freedom fighters. However, if Reagan describes us as terrorists then he will receive great lessons from us terrorists.

The PLO representative also said that his organization expected the Turkish Government to sever its relations with Israel after the latter declared Jerusalem its capital.

After this speech, messages were read from the Communal Liberation Party, the Democratic People's Party, the Turkish Cypriot Civil Servants Union and the Kyrenia Municipality.

RTP leader Ozker Ozgur was reading the party's activity report to the congress when this newscast was being prepared.

Ozker Ozgur Reelected Leader

TA091822 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1730 GMT 9 Nov 80

[Text] The leader of the RTP Mr Ozker Ozgur has said that his party wanted a bizonal, bicommunal federal solution to the Cyprus problem. He was speaking in Nicosia today at the sixth General Congress of the RTP. He stressed that imperialists would be uprooted and cleared from Cyprus and the day would come when the Turkish Cypriot and Greek Cypriot communities would live in security in their own zones. He added that his party would intensify its efforts for the creation of a federal Cyprus where the two communities could live side by side. He reiterated that the RTP would not accept a solution where the Turkish Cypriot Community was accorded only minority status. On the Cyprus intercommunal talks, Mr Ozgur said that his party would continue to assist the Turkish Cypriot interlocutor within the framework of the unanimously adopted decision of the legislative assembly on 5 November 1976.

Speaking at the same meeting, the honorary president of the RTP, Mr Berberoglu, said that the aim of the party was to create a Cyprus where the two Cypriot communities could live in peace and prosperity treating each other with justice. Mr Ozgur was later reelected as the president of the RTP.

NEWSPAPERS COMMENT ON DEVELOPMENTS IN U.S. RELATIONS

I AVYI 7 Nov Comments

AT071419 Athens I AVYI in Greek 7 Nov 80 p 6

[From the "I AVYI" Column: "The U.S. Bases"]

[Text] The results of the U.S. presidential election stress even more the disastrous nature of the recent decision for our country's return to military NATO, because this decision binds Greece even closer to the choices of U.S. strategy--especially in the eastern Mediterranean and the Middle East--and opens the way for finalizing the presence of U.S. bases on Greek soil. At this moment, the talks for signing an agreement on the bases are proceeding quickly and it seems that the government is not opposing or has no special reason that would make signing of it difficult.

Regardless of our categorical opposition to the existence of U.S. bases on Greek soil under any U.S. Government, we want to stress that Reagan's election to the U.S. presidency creates new conditions which the government has no right to ignore because the even greater "hardening" of U.S. policy that is becoming apparent will be expressed especially in internationally critical areas like the eastern Mediterranean and the Middle East. Within this framework, the U.S. bases in this area (in which our country also lies) will constitute the levers for implementing the "new" U.S. policy. The government must assess these new facts. At a time when European governments (with the exception of Thatcher) have shown strong reservations and uneasiness at the results of the U.S. election, especially with regard to the repercussions these results will have on the atmosphere of detente in Europe, it is literally illogical to continue negotiations on the bases in Greece as if nothing has happened.

I AVYI 7 Nov Editorial

AT071440 Athens I AVYI in Greek 7 Nov 80 pp 1,6

[Editorial by Th.T: "The Reagan Danger"]

[Excerpts] And Reagan is president of the United States! It is true that for many years now the transatlantic democracy has been going from bad to worse and that its prestige as a world power has been constantly declining. Carter greatly helped this trend. He came to power as a comforter. The United States was suffocating from the Watergate stench and Kissinger's adventurism.

However, Reagan is the president of the United States! His election is a fact. But this is typical of the kind of democracy that elects for president a citizen who has the preference of 25 percent of the electors because, with the abstention of 50 percent of the Americans and the votes of his opponents, Reagan was elected by exactly that--25 percent.... In any case, this concerns the Americans themselves and this "model" bourgeois democratic system. The rest of the world is interested in the danger which Reagan represents because Reagan is a danger to world peace. His entire election campaign was an inflammatory declaration that he will make the world shudder before America. This policy was elaborated by the most obscure forces of the industrial-military establishment and presented as the policy that will lift the power and prestige of the United States. It is not accidental that Kissinger and former NATO chief Haig were appointed as Reagan's advisers. With such advisers, Reagan declared that he will seek the revision of the U.S.-Soviet SALT II agreement, will increase military spending, will recognize the puppets of Formosa, thus ignoring agreements with the People's Republic of China, and will follow a "steady policy"--that is, a policy of provocation and violence. As expected, Reagan's victory was hailed by the most obscure forces of international reaction.

If for the entire world Reagan constitutes a danger, for Greece he constitutes a direct threat because Reagan has declared that he will implement a generally "tough policy," precisely that policy which led our country to great adventures in its internal and external policies in the last decade. It was Reagan's men--Kissinger and his peers--who imposed the dictatorship of the militarists on our country, released the bags of aeolus in the Aegean [reference to the mythical god of the winds] enslaved suffering Cyprus, and threatened our country's independence and integrity.

The Reagan danger becomes even greater for our country because a rightist government is in power that only a short time ago gave us an example of its adaptation to imperialist pressure by returning our country to NATO. Now the pressure will become more intense as the Americans seek to stabilize and extend their influence in the Middle East. The Reagan danger is also aimed against our internal policy. Democratic normality in our country is the target of the Pentagon militarists and Reagan will untie their hands. The imperialists want to have in Greece docile organs, similar to the militarists of 21 April, in order to impose their anti-Hellenic plans.

Subsequently, these are the tangible dangers from the rise to power of the most obscure people of the U.S. establishment. Constant national vigilance is necessary in viewof all these dangers. Democratic forces should rally to confront the danger. The current government of the right which is accustomed to "listening" to the orders of the Americans is not a guarantee for confronting the new threat that is being brandished against the country. This is another reason why the government must go and the people be given the chance to elect a government that will be capable of protecting them from the threat of Reagan and the other cowboys who "triumphed" in the United States....

AKROPOLIS 8 Nov Article

AT081432 Athens AKROPOLIS in Greek 8 Nov 80 p 2

[From the "Laconic" column: "What May Change"]

[Text] Let us not delude ourselves. U.S. policy toward Greece and Turkey will not change substantially under the new president. It should not be precluded that efforts may be made to end the Aegean crisis and solve the Cyprus problem, but these will be in the nature of mediation or backstage dealing through diplomatic channels. As in the past, any act that may displease one of the two parties will be avoided. Washington will not act like a court of law. It will not seek perpetrators and victims, guilty or innocent people; it will not dispense justice. Already, in a very cautious statement, Reagan has said that "Turkey and Greece are valuable allies which constitute the southeastern NATO wing. They have some problems between them which I would like to understand and help in order to reduce tension between them." Naturally, had we not returned to the NATO military organization or, even worse, had abandoned the alliance, the new U.S. president would not have been so careful about being impartial. Perhaps without much hestitation he could have favored Turkey and, at least from this perspective, we can benefit substantially from our return [to the NATO military wing].

EXORMISI 8 Nov Comments

[From the "Political Issues" column: "Reagan's Election"]

[Text] The American people's great abstention from the presidential elections--amounting to almost 50 percent--was characteristic of the electoral battle. This fact was the principal manifestation of the lack of interest in selecting between two candidates and two parties that do not basically differ on principles. [paragraph continues]

Attempts to enliven the people's interest with various preelection tricks and with more or less theatrical effects were in vain. The American voter, who feels that his country has taken the road of backwardness on the international level, was called to choose between the most impressive or rather the less bad candidate, knowing very well that essentially no president governs the country but the omnipotent economic-military establishment. And the people selected Reagan. It is not up to us to judge their selection nor do we wish to be included among those people who mourn this election to which, as far as the specific person is concerned, we are indifferent.

If there is reason for uneasiness it lies not in Reagan's election but in the U.S. foreign policy which is planned inside U.S. staff offices and which the president is called upon to implement. Should this policy follow the road of cold-war tension and exacerbation of the arms race it will not be so because Reagan was elected. The same could have happened had Carter been elected. It is precisely this foreign policy which the international forces of peace and detente must note and fight without being trapped by theatrical antagonism between specific persons.

I KATHIMERINI 9 Nov Article

AT091505 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 9 Nov 80 pp 1, 15

[Text] The committee which will possibly begin negotiations this week with the Americans on signing a defense cooperation agreement and revising the status of the operation of U.S. bases in our country is being formed in the Foreign Ministry. Despite the fact that the U.S. side has stated that no special problems would hinder the quick progress of the negotiations, certain reports still note that an initial divergence of views has cropped up--perhaps a formality from the procedural aspect but a substantive issue from the aspect of long-term results.

In order to accelerate the settlement of this pending issue and give permanence in principle to a legal framework for the bases (editor's note: that is, without the present uncertaintly about their operation) the United States has proposed that an agreement in principle be signed first and that negotiations on the agreement's appendices--with more substantive settlements on the legal status of the bases and their personnel, aid to Greece and supplies of equpment from U.S. material, cooperation in the military-industrial sector and so forth--be taken up later.

These reports about this U.S. wish were not denied by authoritative circles which merely added that, regardless of this, relevant consultations are proceeding with firm Greek persistence on not merely an "agreement in principle" but on the settlement of all issues.

The Greek Government is reacting to this U.S. haste for signing only part of the agreement instead of completely settling the outstanding issues because a hasty agreement in principle could cause possible omissions which, during the next stage of settling the more specific issues of the appendices, would perhaps bind the Greek side during the formulation of the relevant conditions.

Diplomatic circles attribute this U.S. wish to reasons that serve its specific geopolitical interests. The United States soon wishes to reorganize its military infrastructure--even though its operation in Greece serves only NATO purposes--in view of the pressure of Mideast developments and in order to be able at a given critical moment, when not only U.S. but--in a broader sense--Western interests will be in danger, to use its bases which, from the telecommunications and spying aspects, are of vital significance.

Of course the Greek position on this point is that the settlement of the bases issue is being made exclusively for the defense needs of the Atlantic alliance, not as a commitment that has any relation to the Middle East or that will cover plans of aggression.

A second point, which during the negotiations may cause some disagreement between the two sides, is the fact that the agreement in principle that is being proposed for immediate signing and which is based on the plan that McCloskey submitted a month ago to the Greek Government seems to have very little relation to the substance of the agreement that was initialed in 1977—which the Greek Government wants to be taken as a basis for negotiations since it concerns an agreement that had established a complete new status in bilateral defense cooperation.

Given these facts, diplomatic circles are being led to the conclusion that with the new plan the U.S. side is almost pushing for a tacit aboliton of the initiated agreement. As authoritative circles have observed, the issue is not the conclusion of a defense agreement but its implementation, specifically regarding aid for the creation of a military industry.

There are two frameworks of huge significance on this issue. One is general, the other specific. The first concerns only the phraseology of the relevant articles of the Turkish agreement; the other concerns the agreements in principle that were concluded between the United States and certain countries, NATO members, in order to strengthen them for the purpose of establishing a noteworthy military industry. Naturally these things have not yet begun to be implemented in Greece because amendment in the agreements, especially on the bases, have not yet been completed. However, when they are completed will they be implemented in the same manner for both Turkey and Greece? That is, will the proportions be acceptable to our country? This is the essence of the matter.

It is understood that efforts are being made for all these things in order to secure the necessary guarantees of objectivity during implementation, something that in any case will provide some security. Nevertheless, strong doubts exist about whether the implementation of the agreement will always be equal and fair. However, implementation of the U.S.-Turkish agreement, in the case of Greece, raises certain problems for the Greek side from another perspective. Specifically, the question arises of how it would be possible to substantiate a corresponding implementation of things which have been agreed upon for U.S. bases in Turkey and U.S. bases in Greece when U.S. "facilities" in Turkey, compared with those in Greece, constitute observation points without telecommunications and spying capabilities, for instance, the U.S. unit in Iraklion.

U.S. AMBASSADOR VISITS PAPANDREOU FOR TALKS

AT071404 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 7 Nov 80 p 1

[Text] Yesterday U.S. Ambassador McCloskey visited PASOK Chairman Papandreou in Kastri [Athens suburb] and had a talk with him that lasted about an hour. According to reports, Deputy Chief of Mission Kovner from the U.S. side and PASOK parliamentary representative G. Kharalambopoulos from the Greek side participated in the talk which revolved around international and bilateral issues, specifically, around the results of the U.S. elections, the situation in the Middle East, the Iraq-Iran conflict, Greek-U.S. relations, and other issues.

Political observers note the fact that the visit to the leader of the official opposition was the first official contact of the U.S. ambassador immediately after the U.S. elections. This is not considered irrelevant to the importance which the international community attaches to the increased role of PASOK in Greek political affairs.

PRIME MINISTER ULUSU DELIVERS SPEECH IN VAN

TA071700 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 7 Nov 80

[Excerpts] Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu flew to Van today to inaugurate the Van television transmitter. He was received at Van Airport by 2d Army Commander Gen Bedrettin Demirel, Van Governor Nazmi Iyibil, Army VII Corps Commander Lt Gen Kemal Yamak and Brigade Commander Brig Gundar Konya. Education Minister Hasan Saglam and Village Affairs Minister Munir Rauf Guney accompanied Ulusu to Van.

Ulusu went from the airport to the governor's office and addressed the public. In his speech, Ulusu said: I am very proud to be here in Van--this beautiful region of our country--to determine the needs of the area on my first tour as prime minister. In September 1980, anarchy had reached dimensions causing all our citizens great concern. State authority had been damaged, the administration had become unoperational and the citizens were therefore very grieved and desperate. Our country was at the brink of civil war. As in all parts of our country, in Van also, the tranquillity and security deserved by our citizens could not be secured. It was under these circumstances that the courageous Turkish Armed Forces--the apple of the great Turkish nation's eye--were forced to seize the state administration in order to protect the Turkish Republic and the integrity of the country against internal and external enemies. An atmosphere of tranquillity and security has been secured in our country since 12 September 1980 and our citizens have attained the tranquillity and happiness emanating from a trust in the state.

I would like to point out once more that the lands of this country entrusted to us through the sacrifice of the blood and lives of our brave ancestors will eternally remain the indivisible parts of the Turkish Republic. Our courageous armed forces are able to instantly thwart any attempt to disrupt the integrity of the country. We are children of the great Turkish nation that has for centuries lived on these lands as an entity sharing its destiny, happiness and troubles, and that has fought shoulder to shoulder against the enemy who threatened the country's integrity. Those who attempt to divide us through certain artificial reasons will be confronted with the unstaggering will of the majority of our nation and with the Turkish Armed Forces. Those who will attempt to disrupt the tranquillity and security in our country will face the state forces and will certainly receive the punishment they deserve.

Ulusu asked the citizens to trust the power of the state and continue their lives in tranquillity and security. The prime minister noted that it is the duty of republican governments to insure more prosperity and happiness for the citizens.

Ulusu later attended a briefing at the governor's office about the problems and needs of Van and its surroundings. After the briefing, Ulusu visited the mobile gendarme brigade command. The prime minister will spend the night in Van and leave for Hakkari tomorrow. Ulusu will inaugurate the television transmitter with a ceremony to be held in the Hakkari city center before noon tomorrow. He will also address the public in Hakkari.

FOREIGN MINISTER DISCUSSES OIL SUPPLY FROM SAUDI ARABIA

TA081719 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 8 Nov 80

[Text] Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen, who is on an official visit in Saudi Arabia, has said that the Saudi Government has responded favorably to contributing to Turkey's oil need. According to a statement issued by the Foreign Ministry Information Directorate General, Turkmen, who concluded his contacts in Saudi Arabia, said that his contacts were held in an atmosphere of great sincerity and mutual understanding.

Turkmen said that during his meetings with Saudi King Khalid ibn 'Abd al-'Aziz and with Minister of Foreign Affairs Prince Sa'ud al-Faysal a unity of view was reached on further developing the relations and cooperation between the two countries. He said: Saudi Arabia, together with the other Gulf countries, is working on joint measures aimed at closing the gap in the oil production caused by the war between Iran and Iraq. Turkey might secure oil from Saudi Arabia within this framework. I was told that Turkey is considered by Saudi Arabia and the other Gulf countries as one of the primary countries adversely affected by the war from the viewpoint of oil supplies. Furthermore, the Saudi Government has responded positively to supplying oil to Turkey within the framework of a bilateral agreement.

Turkmen said that he invited the Saudi king to Turkey on behalf of Head of State Gen Kenan Evren and that this invitation was gladly received by the king. He added that the Saudi foreign minister accepted his invitation to visit Turkey. During his visit to Saudi Arabia, Turkmen was received by the Saudi king. The Saudi foreign minister, the crown prince, Fahd ibn 'Abd al-'Aziz, and the minister of defense and aviation, Sultan ibn 'Abd al-Aziz, were also present at the meeting. Turkmen also visited the historic and religious sites in Mecca and Medina.

DEFENSE MINISTER BRIEFS REPORTERS ON MILITARY AID ISSUES

LD071606 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1248 GMT 7 Nov 80

[Text] Ankara, 7 Nov (AA)--Defence Minister Haluk Bayulken briefed the press on military aid expected by Turkey within the framework of NATO during a "chat" he held Friday with reporters. A working committee had been set up in NATO in June 1967 on increased military aid by member states to Turkey and Portugal, which had become more urgent with the U.S. arms embargo of February 1975 against Turkey. The committee continued its work despite the lifting of the embargo in August 1979, Bayulken added.

He noted negotiations with Canada were going on over the implementation of a 25 million dollar aid pledged by the Canadian Government in May 1980. 225 F-104 G aircraft were purchased at a symbolic price from the Netherlands over a period of two years.

U.S. military aid to Turkey in the form of foreign military sales (FMS) totaled 800 million dollars to date, with another 180 million dollar credit in FMS sales scheduled for 1981. Military aid from Federal Germany totalled 930 million DM since 1964, Bayulken noted, with a 600 million DM grant in aid approved by the Bundestag.

The deliberations of Turkish and U.S. working groups, which met in October to discuss the implementation of a supplementary bilateral agreement on cooperation in the defence industry, were being followed up, the defence minister said. The Turkish aircraft corporation "TUSAS" had received bids from 3 out of 9 foreign corporations manufacturing military aircraft considered desirable in Turkey. These were, he said, F-5E's of the U.S., Mirage F-1E's of France, and British Jaguars. The major problem in getting a domestic aircraft industry going was the need for foreign credits estimated at 2.8 billion dollars over 10 years starting in 1983.

The new practice of allowing Turks employed abroad to undergo a short, 2-month, period of military training in lieu of the longer military service with the payment of a sum in foreign currency equivalent to 440,000 TL, would start in December with 150 draftees, Bayulken said, total of 866 had already applied for the short-term training, he added. [sentence as received] The problem of overcrowding among draftees would partly be solved by a bill awaiting approval by the National Security Council, which would end the practice of university graduates automatically becoming reserve officiers, and would allow them to volunteer or be selected to serve as NCO's or privates for a shorter term.

KREISKY INTERVIEWED ON MEETING WITH GDR'S HONECKER

DW121348 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0510 GMT 11 Nov 80

[Correspondent Kleinschmidt interview with Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky in Vienna; date not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] The first official visit to Vienna by a GDR head of state, is this something out of the ordinary or is it part of the routine in Ostpolitik as far as you, as Austria, is concerned?

[Answer] If you want to put it that way, it is still something out of the ordinary for the time being. This will soon change. It always happened that way. We were also the first to establish contacts with Hungary and with other states at the time. This works out after a while; the others then do the same.

[Question] You stated that you intended to talk frankly with Mr Honecker in connection with the worsening of the inter-German relationship--we can mention the mandatory currency exchange--and to ask him some very pointed questions. What did you get for an answer?

[Answer] I cannot tell you that, but I did what I said I would. I talked quite frankly about it, and he talked quite frankly about it with me.

[Question] To what extent were inter-German relations the subject of your dialogue?

[Answer] They accounted for an essential part of it because this is important to us as well. Look, detente policy hinges on two things: on the East-West relationship in Europe, and on inter-German relations. These are the two hinges of detente policy. Thus it is necessary to talk about the inter-German relationship as well.

[Question] From your interview with the DEUTSCHES ALLGEMEINES SONNTAGSBLATT we gained the impression that you considered economic and financial offers by the Federal Government--the Bonn government--expedient for settling the inter-German quarrels. Does this impression continue to prevail even after this dialogue?

[Answer] It was not my intention to express it that way. What I said was that I would not dramatize the whole thing too much because this involves conversions which naturally are significant. Yet, on the other hand, the argument exists that too many people have obtained a very favorable exchange rate through trade in the mark. I believe that if, on the one hand, you blame the East German Government for a very disadvantageous exchange rate now, for a very unfavorable relation, you cannot, on the other hand, play deaf in the face of an argument that is being advanced in view of the fact that trade in currencies is not illegal in our countries. In any event, it must be taken for what it is worth. I cannot be the judge of that.

[Question] Did you also discuss the situation in Poland with Mr Honecker?

[Answer] We discussed everything.

[Question] The result being what?

[Answer] Since just as we were talking about it both of us received the news that the [Polish] Supreme Court had rejected the formula [inserted by the regional court in the free trade union statutes] while the followers of the trade union movement withdrew their threat to strike, it was a rather short talk of which I can only say what I have said before, namely, that it must be desirable for the continuation of detente policy [words indistinct] that neither side even venture an attempt to interfere in these internal Polish affairs, rather leaving it to the two sides to achieve a peaceful solution. Events such as those in Poland are naturally of immense significance. It is necessary to do everything to create the preconditions for saving detente policy, if detente policy is to be saved.

[Question] Do you have the impression that Mr Honecker is taking the side of the Polish leadership, the Polish party leadership?

[Answer] I suppose so, indeed.

[Question] How do you assess the further development of relations between the GDR and Austria in general? In the economic field, for instance, will there be an Austrian steelworks in Eisenhuettenstadt?

[Answer] I hope so very much, and I have the feeling that this hope is justified.

[Question] The economic, cultural and also the tourist exchange will continue?

[Answer] Yes, but everything in keeping with its nature: the economic exchange in a much freer way than the tourist exchange, which will probably be, say, subject to certain limitations.

[Question] What does this youth exchange deal stand for?

[Answer] We have raised the question which we always raise also with people's democratic states, that is the wish for more tourism. Mr Honecker said today that he is all for it too, and that, above all, youth tourism should be intensified.

[Question] Do you have any ideas as to numbers of GDR tourists?

[Answer] No, I definitely do not have any.

[Question] Do you think that your meeting with Mr Honecker has served to contribute anything toward the improvement in the general climate, at least in Europe, but possibly also between the two power blocs, NATO and the Warsaw Pact?

[Answer] As far as the latter is concerned, surely not, because we are outside these blocs. But it is a fact that any such visit is useful unless it ends with an eclat, a negative eclat. That cannot be denied.

Kreisky Not Optimistic

AU121555 Vienna Domestic Television Service in German 2050 GMT 11 Nov 80

[Text] Chancellor Kreisky was asked today in Vienna after the cabinet meeting what political results the GDR delegation's visit to Austria could bring in the current frosty period in East-West relations:

[Begin recording] [Kreisky] Well, ladies and gentlemen, how a political situation can deteriorate, that I know--anyone can know that. But how a political situation can be so handled that possibly an easing of tensions can be achieved, so that not everything flares up everywhere--that is the problem. To make things worse is something every one of us can do; it is not difficult.

[Reporter] Do you believe that Mr Honecker could be a key to this? Do you believe that Mr Honecker could contribute toward improving [words indistinct] in Europe?

[Kreisky] No, but at any rate he is a factor. But we could both imagine how the situation could deteriorate. Well, that we know. Hence, the efforts must go in another direction, namely, how things can be improved, how one can introduce here and there somewhat moderate political techniques so as not to smash everything. At the time of Helsinki there was a minimum of tension between the superpowers and a minimum of tension between the two blocs. At the present moment, at the time of Madrid, there is maximum tension--Afghanistan is one example; the situation in Poland is an uncertain factor in development; the change of presidents in the United States, with no one knowing at this point how things will go on, is another element of uncertainty. In other words, today we are dealing with a great many elements of uncertainty regarding certain developments, and that causes a deterioration of East-West relations, it puts a strain on East-West relations; and in this situation one attempts to keep things in order and in balance wherever that is still possible.

[Reporter] You have spoken of moderate techniques. How would you define them?

[Kreisky] Not falling into deep despair whenever anything goes wrong, and not believing that everything is lost.

[Reporter] If the Madrid conference cannot begin today, what would be the consequences?

[Kreisky] If one does not overdramatize the situation, I see no really serious consequences. I remember that I said on some occasion a few months ago that Madrid is under an evil star, and that I could not be sure that it would materialize at all under the given circumstances, or words to that effect, and wondered whether it would not have to be postponed by a few months until the new U.S. administration is inaugurated, etc. Thus the whole thing is not so very surprising for me. [end recording]

Further Kreisky Remarks

AU122030 Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German 12 Nov 80 p 5

[SK-[SOCIALIST PRESS SERVICE]-APA report: "Kreisky: I Am Not a Mediator Between FRG and GDR"]

[Excerpts] Vienna (SK-APA)--Anyone knows how to make a political situation worse, but what matters is how to achieve an easing of tensions, so that fires do not flare up everywhere. That was stated by Chancellor Kreisky on Tuesday after the cabinet meeting in comment on the currently frosty East-West relations.

The exacerbation in the relations between the FRG and the GDR certainly does constitute a factor, Kreisky continued.

However, he said, he is not a mediator and does not imagine that he can give Chancellor Schmidt advice. At his talk with Honecker the GDR chief of state named several reasons for the substantial increase of the compulsory Deutsch mark conversion quota. Honecker told him that one could buy in the FRG, at a considerably undervalued exchange rate, GDR marks which, spent in the GDR, lead to a bargain-basement sale which is still far from being compensated for by the increased compulsory conversion quota.

That is indeed quite a problem. However, we have an economic system where one can buy any currency, and one cannot alter currency laws to please another country. The protection against currency imports through rigid police controls and bodily searches is undoubtedly even more unpopular than the compulsory exchange.

After a talk at the Chancellery that lasted about 2 hours, Honecker and Kreisky described their talk as very constructive. They declared that they had discussed economic, political and cultural issues, and had reached agreement on further promotion of bilateral relations in those fields.

Chancellor Kreisky stressed that he spoke with Honecker quite frankly on all issues. An essential portion of the talks was devoted to German-German relations, because those relations also affect Austria and, in addition to East-West relations, constitute a key factor in the policy of detente. Asked about the need for Bonn's recognizing GDR citizenship, Kreisky replied that this problem only concerned the two German states, and that he did not want to comment on it.

Tourism between Austria and the GDR will be possible only with restrictions, Kreisky said. He added that the development of economic relations would undoubtedly be less affected.

MINISTERS COMMENT ON CONTROVERSY WITH USSR

AU121410 [Editorial Report] Vienna Domestic Service in German at 1100 GMT on 12 November carries a number of items in its regular newscast dealing with the Austrian-USSR controversy over the last-minute Soviet refusal to grant a visa to a Czechoslovak member of a Vienna theater group scheduled to give guest performances in the USSR. According to a news report, Foreign Minister Pahr declared that he was informed on the morning of 12 November by the Soviet ambassador in Austria that the actor concerned, Pavel Landowsky, had not been granted a Soviet entry visa because he had been expatriated by the Prague authorities.

After the news program, at 1111 GMT, the radio carries reports on what the announcer calls the "controversy between neutral Austria and the superpower Soviet Union," including not only the visa controversy but also the fact that "Austria, at the Madrid CSCE followup conference, was first asked by the Soviet Union to act as a mediator but later on, when the mediation seemed to be successful, was literally left out in the rain."

Next follows a report, with recorded excerpts, from the 12 November morning press conference in Vienna of Foreign Minister Pahr, Education Minister Sinowatz, Federal Theater administration chief Robert Jungbluth and Burgtheater Director Archim Benning. According to Pahr, the list of actors containing Landowsky's name was submitted first in March this year to the Soviet cultural agency concerned, and again officially in August. But only when the visas were picked up on 5 November did the Soviet side indicate that there were difficulties regarding Landowsky's visa. There followed a number of Austrian interventions at various levels. When Minister Sinowatz did not leave as scheduled for his trip to the USSR on Monday, and canceled his visit, the Soviet Embassy issued a visa for Landowsky on Tuesday morning. On Tuesday, the Austrian Embassy in Moscow was informed that the visa was issued erroneously and was not valid. Thereupon Minister Sinowatz's visit and the Burgtheater guest performances were canceled.

Pahr said in this context: "For us, this incident is highly regrettable. We are taking a great interest in cultural cooperation with the Soviet Union. We have done a great deal in this field in the past few years, and the Burgtheater guest performance and Minister Sinowatz's visit were intended to be the crowning of this cultural cooperation. On the other hand, it is to us a matter of course that we cannot allow anyone to tell us who could participate, as a member of the Burgtheater cast, in a guest performance. Apart from that, such exerting of influence, such impeding of cultural relations in our opinion also constitutes a violation of the Helsinki Final Act."

According to Pahr, the Soviet ambassador informed Pahr that he had learned only yesterday that Landowsky was no longer a CSSR citizen, so that his passport is no longer valid. Asked whether the withdrawal of the Soviet visa was caused by CSSR intervention, Pahr said he did not know but contacts had already been established with CSSR authorities.

Minister Sinowatz declared that the Burgtheater guest performance was expressly stipulated in the 1977 cultural agreement, and the Soviet side had urged its implementation. The Soviet side selected the plays, expressly asking that they be shown with the original cast. Until 5 November the question of the cast was never raised, Sinowatz said, and added: "In principle, I feel that the question of the cast is our business and, quite plainly, I find it hard to understand that this happened only 5 days before our scheduled departure, that this was never mentioned before."

In a telephone dispatch from Moscow, Otto Hoermann reports that tickets for the Burgtheater performance are still being sold, and that the news of the cancellation came as quite a surprise to Austrian diplomats in Moscow, especially in view of the pronounced interest in this performance repeatedly shown by the Soviet side.

In a recorded interview, Foreign Minister Pahr replies to the question of whether the latest Austrian-USSR controversy, so soon after Soviet press attacks on Austria, indicates a turn in Soviet-Austrian relations: "I hope not, because we have always stressed our strong interest in good relations with the Soviet Union as one of the State Treaty signatories and as one of the leading powers in the world. And particularly in view of the current very difficult situation in the world, we are strongly interested in continuing to foster the hitherto good relations with the Soviet Union." In reply to a second question, whether the cold war has now also reached Austria, Pahr says: "I hope not; I am still an optimist and consider what you referred to, the circumstances under which the Burgtheater guest performance had to be canceled, as isolated cases."

Asked about Austria's role in Madrid, Pahr says: "We have tried very hard, particularly in very close contact with the Soviet Union, to bring about compromises likely to permit an appropriate implementation of the Madrid conference. We hope that these endeavors were not in vain, and it does seem as if now gradually the problems of the agenda, the problems of the time plan, could be solved."

Pahr adds, however, that he regards the chances for success of the Madrid conference as very slim: "But this makes it all the more imperative for all of us, even if we see little hope, to make every effort to make Madrid a success after all. Should Madrid be unsuccessful, this would be a serious setback for detente. And as I repeatedly said before, not only is there no reasonable alternative to detente, but it has brought a great deal for all of us. And to preserve and maintain this, I believe, is something we all want, in the interest of security and peace."

NORTH-SOUTH CONFERENCE ENDS; SUMMIT DATE FIXED

[Text] On Saturday the foreign ministers (or their deputies) of 11 countries concluded their talks in Vienna with the decision to hold an international meeting on cooperation and development at the level of state or government chiefs and to accept President Lopez Portillo's invitation to convene that conference in Mexico.

A three-page communique was issued, and Chancellor Bruno Kreisky and Mexican Foreign Minister Jorge Castaneda answered questions for journalists. They declared that the same group of foreign ministers will meet again in Vienna 13-15 March 1981. On that occasion, the ministers are to study the latest developments of the North-South dialogue especially as far as the global round of talks between industrial and developing countries under the aegis of the United States is concerned, and to determine the main topics of the conference as well as the list of participants.

The number of participants is to be between 21 and 25 but not more than that, to ensure, as Kreisky stressed, that a genuine exchange of views is technically possible. According to Minister Castaneda, it is intended to establish contact with the new administration in Washington regarding participation of the United States.

At the Vienna meeting on Saturday the ministers also discussed the purpose and aims of the proposed meeting of state and government chiefs, and especially focused on the relationship between that conference and the unorganized global group on the one hand, and the North-South dialogue on the other.

SFRY FOREIGN MINISTER ON 'WORKING VISIT' TO VIENNA

AU101732 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 9 Nov 80 p 2

[Text] After the conclusion of the foreign ministers talks about the planned North-South summit meeting next year, Josip Vrhovec, Yugoslav federal secretary for foreign affairs, began a working visit in Vienna on Saturday. It will end today, Sunday. During an official visit to Austria in October last year Minister Vrhovec had agreed with Foreign Minister Pahr to resume the talks regularly and at frequent intervals. On 27 and 28 January this year Pahr paid a visit to his Yugoslav counterpart in Belgrade.

Austrian-Yugoslav contacts were intensified by Chancellor Kreisky's official visit to Yugoslavia in April and by the trips of various ministers. Economic relations were also improved. In the first 8 months of this year Austrian imports from Yugoslavia went up 23.5 percent, while exports to Yugoslavia declined by 7.4 percent. There are 40 cooperation agreements between Yugoslav and Austrian firms.

GENSCHER LEAVES BONN FOR MADRID CSCE CONFERENCE

LD122330 Hamburg DPA in German 2228 GMT 12 Nov 80

[Text] Bonn, 12 Nov (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher left Bonn for Madrid tonight to attend the CSCE conference. Tomorrow morning he will address the delegates from 35 states of Europe and North America and expound the Federal Government's position on the current political situation in Europe and the world.

A Bonn Foreign Ministry spokesman said that he would deal with the state of East-West relations, human rights, the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan and inter-German relations. The spokesman stressed that Genscher did not see the Madrid conference as a tribunal or as "a place for the exchange of noncommittal courtesies."

FRG-U.S. 'FIGHT' OVER DEFENSE SPENDING PREDICTED

DW121211 Duesseldorf HANDELSBLATT in German 12 Nov 80 p 2

[Klaus C. Engelen commentary: "Quarrel Over Percentages"]

[Text] Is the Carter administration just before its exit into history working up to a big fight with Bonn? America's ousted President, White House quarters say, intends to call the Bonn chancellor "sharply onto the carpet" during the latter's visit next week because of the "failure to fulfill NATO commitments." The fact that the Federal Republic like other, less important Western alliance partners is reluctant to abide by a firm NATO promise to increase defense spending by a real 3 percent has elicited great irritation in Washington.

The new Bonn budget provides for a mere 2-percent increase in defense spending. The ousted Carter administration, in contrast, plans to increase the expenditures for the Pentagon by a real 5 percent and thus would even stay below the 7-percent increase in spending planned by President-elect Reagan. Sooner or later, pertinent U.S. Government officials argue, there will be a clash with the German and other NATO partners anyway.

They say there will be even harsher controversies between Washington and the Europeans once Reagan has moved into the White House. Congress, too, is expected to add its own contribution to the confrontation by reviving the Mansfield bill on European troop reductions that was turned down in 1973.

HANDELSBLATT ON REAGAN DECISION NOT TO SEE SCHMIDT

DW121349 Duesseldorf HANDELSBLATT In German 12 Nov 80 p 2

[Hans Joerg Sottorf commentary: "Schmidt Getting the Brush-Off From Reagan"]

[Text] Barely had the new U.S. president, Ronald Reagan, been elected when Chancellor Helmut Schmidt had the announcement disseminated that he intended to meet the winner during his forthcoming visit to the United States.

Schmidt's intention had been problematic from the outset. Reagan will be inaugurated on 20 January; until then Jimmy Carter, who naturally is somewhat disillusioned, will continue to determine U.S. policy.

The desire voiced by the chancellor to see Reagan as soon as possible came even before the first press conference by the newly elected president in which he announced that he intended to exercise reserve in foreign policy issues pending his inauguration, so that the United States would not be talking with two tongues in the world. Schmidt has had to accept being told politely but in no uncertain terms that Reagan is not yet available for him.

This reserve by the next man in the White House is in keeping with political practice; it is definitely not directed against Schmidt as an affront. Yet the chancellor and his advisers could have foreseen the negative reponse; at least it would have been appropriate to probe first and talk later.

It may be true that there is no longer much sense in conducting long talks on political prospects with loser Carter, as the chancellor probably feels. But in that case he should have scheduled his visit for later, not making it dependent on a prize award in New York. Schmidt obviously did not believe Reagan would win.

The whole case also indicates the new tones which will determine German-U.S. relations in the future. Reagan will be a harder nut to crack for Schmidt than was Carter, whom Schmidt liked to tutor and who also invited advice. Schmidt would have preferred Carter's reelection. Now he must familiarize himself with the fact that there is no longer any special role for him to play in Washington.

DIE WELT: SCHMIDT-GISCARD TALKS EVINCE END OF DETENTE

DW121208 Bonn DIE WELT In German 12 Nov 80 p 6

[Commentary signed V.K.: "End of a Term"]

[Text] It is striking that the brief statements by Giscard d'Estaing and Schmidt to the press after their dialogue in Paris did not mention "detente." Instead both of them spoke of a strong Europe which, jointly with a strong America, must work toward the maintenance of peace with freedom in the world--a German-French Europe, of course.

The ominous term detente is no longer in use on the Seine River; after 14 years of persistent clinging to the hope that it would produce disarmament and good behavior, it merely produced illusions. Actually Bonn and Paris should have noticed this in connection with Aghanistan, but it was only through Poland that their eyes were opened.

Now they merely want to keep "communications" open with Moscow but otherwise pursue "organized cooperation" with the United States again. The reason for this remarkable chance is simple: As long as Jimmy Carter resided in the White House people in Europe preferred to rely on their own strength. Now that there is Ronald Reagan it is different.

GENSCHER STRESSES IMPORTANCE OF RELATIONS WITH ISRAEL

LD101148 Hamburg DPA in German 1036 GMT 10 Nov 80

[Text] Bonn, 10 Nov (DPA)--Hans-Dietrich Genscher, FRG foreign minister and FDP chairman, has stressed the importance which his party attaches to German-Israeli relations. FDP spokesman Josef Gerwald said that in a talk with the chairman of the Israeli Independent Liberal Party, Moshe Kol, Genscher stated that the FDP believed that these relations ought to be developed on the basis of a stable and continuously deepening German-Israeli friendship.

FRG-ISRAELI CONFERENCE OPENS IN BONN ON MIDDLE EAST SETTLEMENT

LD112003 Hamburg Domestic Service in German 1800 GMT 11 Nov 80

[Text] A German-Israeli conference opened in Bonn today dealing with the search for peace settlements in the Middle East. On behalf of the Federal Government, Minister of State Hildegard Hamm-Bruecher of the Foreign Ministry underlined its readiness to contribute toward a just and lasting peace in this region.

The Israeli ambassador to the Federal Republic, Meroz, described Israel as the center of the Jewish people. He said that a process of reconciliation between Germans and Jews which ignores this has no prospects of success. The president of the German-Israeli Society, Blumenfeld, said that it must be made clear once and for all that the continually repeated official government line regarding the balanced nature of West German Middle East policy does not correspond either with the realities of German-Israeli relations nor does it enable German policy to have an influence in the Middle East.

SPD-FDP COALITION AGREEMENT 'TEXT' PUBLISHED

[Text] Bonn, 10 November--As a rule, Friday is a slow day in political Bonn. The Bundestag hardly has a quorum, and the press conferences by the government are seldom profitable. Last Friday, however, differed. The SPD Executive Board, and subsequently the party council, had long had the feeling that the SPD negotiators oral reports on the coalition talks with the FDP were insufficient. Many members of these organizations as well as many new or old Bundestag deputies learned much only from the newspapers. The chancellor and the SPD leadership realized that they could not keep going in the style of a secret cabinet meeting; hence on Friday Wischnewski and Vogel for the SPD sat down with FDP politicians Lambsdorff and Baum to put the most important points of the coalition agreement on paper; in doing so they even caused a minor sensation with the intended shift of the automobile tax to the oil tax.

The meeting of the party council had already begun. The Saarland chairman, Lafontaine, who considers himself one of the internal SPD election winners because of the results scored in his land, had already complained that it was impossible to discuss something that one has not read personally, when Vogel and Wischnewski appeared 1 hour after the opening of the meeting and presented the text which is reprinted below. Now the members of the broader SPD leadership circle had the feeling of being informed more quickly and better than newspaper readers.

This did not turn all displeasure into political joy. Some remarks from among the SPD reflect the feelings; these range from the party chairman to "semileft" politicians like Wolfgang Roth to the politicians who otherwise are close to Schmidt. Probably speaking also on behalf of other members of the Bundestag faction, Wolfgang Roth said that these agreements will first have to be transferred to practical parliamentary work and examined there. Parliament is not there for "calisthenics," in other words, it does not merely want to raise its hand in approval of the points negotiated by 10 politicians behind closed doors. People in the SPD recall the promise about "venturing more democracy" and measure the coalition procedure hitherto practiced by that criterion. Sometimes the negotiations got so bogged down in details that despite good intentions night meetings were necessary which induced SPD Chairman Brandt to go on night strike; people above the age of 25 can hardly be at the peak of their capacity if they work intensively for more than 12 hours, he said.

Schmidt, in contrast, daily saddles himself with such a load of work that even some of his friends occasionally wonder when this quantity will turn into poorer quality. They ask, besides, whether Schmidt, by insisting on details and realities, does not have too little of what Brandt has too much of, namely, drawing "overall pictures" (Scheel) or describing "state objectives" (Vogel). Schmidt seems to recognize this weakness. This is why he is titling his government statement of 24 November "Courage for the Future". There is, however, not much of that in the text that follows.

The Coalition Agreement of the SPD and the FDP

I. Introduction

In a joint statement on 7 October the SPD and the FDP agreed on their determination to continue the social-liberal coalition. [paragraph continues]

In this statement they said they intend to continue their tested foreign and security policies as well as their policies on Germany and Berlin.

In another joint statement on 4 November the SPD and the FDP agreed that they intend to continue their serious efforts for understanding with the objective of achieving a joint solution as soon as possible.

In addition, the two coalition partners agreed in particular on the following:

II. Finance Policy

The 1981 Federal budget must set out the course of finance policy in the new legislative period with the 1981 federal budget growth rates of roughly 4 percent and net borrowing in 1981 of about DM27 billion. The following consequences for taxation and subsidies policies therefore ensue:

A. The oil tax effective 1 April 1981 will be increased 7 pfennigs per liter, for diesel fuel 3 pfennigs per liter; a review will be made to ascertain whether it will be possible to make a partial amount of the oil tax hike (0.5 to 1 pfennig) available for the community transport sector. The spirits tax will be increased by DM300 per hectoliter effective 1 April 1981.

The Federal Government will introduce a bill providing for the transfer of the automobile tax to the oil tax; it hopes to achieve understanding on this issue with the laender through legislative procedures.

The general tax burden should not increase in the forthcoming legislative period. In the event there is another tax relief it is intended to improve the basic tax-free amount of income as well as the tax treatment of the payments made by independent earners to health insurances. Moreover, the Federal Government continues to endeavor to have payment of the childrens bonus made by the tax offices (tax office solution).

B. For the most part the following subsidies, privileges and mixed-financing arrangements will be eliminated fully or partially: gas-oil subsidy for short-distance transport and rail transport; gas-oil price subsidy in agriculture through conversion to subsequent reimbursement; oil privileges for sport and private planes and for inland charter flights (international arrangements pertaining to inland regular airline service will be sought); reduction of funds for the three common tasks of "improvement in the regional economic structure," "improvement in the agricultural structure and coastal protection," and "enlargement and new construction of institutes of higher learnings" by 20 percent ; reduction of the tax privileges in the credit business. The savings bonus law will be abolished altogether (contracts currently in force shall not be affected); housing construction bonuses will be reduced by 4 points to 14 percent.

III. Energy Policy

Third phase in the implementation of the Federal Government's energy program. In the peaceful utilization of nuclear energy, emphasis on questions concerning waste disposal. Priority of German hard coal. Two-stage plan for the reduction and ultimate elimination of oil and gas in electric power generation. Efforts for linear electricity price rates.

IV. Environmental Policy

Reduction of noxious substances and noise caused by motor vehicles. Reintroduction of the law on protection against traffic noise. Continuation of the environment policy hitherto pursued in the fields of chemicals, water protection, air purification and waste removal. Another key project is the preservation of the environment. Introduction of lawsuits by recognized federations, limited to the protection of the environment.

V. Agricultural Policy

Stronger orientation of the agricultural market in the EC through principles of market economy. Reduction of surplus production through participation by producers in financing surpluses. Relaxation of intervention mechanisms. The expenditures of the EC must increase at a slower pace than its revenues. Value-added tax payments to the EC as before must not exceed 1 percent of the basis of assessment. Determined initiative in the EC against making the use of oil and gas in agriculture by some member countries less expensive which distorts the competitive situation.

VI. Housing and Urban Policy

Improvement in the framework conditions for privately financed housing construciton: obligatory rental scale, simplification of the rent increase procedure and stage/gradation rentals in the case of first or new leases of housing space readied for occupancy after 1 January 1981. Greater consideration of market economy elements in social housing construction; continuation of the increase in interest rates by age groups for housing construction credits. Changes in competence will be pursued. Introduction of an unauthorized occupancy fee [for people living in social sector housing with incomes above that entitling them to such housing] to the advantage of the communities.

Better protection of tenants against conversion, sale and excessive modernization as well as regarding rental deposits. Promotion of housing modernization by the tenants.

Review of the misuse of tax privileges by builders of houses that are not truly two-family houses. No amendment to article 7 B of the income-tax law [depreciation for modernization measures by home owners] Examination of an improvement in the promotion of apartment ownership for families with children.

Real estate law measures for the purpose of enhancing the availabiltuy of land suitable for building construction.

VII. Transportation Policy

Maintenance of the framework of the existing system. Promotion of public short-distance transportation, continuation of the modernization of the federal railroad and improvement in its cooperation with other transport facilities, sparing the federal budget to the greatest extend possible. Improved protection against traffic noise.

VIII. Health Policy

Reintroduction of the law on health benefit financing. Inclusion of dental protheses, medicines and health aids in cost-decreasing efforts.

IX. Labor Law and Accident Prevention

Creation of a standard accident prevention law. Further examination of potential legislative consequences of illegal hiring of labor as well as from illicit work. Examination of the expediency of revising the law on the protection against job termination.

X. Pension Insurance

The increase in the contribution rate by 1/2 contribution point effective 1 January 1981 remains unchanged. The federal subsidy for pension insurance in 1981 will be cut by DM3.5 billion.

Participation in the overall pension annuity will be the model which is applicable regarding revision of survivor benefits by 1 January 1981. In such a case the minimum payment shall be the individual's own pension. Furthermore, an additional year spent in the raising of children will be recognized.

Because matters are still uncertain with regard to data on the costs of the upcoming reform measures, quantifying the above principles cannot be made before the fall of 1981.

After 1984, in the adaptation process, the aspect of the equal development of the increase in the expendable income of the wage and salary earners and pensioners will be taken into consideration under observance of the financial stability of the pension insurance within the framework of overall economic development. In the event this objective is to be achieved in such a way that the pensioners, effective 1985, are gradually made to share in the financing of their health insurance up to 50 percent of the health insurance dues based on their pension (like wage and salary earners), then agreement prevails that this health insurance fee shal be collected from all pensioners at an identical percentage rate.

The system of pensions in accordance with minimum incomes will be continued beyond 1972 [as published] (excluding part-time jobs). The following shall apply to the new regulation of the health insurance of pensioners in accordance with the 21st pension adaptation law (RAG):

In keeping with the provisions of the 21st pension adaptation law (RAG) the health insurance of pensioners (KVDR) will be newly regulated. Orientation points of the new regulation are as follows:

A) Stipulation of the KVDR fees rates for pension incomes from the legal pension insurance in keeping with the provisions of the 21st RAG, other, comparable old-age income in the amount of 50 percent of the fees rate for pension incomes from the legal pension insurance.

B) Conversion of the pension increase envisaged under the 21st RAG for the purpose of guaranteeing equitable burden distribution into a pension subsidy.

The new regulation shall take effect by 1 January 1983.

XI. Policy on Aliens

Further development and detailing of plans for a policy on aliens; this is a key project in the activities of the Federal Government.

XII. Policy on Women

Further practical implementation of the equal rights of women in all situations of life. Examination of whether it would be possible to eliminate existing disadvantages of women vis-a-vis men by means of an antidiscrimination act. Additional report on experiences connected with article 218 of the penal code [article on abortion]

XIII. Education Policy

Limitation of federal expenditures for the promotion of education under the educational promotion act (BAFOEG) and promotion of graduates in 1981 and 1982 to DM2.4 billion each. The title to these benefits under these two laws shall be subjected to a review for options of structural changes within the framework of existing ceilings. Renewal in some points of the bill on the framework of institutes of higher learning for the binding introduction of the institutionalized body of students. [verfasste studentenschaft]

XIV. Revision of the Right to Conscientious Objection and Civilian Alternative Service

Further pursuit of this project by exploiting constitutional possibilities.

XV. Legal and Domestic Policy

Continuation of legislation for the protection of consumers. Further development of the administration of justice and revision of the law on juvenile penal servitude. Another bill aimed at counteracting economic crime. Revision of the law on criminal defense. Review of the anti-terror laws at proper intervals for their effectiveness and their continued necessity. In connection with the law on the barring of contacts [with imprisoned terrorists] an arrangement will be sought which will even more strongly ensure the guarantees of criminal proceedings in this field as well, without reducing the protection of people threatened by terrorist activities. Abolition of articles 88a and 130a of the penal code. Closure of the legal loopholes in the prosecution of neonazi activities. Revision of the law on data protection. Examination of whether any state-goal definitions or legislative mandates should be incorporated in the Basic Law. What should gain applicability in the examination of the constitutional loyalty of public servants is the principle of proportionality in that a differentiation is made between the requirements and the position filled. Examination of questions concerning electoral law. Reintroduction of the narcotics law.

XVI. Development Aid

Approximately doubled increase rate in expenditures for development aid in comparison with the increase rate of the overall budget.

FDP CALLS FOR COMMISION TO STUDY BUNDESWEHR

LD101328 Hamburg DPA in German 1235 GMT 10 Nov 80

[Excerpt] Bonn, 10 Nov (DPA)--Despite opposition from Defense Minister Hans Apel (SPD), the FDP is sticking to its demand for an independent commission which, in view of the changed basis of defense policy, would examine the structure, strategy and arms of the Bundeswehr. According to FDP defense expert Juergen Moellemann the commission, composed of representatives of the Defense Ministry and parliament and independent experts, would submit proposals for the reshaping of the Bundeswehr which would be put into practice during the current legislature period. In response to FDP plans in this direction, Apel stated that no bodies would be set up which obscured existing responsibilities.

Moellemann stressed to journalists in Bonn today that the FDP adhered to the target of a 3 percent increase in real terms in the defense budget. He indicated that during the coalition talks the FDP had made a considerable contribution to ensuring that Finance Minister Hans Matthoefer's proposals for cuts in the defense budget had not been accepted in full. Moellemann did not say what the increase in the 1981 Bundeswehr budget would be, but it will certainly not be the 3 percent in real terms aimed at by the NATO countries.

GISCARD, SCHMIDT WELCOME 'STRONG' GOVERNMENT IN U.S.

LD121409 Paris LE MONDE in French 12 Nov 80 p 4

[M.D. report: "Giscard d'Estaing and Schmidt Think That a Strong United States and a Strong Europe Are in No Way Incompatible"]

[Text] A stronger Europe playing a greater role in the world is in no way incompatible with the stronger United States which Mr Reagan wants. That seems to be the conclusion reached in the 4 hours of one-on-one talks which President Giscard d'Estaing had with Chancellor Schmidt before, during and after dinner on Monday, 10 November.

This private meeting, proposed by Mr Schmidt in order to assess the world situation after the U.S. elections and before his own visit to Washington, was, however, surrounded by exceptional protocol. Three sections of the Republican Guard paid military honors to the chancellor on his arrival at the Elysee and the national anthems were played, which is unusual at this type of visit. In doing this Mr Giscard d'Estaing was seeking to stress the importance he attaches to French-German relations and the esteem he has for Mr Schmidt now that Mr Schmidt is starting a new term of office as the FRG leader.

After the meeting the president of the republic said that he and the chancellor had examined "the various crisis situations in the world." "We noted," he said, "that our analyses are similar and that our two countries are trying to work together for balanced security and peace....France intends to continue to make a contribution to organizing Europe and to strengthening political cooperation with all its partners." Referring in this connection to Italy and Britain he added: "For reasons connected with the past and the present, West Germany is and will remain our main partner."

Referring to the U.S. elections, the president continued: "France is bound to welcome a strong United States determined to fully assume its international responsibilities.... At the same time this observation makes it all the more necessary to end the anomaly of Europe's self-effacement in world affairs since the end of the last war....

"Between a strong United States and a Europe confident of its power and its role, it would therefore be possible to organize the friendly dialogue which is natural to them and a cooperation which will help to preserve peace and safeguard freedom in the world."

Finally Mr Giscard d'Estaing indicated that he had examined the economic and monetary situation in the Community with Mr Schmidt "in the light of recent developments." Mr Giscard d'Estaing informed his interlocutor of France's intention to "continue cooperating to maintain the stability of the European Monetary System. Together we examined technical means which could be used to achieve that result," he concluded.

What President Giscard d'Estaing had just said "is fully in keeping with our interpretation," Chancellor Schmidt said in turn, pointing out that he had noticed during his election campaign that opinion in the FRG "is now directed more toward cooperation with France."

Like Giscard d'Estaing, Mr Schmidt hopes that the United States will have a "strong government." In conclusion the chancellor said he is aware that "the world will have to face many threats as 1980 draws to an end and at the beginning of 1981." "The experience of recent years has shown that we can overcome great problems if we remain united," he added. "We think we will succeed in doing that in 1981."

The "very complete" review which the two statesmen made covered virtually the whole world. With regard to U.S. affairs the chancellor confirmed that during his forthcoming visit to Washington he would not see Mr Reagan (who does not want to receive overseas officials before being sworn in as president).

With regard to East-West relations Mr Schmidt stressed, when speaking to the press, "the great importance" of the news from Warsaw. The Madrid conference, and the Asian and Gulf crises were discussed with particular reference to the East-West context. The chancellor stressed his desire to remain "strictly neutral" in the Iraq-Iran conflict. As far as the Middle East is concerned, he still seems determined to adhere to the line laid down at the Venice European Council meeting in favor of a European "initiative."

Discussion of this initiative will be resumed at the European Council meeting in Luxembourg on 1 and 2 December. As for economic and monetary problems (notably the weakening of the mark) Mr Schmidt and Mr Giscard d'Estaing see them as an additional reason for strengthening their "solidarity" and assured each other that they would work in that direction.

FRANCOIS-PONCET ON 'DIALOGUE' WITH U.S., INTERNATIONAL ISSUES

NC122055 Paris AFP in English 2036 GMT 12 Nov 80

[Text] Paris, 12 Nov (AFP)--French diplomats will concentrate on opening a more effective dialogue with the United States during the next few months while preserving French independence, Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet said today.

The minister, who was precenting the 1981 budget to the National Assembly, said that France was determined to fulfill its commitment to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. Recent events underscored both "the insufficiencies and the necessity" of holding closer talks with France's main allies, he said. (France is not a member of the NATO military alliance).

Mr Francois-Poncet recalled statements made by President Valery Giscard d'Estaing Monday night calling for a friendly dialogue "between a strong America and a Europe guaranteed of its power and its role". "It is in this spirit and with this will that the government will approach this essential question with the new American administration," Mr Francois-Poncet said.

Touching on current world crises, the foreign minister said French diplomacy would be guided by "three main objectives": "To re-establish peace, guarantee security and prepare for the future". He delivered an implicit warning to the Soviet Union by underscoring "the importance of Poland for the stability of all of Europe". It was for the Poles, themselves, to determine the path of current changes in that country, he said.

Mr Francois-Poncet defended France's delivery of a nuclear research reactor to Iraq, and said France would use its influence to try to help resolve the conflict between Iran and Iraq. He also said that nuclear weapons did not constitute futile security measures, but would only maintain "their effectiveness and thus their credibility if they are constantly maintained at a level to meet the threat for which they were intended". "Nothing is more important" to assure France's authority in the world, he said.

GOVERNMENT EXPECTATIONS, RESERVATIONS ABOUT REAGAN EXAMINED

LD121119 Paris LE MATIN in French 8-9 Nov 80 p 9

[Jean-Louis Arnaud article: "Paris Prejudiced in Reagan's Favor"]

[Text] After a 4-year gap the French Government seems to have been less surprised by Ronald Reagan's victory than it was by Jimmy Carter's. Most of the men who entered the White House in January 1977 were unknown in Europe. They remained unknown to a large extent throughout the President's term of office, which would suffice to explain at least part of the astonishment, irritation and misunderstandings which the Democratic administration aroused on this side of the Atlantic. That is not the case with the future Republican leaders.

Reagan's own personality is sufficiently vague to arouse contradictory feelings in France from one political group to another. People are wondering, and not without reason, whether the president will dissociate himself from the candidate and whether the well-known pragmatism shown by the former governor of California will not lead him to moderate, if not categorically change, some of the professions of faith which illustrated his campaign.

At present the French leaders are avoiding indulging in the arbitrary exercise of trying to decode the "Reagan enigma" too soon, if there is in fact any enigma. They are restricting themselves to his capacity as a Republican representative, attributing to him, perhaps a little too quickly, the virtues which in the past constituted the strength of his most illustrious predecessors: decisiveness, authority, clarity, common sense and lack of sentimentality or ideological romanticism. Ironically enough Ronald Reagan is being credited with all the virtues, Republican or not, which, in the Europeans' view, Jimmy Carter so cruelly lacked.

The French leaders are above all concentrating on the men who will definitely form part of the future administration, some of whom are already in the so-called transitional team. Many of them are old Nixonians, well known in Paris, which they have continued to visit regularly since, after leaving the administration, they have been defending the interests of very big industrial enterprises. For instance, George Schultz, former treasury secretary who became chairman of the Bechtel Corporation, was received at the Elysee in June. Just 2 weeks ago he attended an OECD meeting and, it seems, took the opportunity to visit Raymond Barre. Alexander Haig, the former NATO commander in chief who now works for United Technologies, has also had the opportunity to establish strong relations with both government members and business circles. And what can be said about Henry Kissinger, always on the move, always present, who has just slipped into the transitional team in the hope of making himself indispensible to the future president, despite the criticism leveled at him for having tried, in his way, to "sell" detente to the Soviets "at any price"?

It is true that other men generate more reservations. That is the case with the Democratic but very conservative Senator Henry Jackson whose "hawkish" convictions in Middle East affairs or East-West relations are not appreciated very much here. The same reservations are apparent with regard to Richard Allen, an unconditional supporter of Israel, whose crude views send shudders through those in Europe who still hope to obtain self-determination for the Palestinians while guaranteeing security for the Jewish state within its borders.

What Paris expects from the Reagan administration is that it will restore contact with the Europeans with the clarity and efficacy which had vanished with Carter; Paris had despaired of Carter ever being able to overcome the inconsistencies which existed between his security adviser, Zbigniew Brzezinski, and his secretary of state, Edmund Muskie. Both the Quai d'Orsay and the Elysee are saying that even if things are tougher it is preferable to have people who assume their responsibilities. The Republicans, they say, understand better than the Democrats that France is attached to an independent diplomacy and they fully appreciate the French defense effort: the 3 percent of the gross national product devoted to defense, nuclear deterrence, the neutron bomb, the military capability for intervention in Africa and the French Indian Ocean fleet.

Reagan's shock idea of renegotiating SALT II and linking that negotiation to other subjects of disagreement with the Soviets, such as Afghanistan (the famous linkage dear to Kissinger in his new version of the carrot and stick policy), raises no objection from French military experts. It is, they say, a matter which concerns the Americans and it is up to them to decide how they intend to approach their future negotiations with the USSR. Generally speaking, as far as detente and East-West relations are concerned, Paris believes that a modus vivendi will be found with Reagan and that France could find an opportunity to play the role of intermediary which it has regarded as its role since De Gaulle's days.

Paris is, however, more worried about the Middle East and the whole of what is usually called North-South relations. In this sphere there are strong fears that there will be cause to regret some aspects of the policy pursued by Carter who, in Africa and in some Latin American countries, had succeeded in heeding the Third World. There are already fears that the Republicans' well-known attachment to business and their short-sighted views on the underdeveloped countries' aspirations might mobilize the Third World against the Western industrialized democracies. In any case Paris hopes to have the opportunity to discuss all these subjects with the future president and his men as soon as possible.

EFFORTS TO MAKE UP FOR LOST IRAQI OIL IMPORTS VIEWED

LD101539 Paris LE MATIN in French 3 Nov 80 p 5

[Henri Lauret report: "France Makes Up for Iraqi Oil"]

[Text] Some 130,000-150,000 barrels from Saudi Arabia, 50,000 barrels from Kuwait, 10,000 barrels here and 50,000 barrels there. . . . As a result of intensive negotiations and bilateral agreements, French has managed to make up to some extent for the oil supplies from Iraq that have been discontinued since the beginning of the Iraqi-Iranian conflict. However, this additional oil costs more. An extra premium of some $2 per barrel has been imposed.

Industry Minister Andre Giraud's visit to Algiers around the middle of last week has not opened any new prospects for supplies to France, and with good reason! Algeria has a surplus of gas but no surplus of oil and, with the best will in the world, could not supply any more oil. However, in recent weeks negotiators representing the French companies Elf and Total have been trying to make good most of the 500,000 barrels of Iraqi oil which we have stopped receiving since oil exports were suspended as a result of Iraq's war with Iran. A great deal was at stake since Iraq used to supply us with a little more than 20 percent of our annual requirements.

The results achieved by the French companies are positive, at least as far as quantity is concerned. For instance, Andre Giraud stated on Friday that France has made good three-fifths of the quantity which it no longer receives from Iraq--the last Iraqi oil is to reach French ports any day now. In fact, it takes 45 days to transport this black gold from the Persian Gulf to reception terminals. Some of the supplementary contracts negotiated by Elf and Total are public knowledge. This applies to the 50,000 barrels per day "offered" by Shaykh az-Zayid to Valery Giscard d'Estaing with a $2 extra premium on the final price, a gesture which the French head of state must certainly have appreciated in his own way.

As we know, the two French companies have secured through their joint subsidiary company Sofracop additional amounts of some 130,000-160,000 barrels per day from the new Saudi company Petromin (apparently 100,000 barrels per day for the first quarter). It is also certain that Saudi Arabia will charge $32 per barrel for this additional amount of crude, that is, add a $2 premium to its official price. This has prompted an Arab observer in Paris to say: "In principle, there is nothing unusual about the fact that Saudi Arabia should charge more for such additional production. Please note at the same time that this increase in the price of Saudi crude will facilitate the payment of the first installments of the debt resulting from the huge--Fr14 billion--arms contract which Saudi Arabia recently concluded with France. . . ."

Another additional source: Kuwait. Last week Total concluded in the emirate an agreement with the Kuwait oil company providing for the supply of 150,000 barrels per day, thus securing a considerable proportion of the increase in production decided on by the emirate. Kuwait has also requested from its French partner a premium of at least $2 per barrel, just like the small Emirate of Qatar which has agreed to supply 10,000 more barrels per day to the Compagnier Francaise des Petroles. This means that all in all France has secured some 350,000-360,000 barrels of Arab crude from the Persian Gulf per day to offset the suspension of Iraqi exports.

This has enabled Andre Giraud to appear relatively optimistic when he said that "there is no risk of shortages in the short term." In Nigeria possibly and in Gabon and Mexico certainly France hopes to find the additional few tens of thousands of barrels per day which will enable it to restore--on paper--the balance of its oil supplies. On paper because, as we know, in contrast with Gulf oil neither the Mexican nor the Gabonese crude is necessarily directed to French refineries. This is a result of Gabon's specific position and Mexico's geographical situation.

What is certain is that France will pay more for the oil it buys in order to be certain that it will not lack any. This is a law imposed by circumstances even if not by exporting countries. The coming meetings of the Organization of Arab Petroleum Exporting Countries [OAPEC] Executive Council will undoubtedly enable that Arab organization to ratify the price increases decreed by the Gulf countries or even to harmonize with other Arab countries a policy aimed at ensuring a general price increase which seems inevitable, even if the Saudis, who have broken off their diplomatic relations with Libya, try to moderate the price increase process. The aim of the 8 December meeting of OAPEC ministers in Kuwait will be to prepare for an OPEC conference which is to be held on Bali (Indonesia) on 15 December. It seems that this conference will be very important. Iraq and Iran could well find themselves seated at the same negotiating table and it is already being whispered behind the scenes that the Bali meeting could lead to a settlement of the Iraq-Iranian dispute. Why not, even though for the time being this seems to be a completely utopian idea? Be that as it may, experts are afraid that the political climate (and also the fact that OPEC production is very low--24 million barrels per day) could prove favorable to a steep--whether disorderly or otherwise-price increase.... Neither from the viewpoint of business activity nor from that of employment does the year 1981 look very promising. It could be even worse than expected.

MITTERRAND LEFT AS SOLE PS 'CANDIDATE FOR THE CANDIDACY'

[Jean-Marie Colombani report: "Francois Mitterrand Submits His Presidential Election Candidacy to the PS Members"]

[Text] The PS Executive Committee meeting devoted to registering the PS "candidates for the candidacy" was taken by suprise by Francois Mitterrand's initiative as soon as the meeting started on Saturday morning.

Minority group leaders Rocard and Mauroy, who were holding group meetings elsewhere, were not even present.

In a letter to the Executive Committee members the PS first secretary took note of the appeals sent to him by 75 federation executive committees and said that he agreed to "submit his candidacy" to the PS members' vote.

Executive Committee Chairman Louis Mermaz also read a letter from Michel Rocard submitting his own candidacy. However, this letter, dated 5 November, refers to the "promises" previously made by the Yvelines deputy. The clarity of the position adopted by the party first secretary scarcely left any doubt about the attitude that Mr Rocard will take, since he promised at the Metz congress in April 1979 not to stand as a rival candidate against the first secretary. He was therefore obliged to withdraw his candidacy on Saturday, and his aide confirmed that.

Mr. Mitterrand chose to express his intention briefly, considering that the Executive Committee did not have the capacity to approve or disapprove the candidate or candidates. At this stage he decided to follow "administrative" procedure, perhaps waiting to deliver a more detailed statement in Carmaux the next day. The first secretary's decision is in keeping with his statement in Marseille on 26 October. After that speech to Bouches-du-Rhone party members, clearly showing that he would henceforth try to create the right conditions for his own candidacy, Mr Mitterrand had to reconcile two conflicting needs: On the one hand to be more precise in order not to deflate his supporters, who had successfully been trying to spark off appeals in his favor within federation executive committees, and on the other not to be too precise in order to ensure that Mr Rocard would stay in the race. The objective of Mr Mitterrand's friends was, therefore, to force the Yvelines deputy to accept a duel with the first secretary within the party in order to show that the first secretary still has a majority.

Finally, the first secretary felt that he could no longer make do with evasive statements: According to him, that approach would have been misunderstood both within the party and among public opinion. However, by choosing to make his position clear he has given Mr Rocard the opportunity of withdrawing his candidacy (Jean-Pierre Chevenement indicated that he would do likewise). The Yvelines deputy's strategy has therefore failed for the time being; his aim was not only to prevent Mr Mitterrand from being a candidate but also to obtain Mitterrand's support so that he could appear to be a candidate with a "consensus" in the party. It must be admitted that this was not the case.

Mr Mitterrand's supporters mention two events explaining their leader's determination, when he had hitherto been hesitant and had stated that he "did not want to be a candidate," first being the television interview granted by Edgard Pisani in which the senator for Haute-Marne, a supporter of Mr Rocard, expressed the hope that Mr Mitterrand might "hand over"; second, Mr Rocard's statement at Conflans-Sainte-Honorine on 19 October which convinced the first secretary that the Yvelines deputy, in addressing himself to the country, had just made a mistake with regard to the party and that his image would be tarnished by the bad taste of that performance.

Mr Rocard's supporters note that, far from being damaged, the Yvelines deputy's public image is improving in the opinion polls. They consider that Mr Mitterrand is henceforth "face-to-face with his responsibilities," in other words the responsibilities of a man who has run the risk of eliminating the "best Socialist candidate." It is true that Mr Mitterrand certainly did not want to be in this position by 8 November. Had he not explained frequently and at length that any Socialist candidate would gain from waiting at least until the beginning of next year, to avoid exposing himself alone to the attacks of the PS' adversaries and of its former leftwing partner?

So Mr Mitterrand has chosen what seemed to him the lesser of two evils: Although he is officially only a candidate for the candidacy, he is in fact the only man in that position and is faced with a public which, according to the opinion polls, seems to prefer the Yvelines deputy.

Chevenement Statement

LD131057 Paris LE MONDE in French 9-10 Nov 80 p 6

[Text] Jean-Pierre Chevenement, one of the leading members of the Center for Socialist Studies, Research and Information, has told us: "Francois Mitterand's decision will enable the PS to draw up battle formation quickly. We must now have only one concern: to mobilize the party, rally the left around it and bring about the great national people's democratic upsurge which will make it possible to oust Giscard. As far as the PS candidates are concerned, it goes without saying that I would have been a candidate only if Francois Mitterrand were not a candidate."

POLL CONDUCTED ON PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN

LD131101 Paris LE MONDE in French 9-10 Nov 80 p 16

[Text] L'EXPRESS of 8-14 November publishes the second "general picture of the situation in the presidential election"--an opinion poll carried out by the Louis Harris-France Institute between 23 and 29 October on 966 people forming a representative cross-section of the French population aged 18 and over.

Two hypotheses were put for the first round: One with Mr Mitterrand as candidate and the other with Mr Rocard. In both cases Mr Chirac and Mr Debre are assumed to stand. According to this opinion poll people intend to vote in the following way:

1. Giscard d'Estaing, 34 percent; Mitterrand, 19 percent; Marchais, 18 percent; Chirac, 12 percent; Debre, 6 percent; Lalonde, 5 percent. Compared with the poll carried out in September Giscard d'Estaing has dropped two points and Mitterrand one point, while Marchais, Debre and Lalonde have each gained one point, Chirac's score staying the same.

2. Giscard d'Estaing, 30 percent; Rocard, 25 percent; Marchais, 17 percent; Chirac, 12 percent; Debre, 6.5 percent; Lalonde, 4 percent. When a comparison is made with September on this hypothesis, Debre has gained 1.5 points, Rocard, Chirac and Lalonde each gained 1, Marchais has dropped 1 point and Mr. Giscard d'Estaing has dropped 4.

In the second round the reeults would be the following:

1. Giscard d'Estaing, 59 percent (up 4 points over September); Mitterrand, 41 percent (down 4 points).

2. Giscard d'Estaing 51 percent (down 1 point); Rocard, 49 percent (up 1 point).

LE FIGARO MAGAZINE of 8 November publishes its monthly poll carried out by SOFRES between 23 and the 29 October on 974 people representing a cross-section of the French population aged 18 years and over. On the confidence scale Valery Giscard d'Estaing is down 1 point over the result recorded in October (50 percent as against 51 percent). Raymond Barre has also lost 1 point (34 percent as against 35 percent).

Among the opposition members whom the French people would like to see play an important role in the future, Michel Rocard is up 3 points (51 percent as against 48 percent), as is Pierre Mauroy (32 percent against 29 percent), while the scores achieved by Francois Mitterrand and Georges Marchais remain the same (31 percent for the former, 19 percent for the latter. Among leading members of the majority Jacques Chirac is down 1 point (32 percent as against 33 percent) while Michel Debre is up 1 point (28 percent as against 27 percent) and Jacques Chaban-Delmas is up 2 points (29 percent as against 27 percent).

POLICE GENERAL LO PRETE INDICTED IN OIL SCANDAL

AU111357 Rome ANSA in English 0905 GMT 11 Nov 80

[Text] Rome, 11 Nov (ANSA)--A magistrate in the northern Italian city of Treviso, spearheading investigations into the nation's oil scandal, confirmed in the evening that a warrant has been signed for the arrest of Finance Police General Donato Lo Prete, the former head of the confidential office who went on to become chairman of the Finance Police chiefs-of-staff.

The general of the National Police Force responsible for tracking down fiscal violations was suspended from his duties last year, when he was commander of Milan area finance police, after notification from the courts that he was under investigation. General Lo Prete allegedly tipped off oil dealer Bruno Musselli, thought to be one of the key industry figures involved in the colossal tax fraud, that his offices were about to be searched. Musselli, an ex-consul in Chile, has fled abroad. The scandal broke in recent weeks when the commanding general of the police, Raffaele Guidice, was arrested on cover-up charges in connection with the tax swindle.

Many of the nation's leading oil magnates allegedly cheated the Italian state out of an estimated 2.35 billion dollars in taxes with the ploy of passing off their gasoline sales as heating fuel on fiscal documents. Manufacturing taxes on heating fuel in Italy are much lower than those on gasoline. The lucrative fraud, which reportedly went on for several years in the 1970's, was allegedly covered up by prominent business, political and government figures as well as by high-placed police officials.

The names of Industry Minister Antonio Bisaglia and two undersecretaries in the present government have been dragged into the scandal, and Sereno Freato, a close aide of the late Christian Democrat party chairman, Aldo Moro, has been notified that he is under investigation.

Parallel to the magistrates' probe into the mass of documents and cancelled checks seized in connection with the affair, legislators are at work drafting bills for new laws aimed at stopping this form of rampant fiscal fraud. In a statement to Parliament last week, Finance Minister Franco Reviglio sought to scale down the figures widely applied to the scandal and disclosed that the evasion is more on the order of 152 billion lire, 170 million dollars, according to the evidence compiled thus far in criminal proceedings underway.

BERLINGUER GIVES OPINIONS ON NEW U.S. PRESIDENT

LD121233 Milan L'UNITA in Italian 7 Nov 80 pp 1, 8

["Text" of Secretary General Berlinguer 5 November closing speech at PCI Central Committee meeting in Rome: "We Must Smash Anticommunist Prejudice"]

[Excerpt] The election of Ronald Reagan to the U.S. presidency by an impressive and higher than predicted majority raises disturbing questions about future American policy and about American responses in international relations and in the life of a world where tensions are already numerous, acute and dangerous.

It is true that there are certain precedents to counsel caution: The policy pursued by American presidents has not always been the policy they proclaimed during their election campaigns, indeed there has often been a clear separation between the two. Once in the White House, in fact--as happens to people assuming the leadership of other great countries whose orientations are capable of influencing world affairs and the destiny of peace in a determining fashion, when they become aware of the terrifying potential of the weapons which the great powers have in their arsenals--they come, they must come to weigh carefully their tremendous responsibility.

However, things being as they are, we cannot ignore the fact that Reagan has won on the crest of a rightwing wave which he himself greatly helped to foster, taking advantage of the mistakes, vacillations and nonfeasance of, as well as the concessions made to the right by, Carter himself.

Nor can we overlook another factor: Reagan appears to have a view of the United States and its international role which does not accord with the changes that have occurred in the world in recent decades and recent years or, especially, with the opinions determined by the needs, the impulses and the strength of the developing countries, which are deeply irritated by the rebuffs they have recently received from the industrialized countries (including the United States, naturally) and are strongly determined to exercise their rights and defend their independence and their national sovereignty.

Dealing with these needs requires the industrialized countries not only to take a new view of these questions which will aim to overcome the depraved mechanism of unequal exchange but, above all, to prove capable of effecting profound changes in their own internal setups in the direction--to use an expression which has become our own--of austerity and renewal. It does not seem to me that Reagan even approaches such an awareness; Carter showed some indication of it in past yars, but Carter also took backward steps in response to the voice of a widespread public opinion in his country which is equally lacking in such an awareness.

There is something else too: Some of Reagan's statements in recent months have aroused the overt sympathy and support of men who lead some of the world's most reactionary regimes, particularly in Latin America.

So it is clear that, if the policies which characterized Reagan's election campaign--and which, I repeat, had widespread support among the American electorate--are not attenuated, we will have to face the possibility of a period of sharper tensions and of more serious dangers to peace in various parts of the world; Latin America, the Middle East and even Europe. What is more, some of the statements made by European politicians immediately after the election are already expressing their worries in that direction.

BERLINGUER COMMENTS ON PCI RELATIONS WITH OTHER PARTIES

AU120934 Rome ANSA in English 0830 GMT 12 Nov 80

[Text] Rome, 12 Nov (ANSA)--Ferment within the ranks of Italy's ruling Christian Democrat party [DC] is on the upswing with preparations fully underway for the DC National Council assembly, expected for the end of the month, to be given the job of picking a new party chairman to replace Arnaldo Forlani, who is now the head of the Rome government.

The date for the National Council assembly will be put on the calendar tomorrow during the DC leadership meeting.

DC Secretary Flaminio Piccoli, sounding out the leaders of the various factions on the list of candidates for the post and furthering his bid to achieve a more unified management of party affairs, began a series of consultations yesterday which included a meeting with Senate Speaker Amintore Fanfani.

In another development on the nation's political scene, Enrico Berlinguer, secretary of the Communist Party [PCI], took up the matter of the "historic compromise," the PCI proposed working understanding with the Christian Democrats, in a nationally televised interview in the evening.

The head of the major opposition alignment affirmed that "the historic compromise is still substantially the valid line within the PCI though it is continuously necessary to clarify that the expression 'historic compromise' has been subjected to misunderstandings to the extent that in some areas of public opinion it represents a two-way agreement for governing between the PCI and the DC."

Moving on to the sensitive area of Communist relations with the Socialist Party, Berlinguer said that the improvement in these ties "must be concretely measured in the policies conducted by the two parties."

In reference to the DC, the Communist leader said he did not think that an agreement would be possible with the ruling party in the shape in which it came out of its spring national congress.

PRC DELEGATION FROM GUANGXI VISITS SICILY

(Liang Huashin), heading the Chinese delegation, voiced his thanks for the welcome given the Guangxi representatives and quoted an old Chinese saying "Even if countries are far from one another, their peoples are close."

"The Chinese and Italian peoples are intently working at creating a better future and a happy destiny.

"We will learn many things here in Sicily and this visit to your region will certainly bolster the friendly ties between the Italian and Chinese peoples."

I also wish to give my blessing, from the depth of my heart, to these new institutions, these new trade unions in the ranks of which are gathered enormous numbers of my compatriots [words indistinct]. At the same time I wish that this maturity displayed in the behavior of our compatriots, both the community--and in particular--the working people, and the authorities in the last few months still continues to be shared by us and that Poland continues to find support in these forces of the spirit which through Christ, his gospel, his cross [words indistinct] have become the great inheritance of our fatherland.

CONTINUING REPORTAGE ON MADRID CSCE SESSION

First Official Session Postponed

LD121126 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1100 GMT 12 Nov 80

[Text] There was some surprise this morning over the postponement of the first official session of the Madrid conference here at the Palace of Congresses. It has now been announced that Prime Minister Suarez will address the conference not at 1130 as scheduled but at 1300.

The reason is the following: In the absence of agreement on the agenda, every point, every address, every decision has to be approved immediately. So, in order to avoid having to consult each of the 35 countries individually, a representative group has been set up which will approve each matter. This group comprises: Spain and the United States for the Western side; Luxembourg, for the EEC; Austria and Switzerland for the neutral countries; and the USSR, for the Warsaw Pact.

This morning approval was given for the inaugural session to be postponed until 1300. During this 90 minutes the group is getting on with drawing for the order in which countries will make their initial general statements.

This order will be announced immediately after Prime Minister Suarez' address, which will be carried live by Madrid radio and television.

Suarez Delivers Opening Address

LD121434 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1200 GMT 12 Nov 80

[Inaugural speech by Spanish Prime Minister Adolfo Suarez to the CSCE followup conference at the Palace of Congresses and Exhibitions in Madrid--live]

[Excerpt] The years which have passed since the present process began have become known by the conventional name of "detente". The interpretations which have been attributed to its scope and aims are quite varied. Above all, the Helsinki Final Act tried to reflect the limits and the possibilities of the concept which now governs our relations. It seems to me that it would now be opportune, as we embark on our work, to reflect together for a moment about that concept and particularly about its reality.

Certainly miracles cannot be expected from the conference. Indeed, it would not be realistic to think that the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe is a system isolated from the rest of the world functioning under laws of its own. The conference is only a forum, a table for negotiations where the 35 states which signed the Helsinki Act sit down from time to time to review its fulfillment and to continue developing it through fresh proposals.

Its results depend inevitably on the spirit, the political will and the degree of mutual trust which the negotiators bring to the table. And that political will and trust are dictated by the state of the framework of bilateral and multilateral relations among the 35 countries which signed the act. And the state of those relations is influenced by everything happening in the world, but especially by the conduct of each and every one of the signatory countries. That is the nature of things and to shut one's eyes to it would serve no purpose.

There are times when it seems we are conducting a dialogue of the deaf. We all invoke detente, but that word carries different meanings according to who uses it.

There are times when there appears to exist a mutual fear that the concept of detente which the other holds conceals exceptions, reservations of mind and interpretations which may allow him to attain unilateral advantages and reduce one's own security.

Obviously there cannot be detente without security, and if the process initiated at Helsinki is to survive and gather strength, then beginning from the different types of political, economic and social systems and from the ideological differences which mark them, it is necessary to reach a new concept of detente acceptable to all. This new concept of detente, which is not an end in itself but rather a necessary means for the building of peace, must make it possible for us to overcome the symptoms of exhaustion which the process is currently displaying and which are threatening to take us back to the cold war period.

This new concept must include a renunciation of attempts to obtain unilateral advantages, so that nobody might feel himself threatened in his security, and also an avoidance of situations capable of endangering relations between signatory states.

Spain will always give decisive backing to any negotiated attempt to limit the arms race and turn the ideal of disarmament into an attainable goal. Spain believes that contacts between the great powers in their efforts on behalf of detente represent a guarantee--albeit an incomplete one--that disarmament may cease to be a still remote objective.

But security, especially where regional problems are concerned, cannot be the exclusive preserve of the great powers. And the concept of detente is, moreover, in the only form in which it can be acceptable, a complex reality. Alongside the essential aspects of security there can be no talk of detente without conduct which safeguards human rights, which must be universally respected because there can be no true detente if there are no guarantees for the rights and freedoms of the individual, which are the foundaton and ultimate aim of peace.

I should also like to refer to concern over the subject of terrorism, the most detestable and brutal manner of attacking the right which every person has to safety and life. Political stability and the normal functioning of institutions are at times disrupted in various countries which signed the Helsinki Final Act by terrorism, whose eradication is particularly difficult because it enjoys the support of international groups.

Spain believes that the most suitable answer to this situation lies in a globalized strategy in which, alongside whatever measures are taken by those directly affected, there is also taken the necessary joint international and diplomatic action without which the efforts made by those directly affected will be less effective. My country believes that the Helsinki Act should be deepened in this area so as to move from the mere undertaking contained in the act to refrain from rendering direct or indirect assitance to terrorist action, so as to move I repeat, to cooperation among all signatory states for the eradication of terrorism.

Delegates Address Working Session

LD121856 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1800 GMT 12 Nov 80

[Text] The first working session has just ended with four addresses--those of the foreign ministers of Belgium, Canada and Ireland and the Netherlands ambassador.

The first address of the plenary session was that of the Belgian foreign minister, Nothomb. For some 20 minutes he reviewed the subjects which will be discussed throughout the whole of the conference, continually referring to the Helsinki Final Act.

With reference to the review of the fulfillment of these agreements, Nothomb was very tough with the Soviets, attacking the USSR's intervention in Afghanistan and asking for the free self-determination of the country although it may not be a signatory of the Helsinki Final Act. He also touched upon the subject of human rights, accusing certain countries who did not respect them specifically on points concerning the freedom of movement of individuals, rights of association and facilities given to the media. He ended by offering Brussels as the venue for the next conference, as he hopes it will continue.

Then Ambassador (Ivan Dogen), chief of the Dutch delegation, spoke. He also gave an address in a similar vein, quoting textually the tragic case of Afghanistan.

Then the Canadian foreign minister and the Irish foreign minister, in that order, continued. They touched upon the same subjects. The Canadian proposed a high-level meeting with the aim of giving greater clarification to the subject of human rights, information between countries, and so forth.

The Irishman said that the detente preached by the conference could not withstand another shock like that of Afghanistan.

The working group, whose session lasted longer than was scheduled, adopted several points, the right of address of all the states, maximum duration of 30 minutes for each address and the parallel functioning of the working group while the plenary session is meeting. This work will be carried out from 1000 to 1330 and from 1530 to 1900.

SPAIN WILL NOT PERMIT FOREIGN BASES IN CANARIES

LD122234 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1900 GMT 12 Niv 80

[Text] The Diplomatic Information Office of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs has issued a note confirming that, on the part of the Spanish Government, there has not existed nor does there exist any plan to entrust the defense of the national territory of the Canary Islands to foreign powers or international organizations nor, under any circumstances, will its use as a base or platform against third-party countries be permitted. PREPARATIONS FOR SOCIALIST INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS REPORTED

LD130412 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2300 GMT 12 Nov 80

[Pedro Fernandez Cespedes report]

[Excerpts] Everything is ready for the 15th congress of the Socialist International, which begins tomorrow. Among the preparations today is the working session held in camera by the organization's Political Bureau from 1430 to early this evening, when its most prominent leaders were received by His Majesty King Juan Carlos at Oriente Palace. The reception--which was cordial--included direct person-to-person communication on very diverse subjects, according to Felipe Gonzalez.

Everything seems to indicate that the greatest concern of this socialist summit--as always--is the danger of bipolarization of international relations. This is implied by the analysis made by the president of the Socialist International, Willy Brandt, and by the statements made by the majority of the socialist leaders on their arrival in Madrid. For example, Senegalese President Leopold Senghor said at Barajas Airport that, at the beginning of the 1980's, the most important problem is without doubt the North-South dialogue because, at present, the problems which seem most national [as heard] cannot find their solution in the context of one country or one continent. For this reason, the Socialist International decided that the problem of the North-South dialogue would be the key subject of this congress.

The president of the organization, Willy Brandt, addressed the members of the Political Bureau on this subject in the working session which was held today behind closed doors. In effect, Mr. Brandt said that if the socialist summit begins in a situation in which certain elements do not make peace more secure, then the objective continues to be the same, that is, serious negotiations on the limitation of arms and disarmament. In fact, Willy Brandt gave a pessimistic view of the present world situation because, among other things, he said that, after the U.S. elections, there is no longer the possibility that the SALT II agreement will be ratified, and because, in his opinion, the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe has not been at all encouraging.

The secretary general of the Spanish Socialist Workers Party does not consider the CSCE as having failed. It is curious that none of the socialist leaders forgets, in his statements, the slightest allusion to U.S. President-elect Ronald Reagan. For example, Carlos Andres Perez, the former president of Venezuela, is deeply concerned about Mr Reagan and believes that Reagan is a cause of grave concern for Latin America. And, if Carlos Andres Perez is worried about Mr Reagan, Willy Brandt fears the continuation of the Iran-Iraq conflict, a conflict in which, from tomorrow, Olof Palme is going to act as a mediator. Palme, secretary general of the Swedish Social Democrat Party, will leave the congress.

Mr Brandt is also concerned about the occupation of Afghanistan and the Polish labor movement, for which, at this meeting behind closed doors, he expressed his best wishes and his utmost sympathy.

Tomorrow at 1030 the congress will begin with addresses by Felipe Gonzalez and Willy Brandt, and then the participants will debate the first subject of the 15th congress of the Socialist International, namely, international relations, on which the Austrian chancellor, Bruno Kreisky, will make an address.

OLOF PALME DISCUSSES UN MEDIATION OF IRAQ-IRAN WAR

LD121258 Stockholm Domestic Service in Swedish 1130 GMT 12 Nov 80

[Excerpts] Olof Palme, who has been asked by the United Nations to try to mediate in the war between Iran and Iraq, gave a press conference this morning. When the UN secretary general asks me, I naturally cannot say "no," said Olof Palme, who also believes that his mediation task is difficult but meaningful.

[Begin recording] One must not have any expectations of rapid results. But this is an important link in the process which must lead to peace. I am glad that both sides have shown a positive interest in a UN contribution and in my engagement in the matter. This will make the task meaningful, even though it is difficult.

[Question] You have no previous experience of such tasks?

[Answer] No.

[Question] What grounds are there for believing that just you will manage this?

[Answer] It is not for me to answer this question. I have by no means had any ambitions to obtain this task. I was asked to do it, with the support of both sides, and this has not happened before. In this case I must make myself available and try to resolve the task in the best way.

[Question] Is this a beginning of an international career, for instance within the United Nations?

[Answer] Absolutely not. I am chairman of the Swedish Social Democratic Labor Party, and for a Swedish Social Democrat there is no higher ambition than this. As long as the party wants me and I have strength, I will stay in this job. I think that it is in line with the entire ideology of social democracy to work for peace and international solidarity. Thus I believe it is fully consistent with the work of chairman of the Social Democratic Party. But I have told Secretary General Waldheim that my time is limited, and that for this task I cannot entirely neglect my duties within Sweden. He has accepted this and [word indistinct] find various practical solutions to deal with the situation. [End recording]

Palme is now going to meet UN Secretary General Kurt Waldheim in New York on Friday. On Sunday he will go to Geneva and from there on to Tehran and Baghdad, but he does not exactly know yet when that will be.

'TERRITORIAL' ASPECTS DISCUSSED IN SECOND ROUND OF TALKS

NC122024 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1730 GMT 12 Nov 80

[Text] The second round of intercommunal talks concluded today with the continuation of the discussion on the territorial aspects of the Cypriot issue. Today's meeting, which is the eighth in the framework of intercommunal talks, opened this afternoon at the Ledra Palace Hotel.

In statements made prior to the meeting, the UN secretary general's special representative in Cyprus, Gobbi, said he did not know whether proposals would be submitted today, but added that the proposals which had already been submitted on the territorial aspect were to be discussed.

Answering a reported remark that the Turkish Cypriot side did not submit concrete proposals, Gobbi said: As I also said last time, there are two ways of tackling this problem. One method is translated into more concrete lines, the other method is that, before we translate into concrete lines, it is necessary to reach agreement on certain criteria as a prerequisite. To another remark that these criteria have been agreed upon between Makarios and Denktas, Gobbi replied: That is correct. These criteria, however, were general guidelines. Now, more specific details must be given to these criteria.

Answering a question on whether an agreement should first be reached on the criteria before the talks proceed with the question of territorial arrangements, Gobbi said this was the opinion of one of the parties. He added: I think it will be a necessary prerequisite to agree on certain criteria before we go ahead.

To another question concerning the reason why everyone says the third round will be very serious, Gobbi replied: Because the talks are developing in a very positive manner, every round constitutes progress and when one makes progress one touches on sensitive areas. Gobbi clarified that by positive development he meant as far as the substance of the problem was concerned, and noted that the previous meeting was very positive and the dialogue proceeded in depth. The UN secretary general's special representative expressed optimism that the end of this round of talks will be very good.

Mr Ioannidhis, the Greek Cypriot side's representative at the intercommunal talks, stated before the meeting began that the Turkish Cypriot side was expected today to submit certain concrete proposals on the territorial aspect. Asked to clarify the question of approaching the territorial issue, the Greek Cypriot negotiator said that, as it is known, there are certain criteria regarding the territorial aspect in the four guidelines of February 1977. Asked whether he would define these criteria once more, Ioannidhis stressed that what actually matters in the territorial aspect is how one translates these criteria on territory. He added: On the map. Answering another question whether percentages are being discussed during the course of the talks, Ioannidhis stated that the territorial aspect should be discussed in terms of area.

Turkish Cypriot interlocutor Onan stated before the meeting that the Turkish Cypriot side was to submit its proposals on the territorial aspect and listen to the proposals of the Greek Cypriot side. Asked whether he would submit a map, Onan said that proposals were certainly to be submitted but refrained from giving any details. Asked to say whether he would be more specific today on the criteria of the territorial aspect, Onan replied that his side has been very clear and will continue to be specific. The Turkish Cypriot interlocutor went on to say that it depends on how one approaches the issue. He said: My approach is that if we agree on the principles, then translating them onto paper would become increasingly easy. Asked whether he could disclose any percentages on the territorial issue, Onan replied that he could not do such a thing because, as he put it, he was submitting percentages. In conclusion, Onan described all the meetings within the framework of the intercommunal talks as very useful.

NC130935 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 0800 GMT 13 Nov 80

In a statement before his departure, Rolandhis said that he considered the Madrid conference the most important conference of 1980. He added that the degree of tension or detente that will prevail in the international arena during the coming years is dependent on the outcome of this conference. Rolandhis said that due to the present international climate, there are already serious difficulties facing the conference which, he added, are expected to become more difficult when substantive issues are discussed. In conclusion, Rolandhis said that Cyprus, together with nonaligned and other countries, will attempt to contribute to the success of the conference.

NC091549 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 9 Nov 80

[Text] The founding conference of the Pan-Cyprian Revitalization Front [PAME] was held in Nicosia today. The main speaker was Mr Sofianos, who analyzed the declaration of basic principles and targets of PAME.

Concerning the national issue, Mr Sofianos said that the front supports a just, peaceful and political solution based on the UN resolutions and the summit agreements for an independent, unitary, federal, nonaligned and demilitarized Cyprus. He also expressed support for the intercommunal talks, the idea of an international conference on Cyprus within the UN framework, abolition of foreign bases and the granting by the United Nations of international guarantees. Mr Sofianos also referred to the need for a strong defensive shielding and the existence of a strong internal front. At the same time, he also advocated that there should be a mixed economic system of private initiative and state intervention.

Referring to the establishment of PAME, Mr Sofianos said the front was formed in order to coalesce the pro-Makarios forces who, as he put it, today feel they are hanging in the air, homeless, as far as partisanship is concerned. The founding meeting elected Mr Sofianos chairman of PAME and the members of the front's Central Committee.

DEPUTY PAPADHOPOULOS ESTABLISHES 'CENTER UNION' PARTY

NC121843 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1730 GMT 12 Nov 80

[Text] At a press conference today, independent Deputy Tasos Papadhopoulos announced the establishment of a political movement called Center Union [enosis kendrou] on behalf of those who play a leading role in the movement and as one of them.

In his statement, among other things, Papadhopoulos said that the Center Union can and must fill the gap, as he put it, created by the deficiency of the present political leadership and thus avert polarization and, he added, contribute to a solid unity of those who believe they belong to the forces of the center and to reverse the dangerous downhill trend to class showdown. Papadhopoulos expressed support for the procedure of the intercommunal talks under UN auspices toward finding a solution which, as he put it, would insure an end to the invasion and safeguard the inalienable and reasonable demands of all Cypriot citizens within the framework of a federal, demilitarized, nonaligned and unitary state entity. He added: Such a solution is outlined in the proposals submitted by the Greek Cypriot side in April 1977.

He also said that the positions and manifesto of the Center Union will be released to the press when they have been worked out in detail.

Answering questions, Papadhopoulos said that the leadership and other organs of the party will emerge from elections and that the group of independent deputies formed in the House of Representatives by himself, Mr Vakis and Mr Khristofidhis will be called a "team of Center Union deputies." He also said he would not rule out any identity with homogeneous forces and cooperation with heterogeneous forces on questions such as the national issue in particular.

AKEL, CPSU DELEGATION ISSUE JOINT STATEMENT ON VISIT

NC121735 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 12 Nov 80 pp 1, 7

[Text of AKEL-CPSU joint statement issued in Nicosia on visit of CPSU delegation to Cyprus at the invitation of AKEL--date not given]

[Text] The CPSU delegation that visited Cyprus 3-10 November 1980 held talks at the headquarters of the AKEL Central Committee on 4 and 10 November. The CPSU representatives at the talks were: Vladimir Ivanovich Terebilov, head of the delegation and CPSU Central Committee deputy member; Comrade Igor Viktorovich Shakhmanov, secretary of the Leningrad Regional Committee in Moscow [name and title as published] and Comrade Karl Shemenkov, member of the International Department of the CPSU Central Committee. AKEL was represented at the talks by Comrades E. Papaioannou, AKEL Central Committee secretary general; A. Fandis, AKEL Central Committee deputy secretary general; and Y. Tasouridhis, member of AKEL Central Committee's Secretariat.

The two delegations discussed, within the traditional spirit of friendship, the comradeship and brotherly relations that prevails between CPSU and AKEL, the situation in their countries, the problems confronting them, the struggles of their parties, and the problems of the current international and world Communist movement.

The AKEL delegation briefed the CPSU delegation on the struggle of AKEL, the patriotic and democratic forces and the Cypriot people against the continuing machinations of U.S.-NATOite imperialism in imposing a NATO solution on the Cyprus issue. The Cypriot people's struggle has now become more difficult and complicated since the military coup in Turkey and Greece's reintegration in NATO's military wing.

The AKEL delegation declared the determination of the Cypriot working class and workers party to continue struggling for the rallying of the patriotic, democratic and anti-imperialist forces in a strong, united front that would successfully wage the Cypriot people's liberation, antioccupation and anti-imperialist struggle for a just, peaceful, mutually acceptable and viable solution of the Cypriot problem, i.e., a solution that would safeguard the independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity and nonalignment of a federal republic of Cyprus, the withdrawal of the Turkish and all foreign troops from Cyprus and its demilitarization, the right of all refugees--Greek and Turkish Cypriots--to voluntarily return to their homes under conditions of safety, and the ascertaining of the fate of missing persons.

The AKEL delegation expressed the deep gratitude of the party and the struggling Cypriot people toward the CPSU, the USSR Government and the Soviet people for their continued support of the Cypriot people's struggle for the free and democratic development of the Cyprus Republic.

The CPSU delegation briefed the AKEL delegation on the Soviet people's successes in fulfilling the domestic and foreign policy resolutions of the 25th CPSU Congress and in fulfilling the duties regarding the implementation of the 1975-1980 5-year plan. The AKEL delegation was also briefed on the intensive preparations for the forthcoming 26th CPSU Congress.

The CPSU delegation reiterated the assurance that it decisively supports AKEL's and the Cypriot patriotic democratic forces' difficult, self-sacrificing struggle against the interference of imperialism and its plans for a NATOite solution to the Cyprus problem--a solution that is against the will of the Cypriots--and for a peaceful and viable solution to the Cypriot problem that would respond to the vital and genuine interests of the Cypriot people--Greeks, Turks, Armenians and Maronites.

The CPSU-AKEL delegations declared their conviction that the domestic aspects of the Cyprus issue can only be solved through intercommunal talks as provided in the relevant UN resolutions and based on the Makarios-Denktas and the Kiprianou-Denktas agreements. They also support the convening of a representative international conference on the Cyprus issue, within the framework of the UN, to settle the international aspects of the Cyprus issue.

The CPSU-AKEL delegations firmly believed that the further consolidation of peace; the spreading of detente and its extension to the military sector; the ending of the arms race that the imperialist circles are promoting, headed by U.S. imperialism; the implementation of concrete measures for disarmament; the sanctioning by the U.S. Congress of the SALT II agreements; and, in general, conforming to the Helsinki Final Act--all these actions--concern the vital interests of all humanity. With regard to this, the delegations of the two parties expressed the hope that the forthcoming Madrid conference will positively contribute toward this direction of detente and peace in the spirit of the Helsinki Final Act.

The two delegations expressed concern over the rapprochement and the activation of the imperialist forces with the Beijing's hegemonist, which constitutes a threat to the cause of peace and social progress.

The two delegations stressed the importance of the recent USSR-Syrian treaty of friendship and mutual aid, and expressed the conviction that this will become a positive factor in the people's struggle in the region for peace and the solution for the dangerous Middle East crisis.

They also expressed the hope that the Iraq-Iran war will end and that the two countries will solve their differences at the negotiating table in a peaceful manner.

The delegations expressed their full satisfaction with the relations of brotherly friendship and solidarity that exist between their two parties. They also expressed their mutual wish to strengthen and develop to a greater degree these brotherly relations in the interest of the two peoples, peace and social progress.

NEWSPAPER REACTIONS TO U.S. PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION RESULTS

NC101855 [Editorial Report] Nicosia's Greek-language press coverage of the 4 November U.S. presidential elections was highlighted by the following 6-10 November editorials and commentaries which stress the election's effect on U.S.-Cyprus relations and Mideast issues:

In a frontpage editorial on 6 November, ELEVTHERI KIPROS says that "Cyprus has watched the U.S. presidential election with very little interest," adding that "Cyprus did not wish Jimmy Carter's reelection." About Ronald Reagan, the paper says that "the new U.S. president is a new personality, actually he has not made any promise about Cyprus," and that he had said something about Cyprus on one occasion "for consumption by the Greek-American lobby, but actually he did not say anything very concrete or very positive." The paper stresses: "We must be very careful and very cautious with the new U.S. Government. If it shows an interest in Cyprus, we must be bold and flexible and must respond with all prudence required by circumstances. But, if not, we must remain devoted to the United Nations and the friends who warmly support our struggle."

In a frontpage editorial headlined "The Hour of Deeds" I MAKHI of 6 November says that outgoing President Carter has violated his promises and "leaves us, particularly the Greeks of Cyprus and all the Greeks in general, with the worst of memories." The paper adds that it is natural for the Greeks, moreover the Greeks of Cyprus, "to be pleased with Mr Reagan's victory, because so far the U.S. president-elect has not wronged us, nor has he done anything against us." The paper refers to a "promise by Mr Reagan to Greek-American Christopher that if he is elected president he will work for the withdrawal of the Turkish occupation troops from Cyprus" and says that the hour of deeds by Mr Reagan has come and "the Greeks, particularly we, here in Cyprus, who are the victims of the Turkish invasion, expect to see these deeds implemented."

In its page 2 "Our Positions" column, O AGON of 6 November carries a commentary entitled "The New U.S. President," and states "it would be political naivete either to rejoice at or to be disappointed by Mr Ronald Reagan's election as U.S. president. By now we should have been convinced that U.S. foreign policy does not change with the change in the White House--it does not change to the extent that it would directly affect us." The paper adds that Carter's defeat "is an indication of the American people's disappointment in the administration of the outgoing president who has failed to keep his lavish election promises. At this point we must say that in the case of Cyprus Mr Carter proved to be deceitful and we therefore are not sorry about his defeat." The paper reiterates that "we do not expect a radical change in the U.S. attitude as a result of Mr Reagan's victory. What we expect is that he should not show a similar scandalous favoritism for Turkey--as his predecessor in office has done--and thus incite Turkish intransigence."

In a backpage editorial entitled "The U.S. Elections," KHARAVYI of 6 November stresses that "the Cypriot people are disturbed and in agony because of Ronald Reagan's election, despite their bitter disappointment about his rival, Carter. And this is so because the Cypriot people feel that international tension, cold war and the arms race will have negative repercussions on the efforts for a peaceful and fair Cyprus solution through the United Nations."

In its page 3 "Freely" column entitled "State Department and the Cyprus Issue," I SIMERINI of 7 November says that "no prediction can be made without considering the present position of the Cyprus problem within U.S. foreign policy" and notes that "there is no doubt that following Greece's reintegration into NATO this position is now being given lesser priority."

Stating that "Roger's intervention has put things in their place" the paper points out that "the Cyprus problem continues to be a cause for concern because the fact that it has not yet been settled constitutes a wound that has not been completely healed. However, the serious dangers to the United States and NATO seem to have passed." The paper concludes that because of this "it is imperative for us to strengthen our efforts and to increase our vigilance in order to maintain some substantive U.S. interest in Cyprus."

TA NEA of 9 November carries a brief commentary in its "Positions" column on page 5, entitled "Reagan" strongly attacking Reagan's "provocative" statement on the PLO and adding, "thus he reveals the true nature of U.S. policy." In conclusion, it says that "neither Reagan nor any other imperialist will ever be able to crush the Palestinian revolution."

In its "Liberal" column on page 3, O FILELEVTHEROS on 9 November carries a commentary headlined "Change of Guard at the White House," noting that the new U.S. administration will affect world affairs. The paper adds that "we must weight things as best as we can in order to see how much the coming to power of the Republicans will affect the Cyprus issue." Outlining the role of U.S. policemakers, the paper observes that "judging from Reagan's preelection pronouncements and the entire philosophy with which the Republicans face world problems, all commentators conclude that the United States will follow a tough international policy in the next 4 years." Predicting an increased arms race and the creation of more sources of unrest, the paper warns: "under these circumstances we should not expect a substantive push of the Cyprus issue toward a solution. The present state of affairs in Cyprus may be 'put into the freezer'. Therefore, our policy must be to wait. But if, despite these forecasts, we note that there conditions exist for the promotion of our problem toward a fair solution, we should definitely not miss the opportunity."

The weekly I ELEVTHEROTIPIA of 10 November carries a commentary on page 7 by its columnist Kostas Yennaris entitled "Reagan, the Cold War and Cyprus." On Reagan's foreign policy, the columnist says that "the new agreement that we will seek to negotiate with the Soviet Union will be 'from a position of strength' (could there possibly be powerful and weak, victors and losers in a nuclear holocaust), thus securing nuclear superiority for the United States. However, there are more alarming elements. For example, there is talk about the appointment of the contemporary Metternich, Dr Henry Kissinger, to the office of secretary of state. Dr Kissinger is already well known to many people, and particularly to the Cypriot people." The columnist adds that it appears from things that nothing will change in connection with Cyprus because "our fate in the hands of U.S. foreign policymakers has always been the same."

NEWSPAPERS REACT TO U.S. PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION RESULTS

NC101658 [Editorial Report] Istanbul's Turkish-language press coverage of the 4 November U.S. presidential elections was highlighted by the following 6-9 November editorials and commentaries which stress the election's effect on U.S.-Turkish relations:

On 6 November, GUNAYDIN carries a commentary by Teoman Erel on the outcome of the presidential elections in the United States. Stressing the importance of the U.S. presidential elections to a country like Turkey which is situated in the Middle East where a conflagration may occur at any moment, Teoman Erel says: "The United States is the greatest economic power in the world. The strongest war machinery is again in the hands of this state. The slightest change in U.S. foreign policy may cause great repercussions both in Europe and in our region. What is more, it is quite possible for Reagan's victory to lead not to 'a slight' change, but to important changes in the U.S. policy."

Teoman Erel concludes: "Countries like ours which are geographically exposed to extremely serious dangers, must know whether or not the detente between the blocs will harden, whether or not the possibility of a war will increase and whether or not Uncle Sam will want to see his allies more disciplined. Europe is already feeling such an anxiety.

"The possibility of a tougher administration in the United States, attaching little significance to peace, is of utmost importance to a country like Turkey which is devoted to democracy, which is trying not to encourage a classic Middle East regime, which is trying to stick to Europe despite Europe's dislike for it, and which is trying to stay away from the adventures of the region."

On 6 November, HURRIYET carries an editorial by Oktay Eksi entitled "Why Reagan?" Among other things, Eksi concludes: "Turkey believes that Republican Party politicians entering the White House have, generally speaking, exhibited better understanding toward Turkey. Democratic Party politicians like Kennedy, Johnson and Carter maintained an alien and even a cool attitude toward Turkey's problems, extending a helping hand only when they had to. The change in Carter's attitude in recent years was the outcome of pressure from those running the Pentagon and the State Department. Turkey has, therefore, nothing to lament about the recent U.S. presidential elections."

Ali Sirmen, in his 6 November CUMHURIYET column says, among other things, "Reagan's demagogic character, his inability to grasp world politics and his general philosophy is causing anxiety in the minds of some circles. Some people go so far as to think that the entry to the White House of a man of Reagan's caliber is a threat to world peace."

Referring to Reagan's preelection pledges, Sirmen says he believes that Reagan will find it extremely difficult to fulfill all these economic and foreign policy pledges, and concludes: "What we can see at the moment is that the United States has a new president but that the old order will prevail."

On 6 November, TERCUMAN carries a Gunery Civaoglu editorial which says: "The results which were announced yesterday show that Reagan has secured a sweeping victory and that he has almost crushed his rival. We believe that the American people have come out against socialization measures. This inclination of the peoples of the world should show the way to Turkey which is searching for an economic model." Civaoglu then wonders whether Reagan's victory will bring changes to U.S. foreign policy and how Washington-Ankara relations will develop with a new president in the White House. Civaoglu goes on to say: "The foreign policies of superpowers do not change much when a new administration comes to power. When Carter assumed office, Turkey experienced anxious moments and yet U.S.-Turkish relations entered a positive orbit. It can be argued that Reagan's election will be more advantageous to Turkey. Reagan is inclined to pursue a comparatively tough policy toward the Soviet Union. This places Turkey in an advantageous position. During Carter's term of office, Reagan used to maintain that the United States had neglected friendly countries. He criticized the administration for allowing the Soviet bloc to snatch these friendly countries. Now he will certainly try to establish close and sincere ties with Turkey, a friendly country of special importance."

Referring to Carter's election manifesto, Civaoglu says: "Carter devoted 8 pages of his election manifesto to the Cyprus issue, openly supporting the Greek Cypriot administration. In fact, this was an election concession to voters of Greek origin, only to be forgotten after the elections. But there was not a single sentence in Reagan's election manifesto about Cyprus." Civaoglu concludes: "We may say that Reagan will not make enormous contributions to Turkey's welfare. Nevertheless, he should be preferred to Carter."

On 7 November, GUNAYDIN carries a dispatch from Washington by Ertugrul Akbay, which says: "Ronald Reagan, who will assume office as President of the United States on 20 January, has stated that he would further improve and deepen U.S.-Turkish relations. Reagan further stated that since the Korean war, Turkey has always been one of the best allies of the United States. He also argued that Turkish-U.S. relations were neglected in the past by Democratic Party leaders and that these leaders had failed to grasp adequately the importance of Turkey's friendship. Reagan said: 'Whenever a Democratic Party leader comes to power in the United States, U.S.-Turkish relations cool off. I am going to establish deeper and warmer relations with Turkey.'"

In his dispatch, Akbay further says: "On the other hand, the Voice of Germany radio [Deutsche Welle] reports that the Greeks have been alarmed by Reagan's election because they say that the United States will want a strong Turkey in the southern flank of NATO and that this might entail an increase in U.S. arms for Turkey."

CUMHURIYET for 9 November carries an unattributed article which takes Turkish Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen to task for saying, among other things, that "Turkish-U.S. relations are based on an identity of interests and on an identity of views on world problems. We hope Turkish-U.S. relations will develop during the Reagan era." The writer says: "At first glance, these words seems to symbolize an expression of good will toward the newly-elected president, and it is only natural that it should be so. However, stating that 'we share the same views with the United States on world problems' amounts to going a bit too far or allowing words to transcend the truth. The new U.S. President Ronald Reagan held his first press conference and answered questions put to him by the journalists. At this conference, Reagan characterized the PLO as a 'terrorist' organization. Now, is it possible for Turkey to 'cherish identical views' with the United States on this subject which could be described as the key to the Middle East policy? The PLO has an official bureau and a representative in our capital.

"Turkey has, in conjunction with other Islamic countries, established its stand on this issue. It is impossible for Turkey and the United States to hold 'identical views' on the Middle East which is in the grip of the hottest and the most complicated problems of the world. The honorable foreign minister should have used more 'cautious' language."

On 9 November TERCUMAN carries a commentary by Fahir Armaoglu on the presidential elections results. Referring to Reagan's probable Mideast policy, Armaoglu says: "In the Arab-Israeli dispute, Reagan's weight is on Israel's side. The new president has openly stated his opposition to the Palestinian cause. Though the new administration appears to be fairly suitable for the development of the Turkish-U.S. relations, we must refrain from jumping to conclusions. The character and the personality of the members of the new president's team will play a vital part."

Ankara Court Death Sentences

TA121734 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 12 Nov 80

[Text] The Ankara Martial Law Command First Military Court has sentenced three suspects to death in the murders of Halim Kaplan and Veli Gunes--generally known as the sack murders--and one suspect in the same case to 10 years in prison.

After having interrogated Halim Kaplan and Veli Gunes, Fikri Arikan, Kemal Ozdemir and Murteza Coskun tied up the hands and feet of the victims and took them out of town. They shot Gunes to death on the way and Kaplan near Imrahor Village. Eyup Ozmen, who was at the time the leader of the Idealist Hearths [Ulku Ocaklari] [words indistinct] was tried in the same case for supplying arms to Arikan, Ozdemir and Coskun and encouraging them to commit murder.

During its hearing today, the Ankara Martial Law Command First Military Court sentenced Arikan, Ozdemir, Coskun and Ozmen to death. The death sentence for Coskun was commuted to 10 years in prison in accordance with article No 65/3 of the Turkish penal code for continuously participating in the crime. The court also ruled that Coskun be barred from public service, deprived of his freedom to use his civil rights for the duration of his sentence and placed on probation in Mugla for 3 years and 4 months.

The First Military Court also sentenced Ali Yenice and Ilham Karatas, who were being tried in the same case, to 6 months in prison for unknowingly providing and eliminating incriminating evidence.

The decision previously made about the sack murder suspects had been repealed by the Military Court of Appeals. During its session today, the Ankara Martial Law Command First Military Court opposed the repeal decision of the Military Court of Appeals and sentenced three of the suspects to death and one of them to 10 years in prison.

AU131820 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1700 GMT 13 Nov 80

Steel Order Concluded

AU131103 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 13 Nov 80 p 9

[DIE PRESSE special report by "MT"]

[Excerpts] Linz--The order placed with the Voest Steel Corporation to build a new steel works in Eisenhuettenstadt (GDR) was at the center of yesterday's visit by GDR State Council Chairman Erich Honecker to the Linz works of the Voest-Alpine Corporation. As Honecker stressed, the basic decision in favor of that company was motivated by the already existing business relations and primarily the high quality of the plants already supplied and built--Voest-Alpine is participating in the construction of 12 projects in the GDR. The contract conditions and details regarding delivery and financing of the 10-12 billion schilling project still have to be negotiated.

State Secretary Nussbaumer declared in Vienna, in commenting on this order, that Voest-Alpine had not necessarily submitted the best bid and the cheapest financing. The order was an expression of gratitude for Austria's having made Honecker respectable [salonfaehig] in the West, the state secretary said.

This was stated by Chancellor Bruno Kreisky, chairman of the Austrian Socialist Party [SPOe] on Wednesday before his departure by air for Madrid.

He added that this was a coincidence of time and place with which he was not very happy.

The SPOe delegation to the Socialist International congress also included Science Minister Firnberg, SPOe parliamentary floor leader Fischer, Vienna Mayor Gratz, Carinthian Governor Wagner, SPOe Central Secretaries Blecha and Marsch, SPOe International Secretary Hacker, and Women's Secretary Demuth.

BARRE ANNOUNCES $150 MILLION LOAN TO YUGOSLAVIA

LD140018 Paris Domestic Service in French 2300 GMT 13 Nov 80

[Text] In Belgrade today, Premier Raymond Barre made the gesture awaited by the Yugoslav Government by announcing a bank loan of $150 million. Raymond Barre stated that this was a gesture of confidence in the future of Yugoslavia.

Barre Remarks

LD140928 Paris Domestic Service in French 0700 GMT 14 Nov 80

[Report on Special Correspondent Pascal Delanoye interview with Premier Raymond Barre on 13 November in Yugoslavia--recorded]

[Text] One hundred and fifty million dollars for Yugoslavia: This is the size of the loan which the French banks will grant to Belgrade. Raymond Barre, who announced this yesterday during his official visit, made it clear that this money would serve to stablize the Yugoslav economy:

[Barre] This is a considerable effort, one which is proportionately more important than that represented by our share in Yugoslav imports. We are granting this loan to Yugoslavia with a view to contributing to the implementation of its program of stablization.

[Question] Mr Premier, why is it important to have Yugoslavia in a good economic state. Is it also important from the political point of view?

[Answer] Yugoslavia occupies an important place in Europe and is a country which tries hard to play its role in the part of Europe where it is situated. As France desires that there should be equilibrium, peace and development in Europe, it is normal that it should have special relations with Yugoslavia.

LE FIGARO SEES 'EFFECTIVE' RESULTS OF CSCE PROCESS

LD131159 Paris LE FIGARO in French 12 Nov 80 p 1

[Serge Maffert article: "Detente?"]

[Text] Contrary to what could be believed, the Madrid conference was not supposed to be a dialogue between vice and virtue with the eventual triumph of the latter at the end, as represented in paintings by conventional 19th century artists. It was rather to be yet another stage of a continuous trial of strength between East and West, hence the rocklike firmness of the antagonistic attitudes adopted by the USSR and the United States.

In the abstruse and complex content of the Helsinki Final Act both superpowers isolated what suited them best. The United States, supported by a majority of the 35 participating powers, emphasized the question of human rights, the most debatable element of the situation prevailing in the Soviet Union, which in turn demanded that the spotlight be turned on the question of disarmament in Europe. This would be consistent with its interests, since it would on the whole lead to the freezing of a situation currently favorable to the Soviets.

That the question of human rights is a political and, moreover, an effective, formidable and, in addition, perfectly legitimate weapon has been clearly demonstrated by the fact that its importance has been assessed differently by different countries throughout te world. Seen as of vital importance when connected with the USSR, its significance has gone down a peg when people's democracies, which other countries want to treat gently, have been involved. Latin American-type totalitarian regimes have traditionally served as alibis, but the United States accepts them because they are anticommunist.

And what can be said about Kampuchea? Most democratic countries (but not France) recognize the Khmer Rouge regime, which has been responsible for one of the worst genocides in history but opposes a pro-Soviet Vietnam, as the only lawful government. And, above all, what can be said about China? Human rights and individual freedoms are completely unknown there and, before, during and since the Cultural Revolution, China has been subjected to worse maltreatment than any other country in the world. And yet it exercises an extraordinary fascination on the West, not only because it is a determined adversary of the USSR.

Thus the East-West contest is being continued unchanged even though different arms are being used. Detente is one of them and it is much more effective from the West's viewpoint than has generally been admitted.

Generally speaking, the Helsinki accords have not strengthened the Soviet positions. They have undermined these positions within the socialist camp. When Moscow asserts that the defense of human rights is tantamount to inadmissible interference in its domestic affairs, it expresses an obvious fear. Human rights mean freedom of expression, which means challenge and opposition to the authorities.

Since the Helsinki conference, there have been "dissidents," that is, open opposition to the Soviet regime. Since the Helsinki conference, Eastern countries have enjoyed an unprecedented freedom of maneuver. This has been observed in Poland. With reference to the Madrid conference, Warsaw, Budapest and Bucharest have, as we have seen, exerted pressure on Moscow to make it adopt a more flexible initial stance.

The CSCE and its consequences have done more for freedom than most of the statements which have led to nothing. We must remember this and we must not break a mechanism which, even though not spectacular, has been reasonably effective.

POLL FINDS GROWING DISSATISFACTION WITH GISCARD, BARRE

LD131151 Paris LE MONDE in French 8 Nov 80 p 42

["R.B." report: "Mr Giscard d'Estaing's 'Balance' Has Dipped 3 Points"]

[Excerpts] The latest FRANCE-SOIR-French Public Opinion Institute [IFOP] popularity poll, based on 1,514 interviews involving a representative national population sample of people aged 18 and over and carried out from 29 October through 4 November, has proved satisfactory neither to the president nor to his premier.

As a result of the fact that the percentage of people without an opinion has decreased, to the advantage of the "dissatisfied" category, Mr Giscard d'Estaing's "balance," which was slightly negative in September (42 percent dissatisfied and 41 percent satisfied) has become more obviously so with a 3-point margin--47 percent dissatisfied against 44 percent satisfied. The proportion of people who expressed no opinion has dropped from 17 to 9 percent.

Mr Raymond Barre, who has always loudly proclaimed his complete indifference to opinion polls, has now beaten all his previous unpopularity records.

In fact, his rating is negative to the extent of 28 points, with 59 percent dissatisfied compared with 31 percent satisfied, where as it was negative by only 21 points (52 compared with 31 percent) in Spetember. The proportion of people who have expressed no opinion has droped from 17 to 10 percent.

Even though Mr Barre once had an even worse rating spread--31 points (26 percent satisfied compared with 57 percent dissatisfied) in September 1979, dissatisfaction with him indeed has never reached the 59 percent level.

Such results are without precedent.

REPORTAGE ON ACTIVITIES CONNECTED WITH OPENING OF ASSEMBLY

Media Coverage

LD131300 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 0800 GMT 13 Nov 80

[Excerpts] The Assembly of the Republic convenes this afternoon for the first time since its election in the 5 October parliamentary poll, marking the commencement of the country's second legislature which will expire in 1984. President Ramalho Eanes will not be in the house to attend today's opening but the speaker will read a message from him in the 250-deputy chamber.

The Council of Ministers will decide today on the date on which the government should present its planned motion of confidence. Official circles say that this may happen tomorrow, or next week, but, in any case, before the presidential election campaign officially begins on 22 November.

From now on a more comprehensive coverage of parliamentary proceedings will be provided on the first program of Radiodifusao Portuguesa. Our newsroom staff will first tape the entire proceedings of each session of parliament and then compile a 30-minute report to be broadcast regularly immediately following the midnight newsreel, and a shorter 15-minutes report after the 1300 newsreel on the following day. The first edition of this "Jornal do Parlamento" will be broadcast immediately after the midnight newsreel tonight. While the first afternoon edition of the 15-minutes "Parlamento Em Resumo" will be on the air tomorrow at bout 1330, after the newsreel.

President Eanes' Message

LD140100 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2300 GMT 13 Nov 80

[Excerpts] The first sitting of the Assembly of the Republic since the 5 October legislative elections was held today, when the 250 MPs elected last month met for the first time. The first business today was the verification of credentials.

The second legislature of the Portuguese parliament has thus begun and it will have as one of its tasks the revision of the Constitution. This issue was indeed at the center of the message sent to parliament tonight by the president of the republic.

The message consists of 14 typed pages in which Ramalho Eanes deals with some of the major and most controversial issues of Portuguese politics today. With regard to the revision of the Constitution, Eanes says: It is not up to me to say whether the Constitution is good or bad; the representatives of the people, vested by the latter with constituent powers, were the ones who approved it, by a vote of over 90 percent of the constituent deputies.

Eanes goes on: All that the organs of sovereignty have to do is observe it in its present form until its revision by those means which have been laid down by the Constitution itself, and it is the duty of the president of the republic--who swore his allegiance to it--to defend it, irrespective of [words indistinct]. Eanes adds that the Constitution has to be revised, but this revision has to be effected in accordance with the terms laid down in the Constitution itself, otherwise there would be no revision at all, but simply a new constitution. Also based on provisions of the Constitution, Eanes argues that the revision cannot be effected by means of a referendum.

Another topic touched upon by Eanes in his message concerns the balance of [institutional] powers. In this connection, he says that pluralist democracy resulting from the liberal [word indistinct] of democratic principles calls--due to its very nature--for a limitation of power.

And further on, he adds that it is indispensable that pluralist democracy should not become a mere formal device, that is, it is necessary to prevent a single center of control from gradually emerging from behind the juridical variety of the organs of sovereignty, to prevent the establishment of a single command and decisionmaking center, and to prevent the various organs from becoming mere tools in the hands of a single and limitless will.

Among his indirect references to the present political situation, the most relevant was perhaps the one in which he says that, regarding the defense of democracy, any excess of trust becomes dangerous. History shows, he says, how dictatorships have established themselves when all signs led one to believe that domestic and foreign conditions were favorable to the democratic system, and it also often exposes the blindness which, amid political passions and disputes, prevents one from seeing the enemy at the gates of the city.

It was, as one can see, a rather controversial message: Suffice it to say that none of the political parties represented in parliament applauded it en bloc. The little applause which the message managed to arouse came from the socialist benches and from the parliamentary groups associated with the FRS [Republican and Socialist Front] and also, to a minor extent, from the communist benches. In the benches of the ruling coalition, there was absolute silence.

TWO DIPLOMATS EXPELLED FROM SAO TOME AND PRINCIPE

LD122020 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1900 GMT 12 Nov 80

[Text] Two Portuguese diplomatic officials have been expelled from Sao Tome and Principe after both having been declared persona non grata, apparently as a result of representations and protests made by the Portuguese diplomatic mission following the arrest of three Portuguese nationals accused of involvement in an alleged conspiracy aimed at overthrowing the regime of President Manuel Pinto Da Costa. The authorities of the Democratic Republic of Sao Tome and Principle claim military firearms were found in the residence of one of the detained Portuguese nationals. One of them, however, has already been released, as the Sao Tome authorities could find no evidence against him. The other two are still detained pending further investigations.

A source close to the Foreign Ministry said these facts have been received with surprise, since it is an invariable trait of Portuguese policy never to interfere in the internal affairs of other countries (?in this particular case) in the affairs of Sao Tome and Principe. The note issued by the Sao Tome Government indeed mentions the climate of good relations and cooperation between the two states. Finally, it was also revealed today that the [Portuguese] Government will release an official statement on this regrettable affair very soon.

LABOR PARTY DECLINES BACKING OF ANY PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE

LD121632 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1500 GMT 12 Nov 80

[Text] The Labor Party said today that the support for presidential candidate Col Pires Veloso, recently voiced by three members of the party's National Council, was in their personal capacity and did not go against decisions reached by the party leadership. The party said in a statement that it had decided not to lend official party backing to any of the presidential candidates in the first round of the elections, and that it had advised party militants to decide, consciously, whether or not to support any of the candidates.

FRG, SWEDISH FOREIGN MINISTERS ADDRESS CSCE

Genscher Criticizes USSR, GDR

LD131338 Hamburg DPA in German 1245 GMT 13 Nov 80

[Excerpts] Madrid, 13 Nov (DPA)--At the meeting of the 35 states of the CSCE in Madrid today Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher openly criticized the Soviet Union for its invasion of Afghanistan and the GDR for its policy of isolation. The foreign minister also appealed to the signatory states of the Helsinki Final Act to continue the process of cooperation in Europe.

"The occupation of Afghanistan not only affects that country itself, but it also convulses the world. It affects the essence of cooperation so essential for the safeguarding of peace," Genscher said on the 3d day of the second CSCE followup conference in the Palace of Congresses in Madrid. Genscher stressed that detente cannot stand another similar blow. "This applies to the disregard of the sovereignty of every country both outside Europe and in Europe."

Genscher also spoke openly about the negative developments in the inter-German relationship. "It depresses us that there are still barriers along the border between the two German states and that they are being further improved," the foreign minister said in his address which in conference circles was described as outspoken and sober but also constructive. It was especially regrettable, Genscher continued, that a few weeks before the start of the Madrid conference the GDR Government had, by a drastic increase in the minimum exchange, affected the continuance of what until then had been achieved in humanitarian alleviations and improvements.

The foreign minister also advocated further cooperation with the GDR. "We appeal to the GDR to continue with us along this road. Both German states should have the ambition to achieve in all spheres the highest level of cooperation and the implementation of the Helsinki Final Act."

Although Genscher repeatedly expressed his concern about the "serious setbacks" in East-West relations since the last CSCE followup conference in Belgrade in 1977-78, he again advocated continued cooperation. "It is especially important now; the East-West dialogue must be continued. The Helsinki Final Act must, especially in difficult times, be the guideline for the actions of all participating states."

Genscher made a number of proposals for far-reaching measures in East-West cooperation. He emphasized especially that the Madrid CSCE conference should decide "a concrete mandate for a European disarmament conference." From the Madrid meeting he also expected "concrete decisions for easing human contacts and for improving the opportunities for information." Alleviations were especially necessary in procedures for foreign visits, visits to relatives, youth meetings, in the working conditions for journalists and in the supply of printed information and cultural exchanges.

Before his address to the CSCE conference, Genscher conferred with Spanish Prime Minister Adolfo Suarez. The two politicians agreed that the process of cooperation in Europe must be continued. They jointly emphasized the "important role" played by the United States in Europe's security.

Ullsten Proposes Disarmament Conference

LD132006 Stockholm Domestic Service in Swedish 1700 GMT 13 Nov 80

[Text] Today it was the turn of Foreign Minister Ola Ullsten to speak at the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe in Madrid, which, according to plans, should continue well into next year but which risks coming to an inglorious end already on Saturday when the introductory speeches are completed. There is still no solution to the conflict between the East and West about what the conference should really work on. Our reporter, (Jan-Olaf Pettersson), reports from Madrid on Ola Ullsten's speech:

Ola Ullsten's speech contained two main sections: First, the Swedish foreign minister dealt with questions of disarmament. He proposed that the Madrid meeting should agree on a two-stage general European disarmament conference. In the first stage the participants would primarily discuss what the conference jargon here calls CBM, or confidence-building measures.

For the present the rule is that all participants in the security conference must inform each other if they intend to conduct maneuvers involving forces greater than 25,000 men. Sweden is later expected to propose that this figure be lowered to 18,000, and that the participating countries keep each other informed about naval maneuvers.

The second stage of the disarmament conference would discuss (?direct) disarmament measures concerning conventional weapons. Future nuclear disarmament should be left, Ullsten said, to the nuclear powers, but a disarmament conference should present views and request information. In brief, the (?two sides) should have the opportunity to express their views. Ullsten recalled that Sweden had earlier offered to host a conference of this kind. Proposals on European disarmament discussions are also expected to come later from the Eastern states and France.

If Ullsten in this part of his speech partly expressed thoughts similar to those of the representatives of the Eastern states, it was quite the opposite with regard to the big controversial issue here: the observance of human rights. Ullsten said that countries which have signed the Helsinki accords are violating human rights and basic freedoms. To take up these questions in Madrid, Ullsten said, cannot be considered to imply interference in the affairs of other countries. In this connection Ullsten mentioned the name of Raoul Wallenberg together with the Russian, Andrey Sakharov, and the Czechoslovak, Vaclav Havel.

Ullsten said afterwards that [words indistinct] open for compromises on the agenda (?in which) the Eastern bloc wants to limit the debate on human rights. Ullsten thought there were limits to compromises, however. A much too [word indistinct] debate would make the conference meaningless.

SWEDEN, CYPRUS, AUSTRIA MAKE NEW CSCE PROPOSALS

LD132304 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2100 GMT 13 Nov 80

[Text] There has been a new development at the Madrid conference. At the group of working meetings being conducted parallel to the conference on security, three foreign ministers representing the neutral and nonaligned countries, namely, Austria, Cyprus and Sweden, have taken part. They put forward a new document based on a modification of the Oeska document. It contains four points. In the first place, the past and the future are linked together, that is the study of the fulfillment of the Helsinki accords and the new proposals, but pointing out that there is a difference between the two parts; in the second place, the inclusion of the subject of security in the Mediterranean, something which is subscribed to by the by-now-famous Maltese delegate, Evarist Saliba.

The 6th week. the famous 6th week, will be dedicated to the examination of the proposals, and finally to the fixing of the place and date of the third conference, since Helsinki provided no more than an agreement between the countries. Everyone wants continuity, but for the moment it is not very apparent. The representatives of the Eastern countries have asked for time to study this new proposal, and tomorrow morning they will meet to give their views.

DANISH PRIME MINISTER, OLOF PALME ARRIVE IN MADRID

[Hector Arenas dispatch from Barajas Airport]

[Text] Madrid's Barajas International Airport is the scene of intense activity with the arrival of important figures to attend either the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe or the meeting of the Socialist International. Among them was Danish Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen, who said that his government is concerned about the problem which has arisen with Spain in the last few hours as a result of the treatment given by the Danish media to the Spanish terrorist organization ETA in a special program. As is known the Madrid government has temporarily withdrawn its ambassador in Copenhagen, Abaroa, following the radio program which, according to diplomatic sources, practically constituted praise of ETA, and which was described by the Madrid government as counter to friendly Spanish-Danish relations. Prime Minister Jorgensen, who tried to avoid commenting on the subject, told us the following at Barajas Airport:

[Begin recording in Danish fading into Spanish translation] The Danish prime minister said that his government was concerned over the consequences of this issue. He added that the subject would be discussed in Madrid today between Foreign Minister Olesen and Spanish Foreign Minister Perez Llorca. Then, by way of an apology, the Danish prime minister asked us to understand that it is not possible, it is extremely difficult to control the information media. He said that he was concerned over the situation. [end recording]

Meanwhile, former Swedish Social Democratic Prime Minister Olof Palme also arrived on the same plane from Scandinavia. He confirmed that he has accepted a petition from the United Nations to mediate and attempt to put an end to the war between Iran and Iraq. He described it as a very deep conflict and full of difficulties. These were his words:

[Begin recording in English fading into Spanish translation] Palme said that he does not wish to use the word mediation for the task entrusted to him by the United Nations. I am going to investigate the possibility of peace between Iran and Iraq, he added. The difficulties are very great he said [words indistinct], and I think that one should not expect a rapid solution. I think that both parties have welcomed the United Nations and I personally have already accepted the responsibility. Finally Olof Palme said that in the next few hours he will leave Madrid for New York to receive instructions from the UN secretary general for his mission. [end recording]

O AGON SCORES DENKTAS FOR POPULATION EXCHANGE STATEMENT

NC140700 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 14 Nov 80 p 2

[From "Our Positions" column: "Absence of Sincerity"]

[Text] The statement made the day before yesterday by Turkish Cypriot leader Denktas about the so-called population exchange agreement can only be described as an absence of sincerity and of a real desire for a solution. We will repeat that there is no agreement for population exchange. Mr Denktas has referred to it simply to justify the faits accomplis. What does exist is an agreement on the living conditions for the enclaved people whom--by violating precisely this agreemnt--Denktas has driven out of their houses and property.

That agreement does not forestall solution of the Cyprus problem. And Mr Denktas' reference to it implies that he does not want a solution that will differ from the faits accomplis of the invasion.

But the Turkish Cypriot leader's statement undermines the talks which have reached a crucial stage. This becomes more evident by his statement that what our side allegedly wants is to take back Famagusta and not to resolve the Cyprus problem. The Famagusta issue is being discussed as a separate issue, and therefore its linking with the final solution would not help the talks.

Moreover, what we are concerned about is not solely Famagusta, because the Famagusta issue is not the entire Cyprus problem. It is only an aspect of the problem that must be resolved on a priority basis.

KLIRIDHIS OUTLINES PARTY'S POSITIONS AT LIMASSOL RALLY

NC132057 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 2000 GMT 13 Nov 80

[Text] Addressing a district rally of his party in Limassol this evening, Democratic Rally [DR] Chairman Kliridhis said, among other things, that recent developments in the Middle East have created a new possibility in promoting the Cyprus problem toward a just and viable solution for which, he noted, a serious, strong and capable government is necessary. Kliridhis spoke of the weakness and inability of the ruling circle and asked for their resignation. He also referred to dangers entailed, as he put it, in the split of the political sphere beyond the leftwing. He further criticized the handling of the UN secretary general's latest proposal which resulted in wrecking an initiative from which substantive progress could be made.

Kliridhis also said his party does not pursue a class struggle and he expressed his opposition to church involvement in political life.

Referring to the DP's preelection social and economic program, Kliridhis said his party. among other things, promises a revision of the taxation system, free education and medical treatment, a strong fund for scholarships, relief of the refugees until a final solution is obtained, and an increase in exports. His party also stands for the cleansing and strengthening of the cooperative movement.

More on Kliridhis' Views

NC140800 Nicosia CYPRUS MAIL in English 14 Nov 80 pp 1,3

[Text] Mr Glavkos Kliridhis, addressing an estimated 10,000 people at a gathering in Limassol last night, said his Rally Party offered the only hope of salvation. Once again he called on the House members to resign and for the immediate holding of both paraliamentary and presidential elections.

"The longer they defer elections, the heavier shall be the crush under the wrath of the people", Mr Kliridhis said. He violently attacked the Democratic Party of President Kiprianou, the New Democratic Movement (NDP) of House President Mikhailidhis and the new Centre Union Party spearheaded by former negotiator Tasos Papadhopoulos and said that they all abused the word "centre" in order to mislead the people.

He spoke of only three parties "beyond the left" and referred to the PAME [Pan-Cyprian Revitalization Front] party of former Education Minister Dr Sofianos only once when he said that if the users of the term "centre" meant support of a policy of "undermining of Greek education" they had better join the PAME party.

Mr Kliridhis empatically dismissed charges of "extreme right" and "fascism" and said the campaign was used by AKEL to keep the Rally out of the House. The Rally Party represents the "progressive" political element in the country, Mr Kliridhis said, and recalled that his party had campaigned against "police files" by the intelligence services, against squandering and against heavy taxation.

The party, he said, would publish its social and economic manifesto but he could already disclose that the Rally would seek revision of the taxation system, including tax on property, with a view to ease the tax burden of the lower classes and provide incentives for production investments and productive work. It would seek improvement of the wage-related social insurance scheme to ease the burdens of farmers and craftsmen, and it would introduce free education and national health service scheme and a scholarships fund.

His party would also seek better treatment of the refugee problems because, he said, "the hungry and the satiated cannot have the same endurance". The Rally Party would also make for a more healthy cooperative movement, Mr Kliridhis said, and recalled that it was the Rally which was the first to suggest the appointment of an independent committee of inquiry.

Mr Kliridhis also called upon the church leadership to confine itself to the clerical and spiritual work, for charity and the improvement of the position of the clergy. The country must be governed by those elected to govern it, not by forces behind the scenes, Mr Kliridhis said.

The Rally leader said the AKEL party, which was responsible for the "plot" of keeping the Rally out of the House, could not absolve itself of responsibilities for the past mistakes of the government with the withdrawal of support from President Kiprianou. About AKEL charges against him as "fascist", Mr Kliridhis said AKEL had used the same name for Makarios before they decided to support him and they boycotted the national struggle in the 50's.

"Are they fascists who fought against Fascism and Nazism in the Second World War and oppose totalitarian regimes and one-party rule", Mr Kliridhis asked in a veiled reference to his joining the ranks in the Second World War." Or, are real fascists those who seek abolition of freedom of the individuals, freedom of thought and expression and enforcement of one-party rule", he added.

In his attack on the government he blamed it for mishandling of various issues including the last initiative of the UN secretary-general which, he said, offered the possibility of leading to substantial progress. Instead, it managed to come into public conflict with the secretary-general under whose auspices the talks are being conducted.

Mr Kliridhis thought that the present international developments offered possibilities of furtherance of the Cyprus problem towards a fair and viable solution, with possible support from East and West but Cyprus needed a strong government and--he added--only the Rally could offer such a strong and able government. The Rally leader said he was inviting the support of "all those who belong to the space beyond the left" and even those who belong to the left "but see the mistakes of their leadership".

LISSARIDHIS SEEKS HOUSE ROLE IN INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS

NC140905 Nicosia TA NEA in Greek 14 Nov 80 pp 1, 3

[Excerpts] Negating the right of a group of refugees to return [to their homes] would be the forerunner to negating the right of all refugees to return. This statement was made by EDEK Chairman Vasos Lissaridhis, who added that now is the time for all sides to clearly adopt a stand toward this question.

Dr Lissaridhis made this statement during the House of Representatives meeting yesterday when he spoke on the question of "securing the refugees' inalienable rights and the role of the House of Representatives." This question was raised in the House by Dr Lissaridhis himself and he pointed out the need for the House to clearly adopt a stand toward the right of all the refugees to return to their homes.

Dr Lissaridhis stressed that the House must seek to be informed whether commitments have been undertaken or whether it is intended to undertake any commitments that would violate the refugees' right to return to their homes. He added: It is the duty of the House to ask to be briefed and to adopt a stand on this question.

What we seek to be informed of as a House, the EDEK chairman explained, are not the details of the talks but the principles on the basis of which we have undertaken commitments. He asked: What does the House know about the handling of our problem? Or could it be that the House which represents the people bears no responsibility for the course of our national issue?

PAPANDREOU DISCUSSES UPCOMING ELECTIONS IN PRESS CONFERENCE

[Excerpts] After the conference of the PASOK parliamentary group yesterday at noon, Andreas Papandreou said during a press conference that he agreed with the forecast (which TO VIMA reported only yesterday morning) that elections will be held in early March. Actually A. Papandreou said that he considered 8 March as a possible date because a general census will be taken after 15 March.

In his talk with political reporters, among other things, the leader of the official opposition stressed: The government is "making spasmodic promises for payments that to a great extent are deceptive" and its policy is replete with contradictions--the prime minister speaks of an economic crisis, the next day a 5-day work week is announced together with cost of living increases in salaries and wages; then the 5-day work week remains a 6-day work week and the cost of living adjustment is only words. By taking over the country's government, PASOK will inherit the economic chaos which New Democracy has created and "we have already set up a special group of economists headed by Mr Lazaris which will study in depth the economic policy of the PASOK government for the first 100 days." PASOK will win a sweeping victory in the next elections with a huge majority and "with an advantage of at least 10 percentage points," Papandreou stressed. He said that the prediction of certain people that the percentage gap between the two parties will be small is erroneous.

Papandreou also spoke about his party's position on participation in the European Parliament. He explained that he supports the viewpoint that the Eurodeputies should not be also members of the Greek Parliament because they will not be able to discharge their European duties.

Later yesterday evening, government spokesman Athanasios Tsaldharis repeated the well-known phrase--that elections will be held in the year after the 4-year term of office ends. This statement by the government representative caused no reactions among the parties--opposition circles only said that everybody knows the value of government denials.

VOTCP CONDEMNS JUNTA FOR CLOSING DOWN CUMHURIYET

TA131058 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 13 Nov 80

[Station commentary]

[Text] By closing down the daily CUMHURIYET, the generals of the junta have revealed their true identity. The generals are citing an obvious lie, that the newspaper defamed Ataturk, as the reason for banning CUMHURIYET. Everyone is aware of the Kemalist policy of CUMHURIYET. The years since the establishment of the newspaper constitute the biggest witness of this policy. So, why did the generals of the junta close CUMHURIYET?

First, CUMHURIYET exposed with documents the fascist NAP--the chief source of terrorism. The paper revealed the names of arms smugglers and disclosed their ties with international arms smugglers.

Second, the daily waged a campaign against the reactionaries, who are nurturing the fascist movement. Meanwhile, it also exposed the ties of TERCUMAN's bosses with fascist terrorism and arms and heroin smugglers.

Third, CUMHURIYET waged a struggle for Ataturkism and the real fundamental principles of Kemalism. It opposed the arguments over these principles. It stressed once more that the real aspect of Ataturkism is the struggle against imperialism. Especially on this point, it penetrated the artificial mask of Ataturkism worn by the junta.

Fourth, CUMHURIYET opposed the imperialist capitalists and the harsh conditions of dependence imposed by the IMF.

Fifth, it defended the interests of the masses, and particularly of the middle classes, against the collaborationist and monopolistic capitalists. It criticized the junta for its economic policy.

Sixth, the newspaper defended Ataturk's peace in the world principle while opposing the imperialists' aggressive and warmongering attempts which increased tension and displayed the internal reactionaries' motive to act as the gendarme of imperialism in the region. It was in favor of developing our relations with our neighbors and the Soviet Union.

These are the main reasons the junta shed its false mask of Ataturkism and closed CUMHURIYET. The fact that the generals banned CUMHURIYET has shown that they cannot even tolerate the most moderate opposition. This also shows that the junta's promises to return to democracy in a short time are sly maneuvers. It is extremely erroneous to support the junta and to try to appease it on the basis of these promises. The tactic of appeasing the junta makes it even more aggressive. Supporting the junta is tantamount to consenting to fascism and paving the way to fascism.

Democracy can be attained only through the unity of all democratic forces, progressives and patriots against the generals in the junta. The generals' demagogy is aimed at enhancing the military dictatorship. This has been proved once more by the banning of CUMHURIYET. The generals' goalsare a silent press, puppet parties and a so-called constitution tailored to the requirements of a despotic system.

The Turkish Communist Party [TCP] calls on all democratic forces to unite against the generals of the junta for the freedom of our people and th independence of our country. Genuine Kemalists, religious patriots and patriotic officers in the army: Unite with Communists and with all progressive and patriotic people against the junta and for the sake of democracy.

VOTCP SEES ULTERIOR MOTIVES IN GENERAL JONES' VISIT

TA131046 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 13 Nov 80

[Station commentary: "Let Us Not Allow Our Country To Become the Tool of U.S. Imperialist Aggression"]

[Text] The U.S. chief of staff has held talks with the generals of the junta in Ankara. What did the U.S. general discuss with the junta? The silenced press did not reflect the real content of these talks. However, the masters of the lackeys are openly recounting what the lackeys have been trying to suppress through the use of bayonets and through the elimination of the freedom of the press.

The recent edition of the U.S. magazine NEWSWEEK is an example of this. NEWSWEEK writes the following: U.S. military experts view Turkey as a country with a perfect location for storing the weapons and equipment of the U.S. Rapid Deployment Force. The U.S. chief of staff has therefore arrived in Ankara for this purpose. As a matter of fact, the writers of the reactionary forces, which are dependent on the junta's bayonets, have been noting that since 12 September a suitable atmosphere has been created in Turkey for acting as the gendarme of U.S. imperialism in the Middle East. All reactionary writers--ranging from Metin Toker to the writers of TERCUMAN--are demanding total servitude by advocating compliance with all the wishes of U.S. imperialism. The generals of the junta are implementing this. The intensification of internal pressures and terrorism by the junta, the mass arrests and tortures, the killing of people on the street, the elimination of the freedom of the press and the act of intimidation in Turkish Kordestan all constitute actions by the junta to assume the role of gendarme for U.S. imperialism in the Middle East. The generals of the junta want to oppress our people and the progressive and patriotic forces and thus transform our country into a tool for U.S. imperialist aggression. The spokesman of U.S. imperialism state this very clearly in NEWSWEEK.

The article in NEWSWEEK shows once more that the generals of the junta are U.S. puppets and exposes the generals' motive in oppressing our people with the threat of bayonets. Second, as initially stated by the TCP, the seizure of the administration by the junta has further increased the threat posed to peace and security in the region.

The so-called bilateral slavery agreements with the U.S. imperialists have imposed this military dictatorship on our country and our people. Through this military dictatorship, the U.S. imperialists are now implementing each and every provision in these slavery agreements and are preparing to mass troops in our country and establish new bases. They are transforming our country into a tool for military aggression and an arms arsenal. These are the real motives behind Jones' visit to Turkey. The junta has allowed the U.S. generals to trample upon our national independence. The generals of the junta are merely loyal lackeys of the United States who are willing to exploit Ataturkism for this betrayal.

The threat is enormous. The war in the Middle East is continuing. The United States is preparing to place Turkey at the mouth of the cannon in a bid to fully benefit from this war, which it provoked. The policy of confrontation pursued by the United States in the international arena and its nuclear war threats further intensify the dark clouds over our country. The generals of the junta, who are serving U.S. imperialism, are transforming the country into a dungeon.

The unity of all progressive and patriotic forces constitutes the only way to thwart the imperialists' bloody plots and designs and their attempts to drive our country into fire. Unity against the generals of the junta is tantamount to saving and protecting our country from destruction and war. The TCP calls on patriots to fulfill this national duty and topple the generals, and it calls on the people to unite.

KREISKY CITED ON INTER-GERMAN RELATIONS

LD15.936 Hamburg DPA in German 1713 GMT 15 Nov 80

[Text] Hamburg, 15 Nov (DPA)--Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky regards the interrupted dialogue between the Federal Republic and the GDR as only a "temporary coolness" following the cancellation of Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's visit to the GDR and the drastic increase in the minimum exchange requirement for Western visitors to the GDR.

In an interview in Madrid with DER SPIEGEL concerning GDR state and party head Erich Honecker's visit to Vienna, which is to be published on Monday, Kreisky said that given the basic stand of the two German states, "friction must constantly arise, which is then again overcome for a while through great efforts." The "reaction of the West German media to the money business" was, Kreisky said, "an overreaction." Also, according to Honecker, no West German politician had, in his statements during the election campaign, "taken into consideration in the slightest what sort of reactions and resentment they cause among us."

According to Kreisky, Honecker is convinced that "the Germans on the other side" in the Federal Republic had caused the "frost." He said he was sure that Honecker had "a certain amount of pent-up irritation." He said he did not want "to assert that everything that Herr Honecker says is very convincing, but there is a certain logic to it." Kreisky said in the interview that he did not believe that in the near future the GDR would "intimate that it was prepared to unbend."

With respect to Moscow's influence on the policy of its satellite states, Kreisky, pointing to his long political experience, said "the Kremlin leaves its allies a relatively free hand here. It trusts its own ability to assess situations.... This also applies to the GDR's relations with the Federal Republic."

Kreisky said that the Soviet Union was "not interested in ruining detente in its European form.... The Soviets knew only too well that inter-German relations are essential to the policy of detente."

EAST PROPOSES 'FREEZE' AT MBFR TALKS

AU141740 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 14 Nov 80 p 2

[Text] At Thursday's meeting of the Vienna East-West conference on a reduction of forces in central Europe, the Warsaw Pact states proposed to collectively "freeze" the national armed forces for a 3-year interim phase.

As Soviet chief delegate Nikolay Tarasov explained yesterday at the 253d plenary session of the conference on behalf of the participating Eastern states, an agreement to this effect should be concluded parallel to an agreement about phase one of the troop reduction that would affect only the Soviet and American armed forces in central Europe. Until the conclusion of an agreement on phase two, in which the other national contingents should also effect reductions, the overall troop strength on both sides should not be increased.

The East regards this new formulation of its "freeze" proposals as a concession to the West because what is now required is no longer separate commitments by the individual states not to increase their troop strength, but only a collective commitment which would ensure for both pacts a certain elbow room. A Western press spokesman welcomed the East's readiness to submit new considerations regarding "individual specific aspects" of the Vienna conference problems. Moreover, he repeated NATO's preparedness in principle to accept a "freeze" agreement.

POPE JOHN PAUL II ARRIVES IN COLOGNE

LD150808 Hamburg DPA in German 0758 GMT 15 Nov 80

[Text] Cologne, 15 Nov (DPA)--For the first time in 198 years a pope has stepped on German soil. Pope John Paul II landed at Cologne-Bonn Airport this morning at 0851, where he was welcomed by Federal President Karl Carstens and Cardinal Joseph Hoeffner, chairman of the German Bishops Conference. His special aircraft arrived 9 minutes earlier than expected. The head of the Catholic Church will remain in the Federal Republic for 5 days. Despite pouring rain several hundred people had gathered at the airport. Aircraft of the German Luftwaffe had escorted the pope's aircraft once it had entered German airspace.

Received by Carstens

LD152320 Hamburg DPA in German 1755 GMT 15 Nov 80

[Text] Bonn, 15 Nov (DPA)--Federal President Karl Carstens has praised John Paul II as a pope "who, with the great moral authority of his office, works indefatigably for the preservation of peace and for more humanity." At a reception given by the federal president for the head of the Catholic Church at Augustusburg Castle near Bruehl this evening, Carstens stressed that John Paul II thus represented values upon which the Basic Law of the Federal Republic was also based.

In his speech, the federal president recalled that this was the first papal visit to Germany for almost 200 years. This underlined the unique significance of the event. Carsters noted that Pope John Paul was visiting a divided country whose people were suffering from the division. It was the aim of German policy to work for a state of peace in Europe in which the German people achieved unity again in free self-determination. Addressing the guest, Carstens said: "We therefore thank you particularly for the words which you addressed to the whole German nation."

Looking back on recent history, the federal president spoke of the "moving warning" which the pope had uttered at Auschwitz. All the sorrow and misfortune which the world, and Europe in particular, had suffered 40 years ago also had had another result: "The readiness for reconciliation, for understanding, for joining together in peaceful cooperation was awakened to an extent such as we have never before experienced in history."

Carstens said that reconciliation was in progress between the German and Polish peoples. In the same way, the reduction of tension with other East European states was also being sought. This applied also, he said, to relations with the GDR, despite continuing difficulties. He said that here he did not conceal the fact that the latest developments gave cause for concern. Carstens also stressed that after 1945 the Catholic and evangelical Christians in Germany had striven for establishment of a fraternal relationship and to overcome centuries-old tensions.

Pope John Paul II expressed thanks for the friendly welcome and praised the achievements of the German people. Through their important spiritual-religious, cultural and scientific contributions "the German people deserved special recognition in the history of the church and in the intellectual history of Europe," he said. In its past there was, of course, as in the life of every nation, light and shade, examples of the highest human and Christian greatness, but also depths, trials and events of great tragedy, but Germany had always known how to raise itself anew and to strengthen itself again, even from collapses and humiliations "such as those of the last world war, for example."

The pope paid tribute to the development of the Federal Republic. Political stability, scientific-technological progress and the proverbial industry of its people had earned for it over the past decades prosperity and social peace within its frontiers and high esteem and influence in the great international community of peoples.

The painful division still remained, "which, I hope, may also finally find its proper peaceful solution in a united Europe."

Pope John Paul noted, in connection with the considerable contribution which the Federal Republic was making to worldwide international understanding as well, "with special pleasure" the growing readiness for understanding between the people of the Federal Republic and the Polish people. It was well known that the bishops and Catholics in the two countries had played no small part in this.

John Paul, who has visited Latin America and Africa and seen the plight of these countries, stressed the urgency of greater help for the Third World. Far greater international efforts and more incisive measures were needed, he said, in order to meet hunger and distress in the underprivileged countries more effectively and with a greater chance of success.

The Pope also spoke of the dangers and shortcomings to which man was exposed in modern society. True progress, he said, must serve the whole man. The church held that man was made in the image of God and that his dignity was inviolable. Rooted in that dignity were his inalienable basic rights as well as the basic values underlying a society worthy of man. The church could not be silent when such supreme values protected by law, as life, were threatened, "in whatever form and at whatever stage."

The pope called on federal citizens, Catholics in particular, to remember the Christian foundations of their national history and the Christian mould of their state's constitution. A radical moral regeneration of society could effectively come only from within. After the abject failure of the seeming promise of the great ideologies of recent centuries, which had driven mankind to the edge of the abyss, the church with all the greater insistence was encouraging nations and all who bore responsibility for them to reflect anew on man, his true dignity and inalienable basic rights, "on man in Christ."

SCHMIDT INTERVIEWED ON U.S. VISIT, NATO OBLIGATION

LD161334 Hamburg DPA in German 1207 GMT 16 Nov 80

[Text] Bonn, 16 Nov (DPA)--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, before his 4-day trip to the United States starting on Tuesday, has not asked American President-elect Ronald Reagan for a meeting. In an interview with ZDF Schmidt said on Sunday evening: "I do not want to cause him any difficulties, after all he is not yet in office." However, he will be meeting a number of the future president's advisers whom he has known well for a number of years. "Some of them are even my friends."

Schmidt confirmed that he will be meeting during his stay in Washington with outgoing U.S. President Jimmy Carter and government representatives. The timing of his trip is "very good." He chose it himself in the middle of the year. "I wanted in any case to pay another visit to the United States shortly after the elections, regardless of who won the election."

The chancellor affirmed the need for close cooperation between the European states and America; he is very glad that Reagan had emphasized this idea. Reagan can thus be expected to cooperate more closely with the European governments. In this cooperation America will have the leading role. Schmidt emphasized that Reagan does not intend to renegotiate all parts of the SALT II treaty. According to what he, Schmidt, has heard, the future president is firmly resolved to promote the SALT process as a single unit. This is important.

Schmidt underlined in the interview that the Federal Republic, within the framework of what is possible, will be meeting its obligations towards the European Community and the Atlantic alliance. Some partners, however, overestimate the power and financial capability of the Germans. The Federal Republic is not a goose which can lay golden eggs.

As regards the increase in the defense budget that is supposed to be three percent for each of the NATO countries, Schmidt said that Bonn would be achieving 2.8 percent by the end of this year. The FRG's average has been 2.7 percent per annum during the past 10 years. The defense budget, however, is less important for him. What is important is "to have soldiers who, in case of need, have the will to defend."

Thus he is concerned then not about the question of money "but about the question of whether all countries actually have enough soldiers..." In this connection Schmidt said that there is no draft in the United States. At the same time he expressed his concern that it could not be denied that in the Federal Republic "among a small section of the young generation" there exists a negative attitude toward the need for defense.

BONN 'ASSURANCES' GIVEN ON CONTRIBUTION TO NATO

LD131750 Hamburg DPA in German 1606 GMT 13 Nov 80

[Text] Bonn, 13 Nov (DPA)--The Federal Republic's defense expenditure will almost reach the target of a 3 percent rise in real terms laid down by NATO and will continue to increase in real terms in 1981. This assurance was given by diplomatic circles in Bonn today. According to these figures the German defense contribution is such that the Western alliance's deterrent strength can remain credible and the political cohesion of the alliance strengthened. The Federal Republic can point to an above average increase in its defense contribution within NATO.

Five days before Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher are due to leave for the United States it was pointed out in Bonn, with reference to American criticism of a reduction in the German defense contribution, that this problem should be dealt with calmly, objectively and in a businesslike way without speculation and restriction to percentages. The Bonn defense contribution, the whole East-West situation and the chances for a continuation of the policy of detente, as well as Afghanistan, the situation in the Near East and in Africa and other international topics are to be discussed by the chancellor and the foreign minister in Washington. It is also important that a more profound agreement between the new Reagan administration and the West European allies come into being as soon as possible.

It was also pointed out by diplomatic quarters in connection with Bonn's defense contribution that many of the Federal Republic's contributions are not taken into account in a normal calculation of figures. These include, for example, the surrender of real estate in the Federal Republic for allied troops, the making available of terrain for maneuver, the deployment of NATO weapons and military aid for Turkey, Greece and Portugal.

GENSCHER INTERVIEWED ON MADRID CSCE ISSUES

DW141118 Baden-Baden Suedwestfunk Network in German 1210 GMT 13 Nov 80

[Correspondent Wagner interview with Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher in Madrid--live or recorded]

[Text] [Question] The second CSCE followup conference has begun with disappointments; what is the detente process still worth after Madrid anyway?

[Answer] We will be able to judge that only after the conclusion of the conference. What we need now is for all participants to be aware that at this conference and by this conference they bear an extraordinary responsibility for the continuation of the multilateral detente process. This also is the reason why we, as the Federal Republic of Germany, advocate so urgently the holding of this conference and, hopefully, its successful and satisfactory course.

[Question] Did the Federal Republic Government have any cause to revise its original attitude toward the CSCE, to change it decisively perhaps?

[Answer] It is our view that this CSCE process must prove its worth expecially in difficult times, that it is now important in politics to proceed from the promises made and the commitments undertaken under the Final Act, and we will remind all the participants here of these commitments. This conference will be a test of the seriousness of the will of the participants, of the signatory states, for contributing to cooperation and security in Europe.

[Question] Can you muster understanding for the Soviet Union's current approach to preparations for the Madrid CSCE?

[Answer] We believe that what I have just said about examining the seriousness of the will to contribute to cooperation and security in Europe applies particularly to this approach. Those who want to narrow down the possibilities of this conference must know that in doing this they would be handicapping more than just a conference.

[Question] How can the main Madrid conference continue if the list of spokesmen will be possibly already empty this weekend?

[Answer] We will not relieve anybody of his commitment to contribute to the continuation of this process initiated by the final document of Helsinki.

[Question] In this morning's talks with the Spanish prime minister you stressed over and over again the significance of the United States with regard to security and cooperation in Europe. Why?

[Answer] It is known that, from the point of view of the Warsaw Pact states, this conference originally was planned to be a conference without the United States and Canada. It was particularly the Federal Republic of Germany which considered it most important that the United States and Canada belong to the signatory states of the final document. This is the reason why I supported in my speech given here in the plenum the significance of the United States with regard to security and cooperation in Europe. Without the United States there will be no balance and no security in Europe.

Press Comment on Proceedings

DW141220 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0605 GMT 14 Nov 80

[Press review]

[Excerpt] Bonn's GENERAL-ANZEIGER draws attention to the following aspect: President-elect Reagan hinted during the election campaign that he considers the Madrid conference superfluous. What he proposes to do is arm so as to negotiate with the Soviets some day on a level of reclaimed strength and even of a military preponderance. The West Europeans are growing fidgety. Viewed from this angle Genscher's speech yesterday was the signal to Washington that the Federal Government does not wish to be deprived of the CSCE instrument. If for geographical reasons alone the Federal Republic, being in the immediate neighborhood of the East bloc, is interested in a revitalization of what is left of detente.

The KONSTANZ SUEDKURIER comes out with a negative assessment of the meeting: So far the monster conference of Madrid has hardly produced more than mere speeches to a number of deaf listeners.

What the Soviet Union simply does not want to hear has been conveyed to it now in all clairty again: The aggression against Afghanistan has endangered a detente policy which Moscow never interpreted to mean a mitigation of tensions. This CSCE meeting, is going around in circles. The foreign minister who came from Bonn, too, hardly set any new trend. Though he castigated the rape of Afghanistan by the USSR and its armed forces--albeit more mildly than others--Genscher merely repeated the wax-soft formula of the strange initial reaction at the beginning of the year.

The BREMEN WESER-KURIER, in contrast, stresses this point: What makes Genscher's speech particularly good is the fact that in his appeals he did not stop at criticism but presented concrete and constructive proposals on the deepening of detente. Now it is primarily up to the GDR and the Soviet Union not to reject the hand extended by Europe in general and the Federal Republic in particular. Genscher's demand for a European disarmament conference and for the harbinger role of the two German states in the field of peacemaking policies may contain starting points for the joint softening of the fronts which threaten to grow more and more rigid as a result of Afghanistan and the tactics of delimitation.

BONN ATTEMPTING TO CLARIFY GDR INTENTIONS

LD141216 Hamburg DPA in German 1149 GMT 14 Nov 80

[Excerpt] Bonn, 14 Nov (DPA)--According to Government spokesman Boelling the Federal Government still has no clear picture of the intention attributed to the GDR to restrict still further inter-German contacts over a wide range of activities. Boelling told a press conference in Bonn today that reports to this effect are naturally being taken seriously. The government will instruct its permanent representative in East Berlin, State Secretary Gaus, to "ask questions" of the GDE authorities concerned.

NEW GDR RESTRICTIONS DESCRIBED

DW141121 Munich SULDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 14 Nov 80 p 4

[Commentary signed R.: "The Net Is Tightened"]

[Text] The SED functionaries cannot be denied a certain imagination when it comes to refining the methods of delimitation. With different justifications and mostly without warning exit bans have been imposed lately, particularly in the cultural field. Affected by this to begin with is not just songwriter Barbara Thalheim but also a Johannes Kepler reading in Tuebingen, a meeting in the Mainz "theater in Unterhaus," and the church concert of Dresden artists in West Berlin which had already been definitely contracted. Is this intended to gradually strangle inter-German cultural exchanges? The Austrian eclat over the agreed Burgtheater guest performance fits into the same delimitation pattern even if the party involved in that case is not East Berlin but Moscow. The Russia trip had to be cancelled at the last minute because the visa grant to Pavel Landovsky, a Czechoslovak member of the ensemble, was based "on an error." If we track down the reasons for this course which violates the spirit and letter of Helsinki charter, we time and again come across the fear of contacts nourished by the "conditions" prevalent in the East bloc.

But a new variant of East Berlin's strategy is taking shape: The economy and sports are to be included in the campaign in the future as well--the instruction obviously being that other Western countries be treated somewhat better than the treaty partner Federal Republic. This is intended to bring pressure to bear on the Federal Republic to make concessions on the citizenship issue. They are ordering the offensive to divert attention from their own dilemma. Who can still believe the vague hints that there will be more contacts afterwards? It would be easy to talk about German citizenship if a border existed between the Federal Republic and the GDR which was as open as is the one between the Federal Republic and its neighbor Austria. East Berlin will not reap any success with isolation and delimitation.

PROSPECTS FOR CLOSER U.S.-FRENCH COOPERATION FORESEEN

LD171035 Paris LE FIGARO in French 12 Nov 80 pp 1, 4

[Jacques Jacquet-Francillon article: "Unworthy Parents, Delinquent Children"]

[Text] "The Europeans are delinquent children. It is not their fault. Nothing is ever the children's fault. It is always the fault of the parents. The Europeans behave badly because their unworthy parents have for too long forgone exercising their responsibilities as tutors.... The time has come to restore order in the home.... And again this is the parents' business!"

Obviously, these remarks have not officially been attributed to Ronald Reagan himself, but they can be found as a leitmotiv among remarks made by the principal members of his "brain trust."

The Atlantic alliance is the "home," and the United States represents the "parents."

France withdrew in 1966 from the alliance's military organization, NATO. It has remained a member of the Atlantic alliance and has never shirked any of the obligations stemming from the terms of the treaty which created it.

It would be a mistake on our part to merely look beyond our borders to ascertain to what extent the behavior of our European neighbors and partners will change as a result of the new image which America adopted on 4 November.

What is being said openly and frankly in the entourage of the "president-elect," who is to become the 40th U.S. president in 70 days' time, concerns us directly in the same way as it does the other members of the alliance and maybe more.

The America of Ronald Reagan, who did not conceal this during his election campaign, intends to demand from all its allies an increased effort with respect to their contribution toward joint defense. This will undoubtedly create a serious problem for Chancellor Helmut Schimdt.

Reagan's America, however, will demand even more than this. It will expect from its "friends" and "proteges" a much more definite alignment on its own diplomatic options.

The words "joint strategy" have continually appeared in speeches made by people who are believed to inspire Jimmy Carter's successor's future foreign policy and this involves French diplomacy, at least as it has been determined since the invasion of Afghanistan by the Soviet Union.

Let us have no illusion about it--whenever Ronald Reagan talks about "establishing closer links" between the United States and its European allies and whenever he mentions the need to "reactivate the Atlantic alliance," he is thinking about a return to the sources, to the very origins of the alliance, an "association" destined to "face up to a threat against common interests," an association between a "dominant power with local responsibilities" and "states with regional responsibilities."

Let us remember that these statements are very similar to remarks made openly by Henry Kissinger--who has resurfaced in the shadow of the 4 November victor, when he was Richard Nixon's secretary of state just before the Watergate cataclysm forced him to moderate his language.

"It is a question of knowing what the Europeans want," some of the men closest to the future president readily and repeatedly state. "When the United States is weak they reproach us for failing to exercise our responsibilities as a superpower. And when we are strong--and we certainly intend to become strong again--they denounce our 'leadership' as incompatible with their sovereignty and independence and readily talk about dual American and Soviet hegemonism."

Does this mean that relations between Paris and Washington are inexorably condemned to go through yet another patch of very choppy water in the months to come? Not necessarily, and there are two reasons why they should not have to, first of all being the fact that many of the misunderstandings and causes of irritation which have been poisoning the atmosphere of French-U.S. relations for the past year were a result of the weakness of the American position and, above all, of the continuous indecisiveness which marked the Carter administration's attitude toward major international problems.

It was perfectly legitimate to reproach Valery Giscard d'Estaing--we have repeatedly and plainly expressed our views on this subject--for his decision to meet Leonid Brezhnev in Warsaw at the time when the Red Army was using napalm against Afghan villages. But it was also true that when these criticisms were expressed in Washington, Paris could easily answer back: What solution do you propose if dialogue is to be ruled out? This question remained unanswered.

Ronald Reagan, however, has promised to always let his allies clearly know what he wants and what he intends to do. If he keeps his word the rules of the game will be completely changed. The word "partnership," which you now can again continually hear mentioned on the other side of the Atlantic, would then regain the meaning which it has lost a long time ago.

And, second, there have been some other signs which make us believe that the nature of dialogue between the Elysee and the White House will probably change. The cordiality of the content of the congratulatory message sent by Valery Giscard d'Estaing to Ronald Reagan has been widely reported in the American press. There is more, however, to it than that. On the very eve of the "election day" a member of the French Government, Jean Pierre Soisson, made some statements in public which attracted attention when he addressed some prominent representatives of the Republican and Democratic parties in Washington.

France, he stated, hopes that it will be possible to rapidly establish closer cooperation--which would take the form of a joint study of major problems--between our country and the United States by means of both usual diplomatic channels and frequent contacts between French members of Parliament and American congressmen.

It is a matter of urgency, he added, that we prepare for a joint study of ways to deal with "any danger which could result from the coming to the fore of a new generation which will soon occur in Moscow at the highest level of Soviet leadership."

It is conceivable that such statements could have been made by a French minister in a foreign capital without the president's consent. Obviously, we have the best possible reasons to believe that this, in fact, was not the case.

MALI PRESIDENT TRAORE ARRIVES IN PARIS 13 NOV

AB131710 Paris AFP in English 1533 GMT 13 Nov 80

[Text] Paris, 13 Nov (AFP)--Mali President Moussa Traore arrived here today for a 24-hour visit. He is due to have talks tomorrow with French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing before going on to Kuwait for a meeting of the Sahel club, an association of sub-Saharan regional states and countries which aid them.

Remarks on Libyan 'Aggression'

NC141100 Paris AFP in English 1049 GMT 14 Nov 80

[Excerpt] 14 Nov (AFP)--President Moussa Traore of Mali, speaking after a meeting with French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing, said here today that his country was prepared for any aggression from Libya.

General Traore, answering questions from reporters, referred to published reports last week that Libya, in addition to its ambitions in Chad, also envisaged gaining power in such other sub-Saharan African states as Senegal, Gambia, Niger and Mali.

"If this is the case, I respond simply that in 1960, at the time of our independence, attempts were made to destabilize us," General Traore said. "Twenty years later, if there are new attempts, we remain...ready to face them."

He said that he and Mr Giscard d'Estaing did not discuss the civil war in Chad, where Libyan reinforcements are reported to be helping the forces of President Oueddei Goukouni, but that Chad "is the concern of all the African states and likewise of France."

EQUATORIAL GUINEA PRESIDENT PAYS OFFICIAL VISIT

Dinner With Francois-Poncet

AB140730 Paris AFP in English 0651 GMT 14 Nov 80

[Text] Paris, 14 Nov (AFP)--Equatorial Guinea's president, Lieutenant Colonel Teodoro Obiang Nguema Mbazogo, arrived here yesterday for a four-day official visit, his first trip to France.

At a dinner last night, President Obiang Nguema and French Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet emphasized the improved relations between their countries since the August, 1979, coup that overthrew dictator Francisco Macias Nguema.

France wants to help you, Mr Francois-Poncet told the Equatorial Guinean leader. Your country has regained its place in the Organization of African Unity and in the international community, he continued, and advised efforts to develop the country and to utilize its energy and mineral resources.

President Obiang Nguema praised France's efforts to help develop African countries, and said, we hope that Equatorial Guinea will be able to benefit from this aid.

Talks With Giscard on Cooperation

AB141632 Paris AFP in English 1554 GMT 14 Nov 80

[Text] Paris, 14 Nov (AFP)--President Teodoro Obiang Nguema Mbazogo of Equatorial Guinea had private talks here today with French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing on bilateral cooperation projects. Describing the meeting as fruitful, Lt Col Obiang Nguema said he was very satisfied by French answers to his cooperation questions.

He underscored interest in oil cooperation but noted that accords signed with France in this area were yet to be implemented.

Questioned as he left the Elysee presidential palace, President Obiang Nguema said he had asked French help in promoting harmonious development and in ending the considerable political instability in Africa. France, he said, could contribute positively to a political settlement in the Western Sahara.

Lt Col Obiang Nguema, who arrived yesterday for a 4-day visit on his first trip to France, was to meet Cooperation Minister Robert Galley later. Yesterday he conferred with Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet.

President Obiang Nguema came to power in August 1979 in a coup d'etat that overthrew his uncle, Macias Nguema, who was [word indistinct] with several aides the following month after being convicted of multiple assassination and torture.

Dinner Given by Cooperation Minister

AB161421 Paris AFP in French 1037 GMT 15 Nov 80

[Excerpt] Paris, 15 Nov (AFP)--The president of the Republic of Equatorial Guinea, Lt Col Obiang Nguema Mbazogo, this evening expressed the hope that France will continue to assist his country.

The Equatorial Guinean head of state, who was the guest at a dinner given by the French minister of cooperation, Mr Robert Galley, spoke about the tragedy of more than a decade's dictatorship by former President Macias, which, he said, plunged Equatorial Guinea into the greatest misery. France has always been present through her diplomatic representation since independence, he continued, and has thus enabled us to remain hopeful.

To President Obiang, the dream has become a reality today, because France is really ready to assist us. Of course, he remarked, this aid is coming at a slow pace, but we have never lost hope and are certain that France will continue to give a helping hand to the underprivileged people of Equatorial Guinea.

After expressing his profound gratitude for the attention given him since his arrival in Paris on Thursday, President Obiang invited Mr. Giscard d'Estaing to visit Equatorial Guinea at his convenience.

Joint Communique Issued

AB161452 Paris AFP in French 1027 GMT 16 Nov 80

[Text] Paris, 16 Nov (AFP)--The official working visit which President Teodoro Obiang Nguema Mbazogo of Equatorial Guinea has just made to France, the first of its kind by any head of state of that country, has enabled the two parties to strengthen their economic cooperation and to discuss problems of mutual interest.

During his visit, Mr Obiang, who leaves Paris on Monday for a private visit to the FRG, met President Giscard d'Estaing, Mr Robert Galley, the minister of cooperation, and Mr Jean Francois-Poncet, the minister of foreign affairs.

A joint communique issued on Friday after the meeting of the two heads of state mentions the great cordiality in which their talks on matters of cooperation and bilateral economic relations were held.

France has agreed to finance a hydroelectric power station in Equatorial Guinea capable of producing about 800 megawatt hours. France will also help Equatorial Guinea in its national reconstruction efforts after 10 years of the dictatorial regime of Macias Nguema, who was overthrown in August 1979.

According to the joint communique, the two heads of state also affirmed their confidence in dialogue and negotiations as the means of settling disputes between states and agreed on the necessity of establishing a more equitable international economic order. Finally, they expressed the desire to see the European-Arab-African trialogue gradually set up within the framework of international reality. Throughout his visit, President Obiang expressed the desire to see France play an active role in the development of Africa to help it escape its current instability.

An economic, technical and cultural agreement was signed between the two countries on 29 November 1979 under which Equatorial Guinea was allocated subsidies of 11 billion francs from the Aid and Cooperation Fund (FAC). This aid is meant for the development of traditional fishing, mineral prospecting and the improvement of the port of Malabo. Several French experts will soon be sent to Equatorial Guinea. The prospects for cooperation in the petroleum field will also be studied. Mr Obiang's visit on Saturday and Sunday will be devoted to travelling to the provinces (Orleans to see the geological and mineral research bureau, and to the refineries of the region of Marseille and those of Lacq).

PCI CENTRAL COMMITTEE DEBATES RELATION TO, ROLE OF PSI

LD131309 [Editorial Report] Milan L'UNITA in Italian on 5 November has an unattributed report on the 4 November PCI Central Committee debate on the opening report delivered by Gerardo Chiaromonte on 3 November. Most of the speakers are highly critical of current PSI strategy, which was also one of the main targets of Chiaromonte's speech. Giuseppe Chiarante condemns the "insidious maneuver" being attempted people who "portray our criticial stance toward Craxi's policy as due to our alleged desire to establish special relations with the DC," while Paolo Spriano urges his party to draw the necessary conclusions from the observation that "in the Socialist Party there are transformations under way so profound as to jeopardize the original characteristics of the Italian left and workers movement." He adds that "we must extend our unitary initiative to Europe" and that in connection with "the PCI's stance on Europe", "there are certain issues which cannot be evaded inthe long run."

Lucio Lombardo Radice is the only speaker to discuss foreign policy at any length. He criticizes Giuliano Procacci, the PCI's representative at the recent Berlin Communist Party "scientific" conference, for "speaking in general terms of the need for 'autonomous and sovereign development of socialist democracy,'" while "not explicitly mentioning the need for an opening to pluralism within 'real socialism.'" Lombardo Radice continues as follows: "It is pluralism that is at stake, even in the elementary form of a trade union independent of the state and party, and that is being challenged by Soviet Marxism's official theorists today as they did yesterday. Words such as 'normalization' (Husak's regime is alleged to be 'normal,' but Dubcek's 'abnormal') or appeals for things like legal ratification of the party's leading role are very grave pointers. In fact, pluralism is an objective necessity of the countries of 'real socialism,' for them to emerge from their increasingly acute contradiction between the growth of a major society following the anticapitalist revolution and the continued existence of an obsolete form of state which presumes to control everything. I regard public discussion of this not as illicit interference but as in internationalist duty." Directorate member Armando Cos Utta claims that "the Socialist Party has drawn from the election results an overassessment of its strength, which has prompted it and is still prompting it to lay unfair claim to an even greater scope and role." Alfredo Barbieri warns that "the danger constituted by the desire to isolate the PCI has not disappeared" and that "the extension of the majority to moderate and even antiworker components in fact strengthens this attempt." Barbieri asserts that one of the questions the PCI must ask itself about the PSI is "whether that party has irremediably moved away from the working class."

Directorate member Luciano Barca claims that "to make the most of its 10 percent of the vote and to make it indispensable to so-called governability, the PSI is not only failing to oppose the anticommunist prejudice of a considerable sector of the DC but is in fact taking advantage of an encouraging it." Sergio Segre points to "the difficulty that our party has been experiencing, sometimes to the extent of giving the impression of a relative reduction of its ability to influence the country's situation. We can ask ourselve among other things, whether the formula 'either in government or in opposition' did not imply excessively rigid options, in practice reducing the scope for political initiative...." Segre also urges a "reflection on the way in which in the past 18 months since the 1979 election we have conducted the attempt to recover the losses we suffered at that time, ascertaining whether there has always been a correct balance between the effort clearly to redefine the party's character and its capability for struggle and the effort to promote its own autonomous capacity for making proposals with respect to the major issues of the Italian and international crisis." "I am not sure," he concludes, "that such a correct balance has always existed." Pietro Ingrao confesses that he is one of "the comrades who remain to be convinced" of the "future prospects of the national solidarity policy," while fellow Directorate member Emanuele Macaluso confirms that "the nub of the political situation remains the DC's discrimination against the PCI," adding that "our opposition role is in no way a 'free choice.'"

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON CSCE SESSION, DELEGATES' SPEECHES

Agenda, Timetable Agreement

LD141220 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1200 GMT 14 Nov 80

[Jose Manual Salgado report from the Palace of Congresses and Exhibitions in Madrid]

[Text] Finally, an agreement at the Madrid conference. At the moment the meeting of the working group being held in parallel to the plenary sessions has just ended. The group, comprising delegates from the 35 countries taking part, has said yes to the document which gives the agenda and the timetable for the continuation of the conference. There is only one qualification: the Soviets have said 'yes,' but they have to confirm it at 1700 today, probably after consulting Moscow. In the coming news bulletins we shall give the terms of the agreement which now marks the solution to the conference on security and cooperation.

USSR Acceptance of Agenda

LD141748 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1702 GMT 14 Nov 80

[Text] The way is now open for the Madrid conference. The Soviet Union has said 'yes' to the agenda proposal under consideration. Our correspondent spoke to (Marques de Lizo), a Spanish delegate, who gave us the news in these words:

[Begin recording] [(De Lizo)] At 1735 we finally have an agreement at the level of the working group on the terms of the document put forward by the neutral and nonaligned countries yesterday, that is, by the foreign ministers of Austria, Sweden and Cyprus and by the Yugoslav ambassador. Therefore, agreement has been reached on the agenda, schedule, and format of the main conference.

[Question] The initial work has now begun then?

[Answer] The conference is now completely underway. [end recording]

This evening the agreement will be put to the plenum to be ratified, and the working group only has to sort out the order of the speakers at the closing ceremony of this European security conference. They are doing this at the moment.

Soviet Delegate Ilichev

NC141320 Paris AFP in English 1307 GMT 14 Nov 80

[Excerpt] Madrid, 14 Nov (AFP)--Soviet delegate Leonid Ilichev today accused Western countries of trying to turn the current Helsinki follow-up conference here into a "propaganda forum and verbal bull fight."

Mr Ilichev said that when U.S. delegate Griffin Bell yesterday complained about violations of the 1975 Helsinki human rights agreements inside the Soviet Union, Mr Bell was himself violating a Helsinki agreement against meddling in other countries' domestic affairs.

The Soviet delegate complained that the opening speeches of Western delegations in the first two days of this third Conference on European Security and Cooperation stirred up an "icy breeze of anti-detente" by alleging human rights violations and complaining about "the so-called Afghan question."

He warned of a "dangerous tendency toward military confrontation in Europe because of certain aggressive forces."

Speaking in the third day of the conference, Mr Ilichev said Western countries had violated the Helsinki agreements by resorting to economic sanctions against Moscow for its intervention in Afghanistan.

The West had not matched the Soviet Union's achievement of assuring the human right of job security, he said. His country was also defending the human right to live in peace rather than at war.

After praising Moscow's "tireless efforts to preserve peace," he proposed confidence-building measures including agreements not to be the first to resort to nuclear or conventional weapons, and not to enlarge existing military alliances.

He recalled the Soviet proposal for a European disarmament conference but warned it would not be possible if prerequisite conditions were demanded.

Further on Ilichev Address

LD141244 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1100 GMT 14 Nov 80

[Text] If yesterday's address to the CSCE session by U.S. envoy Griffin Bell aroused uncommon attention, no less attention was aroused by this morning's address to the plenary session by USSR Deputy Foreign Minister Leonid Ilichev. Bell's address was described as moderate. Ilichev, whose address was even more moderate than that of the U.S. representative, did not accept the latter's interference in what Ilichev considers the USSR's internal affairs.

After rejecting any review of the Helsinki Final Act, whose resolutions he regards as a whole, Ilichev proposed two conferences: one on European disarmament, an approach adopted at the last meeting of the members of the Warsaw Pact, and another on energy, proposed perhaps in view of the success of the 1979 Geneva meeting on the environment.

The Soviet delegate called for setting specific dates for the next disarmament conference and said, undoubtedly referring to Spain, that the number of countries which make up the NATO bloc should not be increased. At another point, after praising the USSR's goodwill and desire to achieve positive results at the Madrid meeting, Ilichev said that the return to the cold war had not begun with the invasion of Afghanistan, but rather 2 years ago with the arms race started by the United States and the NATO countries.

The Soviet delegate appeared inconsistent at one point, since he called attention to the fact that some delegates had taken advantage of the Madrid forum to deliver demagogic speeches, yet Ilichev himself used parts of his speech to propagate the constitution of the USSR, a constitution which, in the words of the Soviet representative, guarantees the human rights of his compatriots with the incentives of peace and work.

Other subjects touched upon and worthy of mention are those referring to economic sanctions against socialist countries and the important matter of security in the Mediterranean.

There was applause and a tone of goodwill for the Madrid meeting, the conference on cooperation and development [as heard], to begin to be played by everyone under the ground-rules of detente.

Cypriot Foreign Minister

NC151254 Nicosia PUBLIC INFORMATION OFFICE in English 14 Nov 80

[Text of 14 November speech by Cypriot Foreign Minister Nikos Rolandhis at the plenary session of the CSCE Madrid conference--press release]

[Text] Mr Chairman, first of all allow me to express the deep appreciation of my government and myself to the Government of Spain for all it has done in order to make possible the holding of this important conference in the context of the follow-up of the Conference for the Security and Co-operation in Europe. The hospitality so lavishly extended by our hosts and the excellent facilities at our disposal have greatly impressed us.

This conference, Mr Chairman, is a conference to which we attach great importance. We have gathered here to decide how we shall preserve and promote the valuable heritage of Helsinki which we so much cherish and in respect of which our late President Archbishop Makarios had stated at Helsinki that it was destined to lay the foundations for a happier and more peaceful future of mankind, because peace and security in Europe is indispensable for peace and security in the whole world. It is indeed regrettable and frustrating that the up-to-date experience is not in tune with the title of the conference. If something is missing at the moment from this conference it is widespread cooperation and understanding.

The Madrid follow-up conference is a major step within the whole Conference for the Security and Co-operation in Europe process and has its own great importance. Convened at this particular point of time, amid a turbulent world political climate, affected by a number of contentions, international problems and issues, it acquires even increasing importance.

As already evidenced by the preparatory session there is a marked difference, both of opinion and approach, between the various CSCE members. This difference, sad as it may be, underlines two important facts:

First, that the Madrid conference will be a tempestuous one and that unanimous agreement of the various issues to be discussed will not be easily reached. The second fact is that, irrespective of differences and animosities, there appears to be a willingness and resoluteness to go ahead, to overcome problems and to make a success of the conference. The fact that the conference is already under way is an indication that the prime objectives of the conference have not been defeated and that the principles upon which it is based are sound and indispensable to humanity. Even if states do not converge at the moment, in their stands or approach, they have to survive, and survival is not possible through confrontation.

In an era of a frantic arms race and in a world that is struggling for survival, it is increasingly vital for humanity to explore continuously all avenues of understanding, peaceful interaction and international co-operation. It is necessary to take a breath of air not polluted with political intrigue, conflict and tension. This very important thesis seems at last to be appreciated by the world community which appears to realise that the only, and I wish to stress the word only, way that humanity can survive is through detente, mutual understanding, interstate co-operation and the avoidance of ideological confrontation.

The CSCE process is in fact a demonstration of this very mentality and our hopes are bolstered when we see that it is surviving as a process, amid the tensions of the day, and that it continues as a means of achieving the above common objectives.

It would, I believe, be an exaggerated expectation to base our evaluation of the CSCE process on actual results in respect of particular problems. To my mind, if the CSCE is viewed in its correct perspective, that is as a process for understanding and co-operation and not as a body intended to be a 'trouble shooter,' then I believe we can safely maintain, that so far the CSCE proceeds in line with its objective. By carefully pursuing the process more concrete results can be expected in the future.

The Final Act was the result of a long and gruelling strife of the peoples of Europe, which has as a goal to put an end to the period of the cold war, to cement the bases and formulate the principles on which the relations of the European peoples should be founded and finally to create the appropriate infrastructure for a fruitful co-operation among them in all fields.

Cyprus, 5 years after the signing of the historic document, is struggling for the prevalence of the principles embodied in the Final Act. We, in Cyprus, have translated these principles into a slogan and a credo founded on morality, freedom and justice. We shall continue this struggle both in Cyprus and in the international field. With an open and constructive mind and in close co-operation with the other European non-aligned and neutral countries which participate in the conference and also in co-operation with all the other delegations, Cyprus is trying to play a positive role with the aim of rescuing and strengthening detente and transforming the principles of the Final Act into a living reality.

It is perhaps useful at this point to repeat what the Final Act provides in the dialogue: All the principles set forth are of primary significance and accordingly they will be equally and unreservedly applied, each of them, being interpreted, taking into account the others'. In the Final Act we have a text which does not require either amendments or additions. What is needed is full implementation of the Final Act and new ideas complementing what already exists. There is no doubt that there has been some progress since the ceremonial signing of the Final Act, but it is an indisputable fact that in the practical field results are rather disappointing.

I think I am expressing the feeling of all the participating states in this conference when I say that we all want this meeting to yield practical results which will give substance to detente and will promote security and co-operation in Europe. The total process will be a long one and the full implementation of principles is certainly a remote dream by the standards of today. However, most realities originate from vision. If the will is strong what is conceived as a philosophical stance and as a position of principle may be transformed or evolve into a pragmatic value.

The experience so far gathered by the degree of implementation of the confidence building measures, has proved their importance in contributing to the improvement of detente. We feel that they must further be developed and enriched with new ones. To this end the neutral and non-aligned states are again to take new initiatives.

On the other hand the question of convening a European conference on disarmament is very important in our opinion and should be given a thorough consideration. The Madrid conference should make serious efforts in order to arrive at satisfactory and acceptable terms of reference for the convening of such a conference.

As regards the results of the meeting of experts my delegation will have the opportunity to contribute to the discussion which will ensue, but let me emphasize once more our belief in the principle of the peaceful settlement of disputes and our wish to see in the future a workable system as a further contribution to the consolidation of peace and security on our continent.

Needless to emphasize also, Mr Chairman, the importance we attach to the solution of the acute economic problems which most of our countries, if not all, are now facing. We will study with great interest relevant proposals within the framework of the second basket--especially those on energy.

With regard to human rights and their practical manifestations enshrined in the provisions of the third basket, we believe in the inherent dignity of the human being and his right to live in peace, justice and liberty with all his fundamental freedoms safeguarded.

Finally, I feel it extremely appropriate to underline in the circumstances the great importance we attach to the question of the continuity of the process. The follow-up to the conference, in fact should not only be maintained but it should acquire a dynamic form always based on the relevant provisions of the Final Act.

Turning to the question of security and co-operation in the Mediterranean and the related problem of the status of the non-participating Mediterranean countries we are of the opinion that the provisions of the relevant chapter of the Final Act should be fully implemented. Furthermore, we feel that the dialogue with the non-participating countries should be amplified with the objective of enhancing the role of these countries in the process. It is needless to point out that the Mediterranean dimension of the Final Act, despite its importance, was not sufficiently attended to until today.

Mr Chairman, Cyprus is probably the only country in this conference hall which has pressing practical reasons to aspire for a prompt adherence to the principles of the Final Act. Implementation of these principles in the case of my country will restore order, peace, human rights, security and justice which were disrupted since the tragic events of 1974.

The Greek and Turkish communities of Cyprus have established communication through the talks which became a reality, after long and painstaking efforts of the secretary-general of the United Nations.

We, in Cyprus, are living in hopes of better days because of the talks. The Government of Cyprus believes in the talks. We want to preserve them and to invest them with the highest possible degree of substance. We know that if the two communities are to understand each other and start pursuing a common goal, a full and uninhibited exchange of views will be necessary.

Cyprus is a miniature of the world situation of today. It reflects all the facets of a restless, unsatisfied and troubled world. The intercommunal talks are a mini forum, which has certain similarities with this forum here. Both here and there we are groping in the darkness for more light which will generate the sense of justice, dignity and self-respect which is so strikingly missing.

We are trying to be as instrumental as possible towards saving this forum and whatever it stands for--hence our initiative of yesterday together with Austria, Sweden and Yugoslavia. Similarly, we are trying to save, preserve and strengthen the forum of the Cyprus talks.

We believe that peace, justice, security and co-operation will not take practical dimensions unless we deeply and sincerely want it and unless we dedicate ourselves, heart and soul, to those processes which may bring them about.

Turkish Foreign Minister

TA150549 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 14 Nov 80

[Excerpt] Expressing his views during the session for the opening speeches of the Madrid conference, Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen said that international political detente has weakened in the 5 years since the signing of the European security and cooperation final document.

Pointing out that ensuring mutual trust between East and West is the basic condition for political detente, Turkmen expressed the belief that the Madrid conference will contribute toward this goal. Turkmen also stated that all countries should adopt a stance of mutual understanding concerning this issue and assume responsibility.

Noting that the recent development in southwest Asia threatened international detente, the foreign minister said that the solution of the Afghanistan problem will assist in the restoration of mutual trust in Europe.

Noting that there is a close connection between the political and military concepts of security, Turkmen said that less armament and a stable balance of power based on military frankness constitute the basis of the detente process. He noted that Turkey supports the idea of convening a European disarmament conference.

Referring to economic issues in his speech, Turkmen said that immigrant workers are among those affected by economic difficulties and called for cooperation regarding the free movement envisaged in the Helsinki document. He noted that Turkey supports the call by the FRG to hold a European meeting to aid developing countries.

Turkmen added that Turkey attaches great importance to cooperation among Mediterranean countries.

The implementation of the Helsinki document during the past 5 years will be reviewed during the Madrid Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe.

Italian Foreign Minister

AU151345 Rome ANSA in English 0830 GMT 15 Nov 80

[Text] Madrid, 15 Nov (ANSA)--Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo echoed the sentiments voiced by other Western representatives at the Madrid Conference on European Security and Cooperation by attributing the crisis in detente to the Afghan situation in a statement to the 35-nation assembly Friday:

"Italy is aware that the shadow cast by the facts connected to Afghanistan continues to hang heavily over the Madrid meeting and the revival of the detente process in Europe," he said.

In another reference to the touch-and-go startup of the conference and efforts still underway on an agenda, Colombo declared that after his "searching" analysis of these difficulties he had concluded that, "the facts have not recently lived up to the 'detente charter'."

The head of Italy's diplomacy went on to list terrorism as one of the major violators of the Helsinki final document and urged a higher level of international cooperation to combat the phenomenon.

Colombo also stressed the Italian Government's commitment to human rights and fostering progress in the East-West dialogue in the areas of military security, economic, scientific and technological cooperation for furthering detente throughout the entire Mediterranean region.

"There is no alternative to detente," the Italian foreign minister declared, "if we wish to avoid relations among states being developed in a climate of instability foreboding serious perils."

Spanish Foreign Minister

LD151810 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1100 GMT 15 Nov 80

[Text] Some 20 minutes ago the address to the CSCE plenary session by Spanish Foreign Minister Perez Llorca ended. At the beginning of his speech he referred to the words spoken some days ago by the Spanish prime minister, noting the great political value which the conference has, given the mere fact of its taking place and as an indication of the existence of the necessary will to enter into dialogue to reduce the level of confrontation and achieve the preservation of peace.

He also said that the first condition for the reasonable success of the conference is precisely its continuation. To do away with it would be a serious responsibility.

The minister then referred to the value which Spain attaches to the Final Act and the consideration it takes of all its provisions. Perez Llorca said that Spain places special importance on the declaration of principles which appears in the first pages of the act. We do not understand it as a mere catalogue of intentions which can or cannot be put into practice according to the interests of the day, but as a true code of international conduct which it is necessary to respect in its entirely.

Besides the continuation of the conference and its political value, two subjects he touched upon were security as a term which cannot under any circumstances be separated from the process of human rights, and also to the Mediterranean dimension, which, as is natural, Spain feels is particularly important to itself. In view of this he is thinking of submitting a series of initiatives.

Similarly, he brought up the question of the invasion of Afghanistan, which he judged to be a very serious attack on peace.

With reference to NATO, he said that the conference on security should reach an agreement on the nonenlargement of military alliances and he referred to (?the East). But he added that such an agreement would always mean a violation of the provisions of the first of the principles of the Final Act on the inherent rights and sovereignty of states--in other words, Spain does not, at any time, admit any conditioning by hypotheses its entry or nonentry into the Atlantic alliance; this is something that the Helsinki Act itself leaves to the sovereign will of each nation.

Perez Llorca also spoke about terrorism--as the prime minister had done--and he indicated that concerted proposals are being drawn up with friendly countries which will be submitted at the appropriate time to the Madrid conference.

SOCIALIST INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OPENS 13 NOV

LD131254 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1100 GMT 13 Nov 80

[Text] At 1030 this morning the 15th congress of the Socialist International began at a Madrid hotel with the attendance of its president, Willy Brandt. Felipe Gonzalez opened the congress with words of greeting and welcome to the representatives of the foreign delegations. Willy Brandt then gave an address on the Socialist International in the eighties. The session will resume its work at about 1530 with the delivery of a paper on the international situation by Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky, after which there will be a debate.

Kreisky Address

AU151710 Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German 14 Nov 80 p 5

[Peter Pelinka dispatch from Madrid: "Kreisky at Socialist International Congress in Madrid, About the Worldwide Role of Democratic Socialism: A Great Alternative to any Dictatorship"]

[Excerpts] Madrid (AZ)--The American people have elected their president. Since the parties of the Socialist International belong to that great community adhering to common ideas which unswervingly stick to the principles of democracy, we naturally take cognizance of the decision of 42 million U.S. voters, Austrian Federal Chancellor Kreisky, Socialist Party [SPOE] chairman, has stated at the Socialist International congress in Madrid.

The Socialist International, however, represents 80 million voters, Kreisky noted. One who knows to what extent freedom and social justice are indispensable correlatives of a better social system must acknowledge that Democratic Socialism constitutes the great alternative to any dictatorship. It is with frankness that we tell our friends in the two large political U.S. camps that a great measure of readiness for understanding will be necessary to create such a policy as is necessary during a time like ours.

The federal chancellor, who Wednesday night (after a preparatory session of the Socialist International Bureau) had paid a courtesy visit to Spanish King Juan Carlos, gave a wide overview including all areas of world policy.

In doing so, a key point was the recently strained relationship between the two great power blocs. Kreisky recalled the Vienna meeting between Carter and Brezhnev in June 1979 and the conclusion of SALT II which, together with the Helsinki conference, offered good chances for the detente policy. In the 16 subsequent months the worldwide political situation has changed completely, Kreisky noted, and recalled the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, the hostage taking in Iran, and the war between Iran and Iraq. Nevertheless, one must not see the positive opposite trends [as published], Kreisky said.

In this portion of the speech priority was given to the events in Poland, whose people have always waged the struggle for freedom with great heroism. Just as there must be no doubt about the Socialist International's solidarity with the struggle of the Polish people, there must be no doubt that this struggle is an exclusive concern of the Polish people, Kreisky emphasized. We are much more at ease in our minds hearing that the partners in the historic dialogue in Poland have succeeded in coming to terms. Interference from the outside would only set off other interference and, as a result, detente policy would come to an end for an unforeseeable time to come. That such a thing has not happened is one of the few pleasant facts of this time, which must be taken into consideration along with the events in Afghanistan.

Kreisky also found clear-cut words about the situation in Turkey to which the OECD, the World Bank and the IMF have made available enormous sums of money. As an Austrian socialist, he still recalled the arguments with which the Dollfuss dictatorship had been justified in the west, depicting it as the lesser evil compared with Hitler. We should not repeat such historic mistakes, and therefore should say a word about the takeover of power by the militarymen. We should demand that the proper prerequisites for implementation of a functioning democracy be created again.

In conclusion, Kreisky once more stressed the significance of detente policy as well as the struggle for human rights, and in this context broached the Latin American situation. The experiences of the Vietnam war should be a serious warning that one should not permit, by a wrong policy, a situation in Latin America that would burden cooperation between the democracies.

Nicaraguan Delegate

PA141813 Managua Radio Sandino in Spanish 1200 GMT 14 Nov 80

[Text] The Nicaraguan people will defend their revolution to the last drop of their blood, firmly and with determination, said Bayardo Arce, member of the Sandinist National Liberation Front's national leadership. We are sure, he added, that in that effort we will have the support of all men and organizations who love freedom and democracy in the world.

Arce participated in the plenary session of 15th congress of the Socialist International, which opened in Madrid, with the attendance of delegates from Latin America, Africa, Asia and Europe.

The Sandinist leader denounced the existence of plans to invade Nicaragua, which are being encouraged by reactionary forces of Central America and the United States. We know Somozist elements are concentrating along the Honduran and Costa Rican borders, he said, and added that his country had been attacked from Honduras on 26 occasions since 19 July. At the same time, elements operating within the country are conducting simultaneous provocative acts and other types of aggression, he noted.

Commander Arce related the threatening situation in Central America with the complex world affairs and the effects in the area of the recent U.S. electoral results.

The dictatorship of Guatemala has been increasing its aggression and crimes against the Guatemalan people as has the Salvadoran regime, where the conflict could be internationalized by the governments of Honduras and Guatemala, Arce said.

Central America, he emphasized, where peace is being threatened, as the people struggle for their freedom, requires the most active support from throughout the world.

Palestine Issue

LD142314 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2000 GMT 14 Nov 80

[Text] At the Socialist International session which has just ended, a problem was raised which is without precedent at this type of meeting, because until now, the socialists have always adopted resolutions at their international meetings by unanimous agreement. However, on the subject of peace between Israel and the Arab countries there was a draft resolution, signed by Willy Brandt, Brunko Kreisky, Israeli representative Simon Peres, and Egyptian Minister of State for Foreign Affairs Butrus Ghali, calling on the Arab states and Israel to follow the initiative of President as-Sadat and Begin peace talks. But this satisfied only a few of the delegations, so an alternative was put forward signed by Felipe Gonzalez, Bettino Craxi, (Anselmo Suet) and Bruno Kreisky, who put his signatures to both documents. Here, the right to self-determination of a Palestinian state and the status of the PLO were to be recognized, the latter as a form of representation for this state [word indistinct] which is not a state because no one yet recognizes it as such.

While the Socialist International wishes to seek peace or provide the basic terms for peace in all states of the world, there is conflict. The socialists cannot reach agreement on whether to recognize the Palestinians. The solution could come tomorrow--as on so many occasions--the last day of the congress.

PYM ON NATO CONTRIBUTION, DEFENSE BUDGET

LD141902 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1440 GMT 14 Nov 80

[By Geoff Meade, PA staff reporter in Brussels]

[Text] Defence Secretary Mr Francis Pym said in Brussels today Britain "may even reach the 3 percent target" of its increased defence budget commitment to NATO, "but it is too early to say yet". He said: "We achieved that figure last year and we will come close to it this year". He was speaking after a two-day meeting of the NATO allies at which he unveiled Britain's future nuclear deterrent programme. He said no concern had been expressed by the UK's defence partners about proposed cuts in Britain's defence spending.

My Pym is believed to be at loggerheads with the prime minister over defence cuts proposed by the Treasury, not least because any cuts could undermine Britain's increased NATO commitment. He said today: "We are going through the normal process, the government is considering public spending in the normal way".

Mr Pym is content that he has reaffirmed Britain's commitment to NATO with his presentation of the UK plan for a new 5 billion pounds fleet of Trident missile submarines to replace the existing Polaris nuclear force in the early 1990's. He said the programme was a "unique contribution" to the NATO strength, and one which no other member of the alliance could make. The communique issued at NATO headquarters at the end of the meeting today certainly contained no hint of concern over Britain's defence spending issue. It stated the proposed Trident system would make a "significant contribution" to enhancing the effectiveness of NATO's strength.

Opposes Defense Cuts

LD141904 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1530 GMT 14 Nov 80

[By Robert Hutchinson, PA defense correspondent]

[Text] Defence Secretary Mr Francis Pym tonight fired another salvo in his battle to stave off further defence cuts sought by the Treasury. "Only the most biased observer will have allowed it to escape his attention that the military threat we face is ever-increasing," he told Conservatives at Horncastle, Lincolnshire. We must have effective armed forces, they must be properly equipped and we must have the wherewithal to deter, and if need be, to withstand attack. This costs money--a lot of money--and there is no way of avoiding this."

Mr Pym said last weekend's Remembrance Day services had reminded him of "the enormous price we had to pay in both world wars by allowing war to start." He said: "We had failed to take out the insurance policy of a credible deterrent against aggression and then, because of our lack of preparedness, we had to take so very long and lose so many lives to secure ultimate victory."

On defence spending, Mr Pym said: "It is the government's responsibility to ensure that the slice of the national cake which the Ministry of Defence consumes is the smallest that is necessary. But it is also our responsibility to be mindful that the first call on any government is the defence of the state. It is the inescapable duty of the government to protect the lives of all its citizens, so that it can then help and aid their livelihood. You cannot have a credible defence against the highly-trained and heavily-armed forces of the Warsaw Pact if you make do with old tanks or allow other gaps to rise in your armoury."

In a passage seen as a direct message to the Treasury, Mr Pym emphasised: "The case I have to make for defense spending may be inconvenient. But the facts do not go away if you refuse to confront them, and those facts are that this country needs--as much as at any time in its history--fully effective defences and a credible defence policy, and that is bound to cost a lot of money."

[Excerpt] This morning, House President Mikhailidhis left for the FRG and the UK. The house president will visit the UK as an official guest of the British Government. During his 5-day visit, he will meet with Prime Minister Thatcher, House of Commons Speaker Thomas, Commonwealth Secretary General Ramphal and other officials.

In a statememt at Larnaca Airport, Mikhailidhis said that during these contacts, he would naturally try to present Cyprus' position on the Cypriot problem and stress the need for initiatives in the direction of Turkey so that the dialogue in operation now might become effective. The house president added: I believe that Britain can play a very constructive role because of its special relations with Cyprus since it was a British colony and is a member of the Commonwealth while Britain is a guarantor power.

Mikhailidhis also said that in Britain he would have contacts with officials on regional development, particularly regions with low income levels. Prior to his visit to London, the house president will visit the FRG to attend a seminar in Bonn sponsored by the Friedrich Naumann Foundation on the question of Greece-Cyprus-Turkey.

DENKTAS SCORES GREEK PROPAGANDA CAMPAIGN ON RETURN

TA151246 Clandestine Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1215 GMT 15 Nov 80

[Text] President Denktas has said that the solution to the Cyprus problem would guarantee that the Turkish Cypriot community would live in its own zone. He was speaking at Lefkoniko today at a ceremony commemorating the Turkish Cypriot fighters who died in the Greek Cypriot onslaughts on the villages of Kofinou, Agios Theodoros and Lefkara. He stressed that if a repetition of the past massacres of the Turkish Cypriot community were to be prevented, the Turkish Cypriot children should be fully informed of the past. But, he added, such information should not incite feelings of hatred and disgust in the children. President Denktas stressed that the Turkish Cypriot community had struggled for its rights of equality and freedom as any civilized person would. He said that Turkey had saved the Turkish Cypriots from annihilation.

He stated that the Greek Cypriot television had now started a propaganda campaign, inviting the Turkish Cypriots to return to their homes in the south. He said that this would divide the Turkish Cypriots into small groups dispersed all over the island and beseiged by the Greek Cypriots as in the days before the Turkish peace operation. He repeated that an agreement on the exchange of population had been made and the Turkish Cypriots had all moved to the north and gained their freedom and security and the community was determined to live free and without fear.

President Denktas said that any future agreement on a solution of the Cyprus problem would not provide the Greek Cypriots with the opportunity to disperse the Turkish Cypriots into small groups all over the island to beseige and threaten them, and so to achieve union with Greece.

President Denktas concluded by saying that the Turkish Cypriot community would oppose the union of Cyprus with Greece and maintain the island's independence.

AKEL DEPUTY LEADER COMMENTS ON INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS

LN161304 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 16 Nov 80 pp 1, 11

[Excerpts] AKEL believes that the smooth continuation of the intercommunal talks is a step in the right direction and a victory for reason and prudence. For this reason, AKEL more determinedly reacts to and condemns the policy being followed by some political and church cadres, who undermine the talks' procedure by means of slogans and denunciations that lead to the consolidation of the invasion fait accompli.

This stand was explained last Wednesday evening by AKEL Deputy Secretary General A. Fandis during a broad conference of the Famagusta District party cadres. In his special reference to the intercommunal talks, A. Fandis said:

"The talks have been going smoothly for the last 2 months. How do we assess the meetings held thus far between the representatives of the two sides? It would certainly be naive for one to expect results during the first two months. Objective and subjective difficulties, bad and unskilled actions which took place during various phases of the Cyprus problem in the past, have cast a heavy shadow on the current talks and make more difficult--than necessary--the achievement of progress at the intercommunal talks. A person who favors and works for the success of the talks can note--according to all reports--that a good climate, a friendly atmosphere and a desire by both sides for constructive and substantive dialogue have prevailed during these talks.

"This constitutes a very positive step because the good climate and good will, constructive rapprochement and sincere discussion of each side's views are prerequisites for the smooth continuation and the fruitful conclusion of the talks.

"While we voice satisfaction with the good climate and the constructive way in which the talks are being held, we cannot fail to express our determined reaction and condemnation of the policy that is being followed by some political and church cadres--a policy that undermines the procedure of the intercommunal talks. These groups, such as the Rally Party which favors and propagandizes for a NATOite solution, and others such as EDEK and the archbishop, who dream about impossible, unfounded solutions, who have been denouncing from pulpits or other platforms the talks as 'futile', who have made the holding of the talks dependent on conditions that cannot be met and who have been courting with or making propaganda in favor of utopian--in essence adventurous--methods of struggle for a Cyprus solution; are undermining the talks and are hurting our people's difficult liberation struggle against occupation and imperialism. Contrary to the way they would like to appear--as uncompromising fighters--their policies and sloganeering lead to the consolidation of the fait accompli of the invasion and occupation."

AFP REPORTS DEMONSTRATION, CLASH NEAR U.S. EMBASSY

NC162032 Paris AFP in English 2030 GMT 16 Nov 80

[Text] Athens, 16 Nov (AFP)--Several persons were reportedly injured here tonight when police clashed with student demonstrators near the U.S. Embassy. The violence occurred during a parade of 100,000 persons commemorating the seventh anniversary of the polytechnic students' revolt against the colonels' regime.

Although the demonstration's organizers had promised the government that a march would not be made on the embassy, the authorities ordered the street leading to the embassy to be sealed off. Police at the street entry clubbed groups of students and used teargas against them. The clashes left a number of young people lying on the street.

Elsewhere in the capital persons described by police as "anarchistic and uncontrollable" smashed department store windows. By 10 pm local police seemed to have gained the upper hand over the demonstrators.

The demonstration began with a memorial service at the polytechnic for the students "massacred" by the authorities on November 17, 1973. After listening to speakers attack the present government's "pro American" policies and demand "real national independence," the demonstrators marched toward the National Assembly building. They carried banners attacking the United States and NATO (North Atlantic Treaty Organization.)

DEFENSE MINISTER DENIES PLANS TO ALLOW INSTALLATION OF MISSILES

AT161419 Athens AKROPOLIS in Greek 16 Nov 80 p 20

[Text] Yesterday at 1730, the national defense minister returned from Brussels where he had participated in the work of the 28th ministerial meeting of the NATO Nuclear Planning Group.

In a statement, Averof stressed that this was not the first time Greece had participated in the NATO Nuclear Planning Group as had been reported. Greece had participated in the past on a rotational basis with Turkey.

The minister denied that our country has accepted or intends to accept the installation of missiles on its soil. As is well known, this installation is envisaged in the nuclear interception program that U.S. Secretary of Defense Brown submitted to the alliance.

Averof added that this program aims to create a balance of forces so as to prevent an atomic war. Consequently, he said, it fully serves detente. Chief of the National Defense General Staff General Gratsios returned along with the national defense minister.

ELEVTHEROTIPIA POLL SHOWS PASOK AHEAD OF NEW DEMOCRACY

AT161438 Athens KIRIAKATIKI ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 16 Nov 80 pp 1,3

[Excerpt] PASOK is at present the leading party in Greece and, if elections were to be held now, in the capital PASOK would receive 39 percent of the votes whereas New Democracy would only receive 30 percent. This trend in voter preference is such that one can reliably forsee an increase in the gap between PASOK and New Democracy.

This is the picture of the two largest parties as it appears at present and as it emerges from the results of a scientific poll held in the area of Athens, Piraieus and their environs by the Eurodim Company for public opinion polls exclusively for KIRIAKATIKI ELEVTHEROTIPIA and ELEVTHEROTIPIA. This public opinion poll was held in the first half of November--that is, after our return to NATO--and ended only yesterday.

According to the results of the poll, held in the capital area: If elections were held now, PASOK would receive 38-40 percent of all votes throught the country. New Democracy would show a dramatic decrease, not exceeding 34 percent. Undoubtedly the KKE appears, as the third party, showing a strength of 10-12 percent.

EDIK [Democratic Center Union] has kept about half of its followers in comparison with the 1977 elections (currently 4-7 percent) while the recently-formed KODISO does not seem to exceed 1-2 percent. The strength of the parties of the KKE (Interior) and EDA [United Democratic Left] appears to reflect the same percentages as in 1977. The National Party experienced a slight decrease.

GEORGE MAVROS FORMS NEW POLITICAL 'CENTRIST' PARTY

AT161356 Athens NEWS in English 16 Nov 80 pp 1,3

[Excerpt] Liberal political leader George Mavros announced yesterday the formation of a new centrist party intended to avert polarization of Greek politics. Mr Mavros, 71, a former minister, was the leader of the Union of the Democratic Center Party until November 1977, when he resigned after it was badly defeated in the general elections that month. In a statement, Mr Mavros said the new party would be known as the Center Party. He hoped it would unite the country's centrist forces to provide the regulating element that guaranteed normal and stable political life. He said the main objectives of his party were to reorganize the state, to reduce bureaucratic procedures, to streamline financial administration, to restore confidence in the national image by a consistent foreign and defense policy and to ensure national independence and territorial integrity.

"Our country is today in a great state of crisis", Mr Mavros said. "Democracy no longer functions. The rule of law, education, the administration and the church have been dangerously undermined. A wave of corruption has eroded the whole system. The people no longer respect the state since the state respects neither the people nor itself.

"The economy has been completely dislocated. Productive investment is practically non-existent, industrial production is sluggish. Building construction has been paralyzed. Business firms are flagging under exorbitant interest rates and crippling expenses. Our social and economic policies are unsystematic and self-contradictory. The balance of trade and the balance of payments deficits widen continuously. Our system of taxation is unjust and uneven. Tax brackets have remained unadjusted despite inflation, and taxes fall heavily on lower income groups. Tax evasion has taken on considerable dimentions. The result of a programless economic policy is the uncontrolled rise on the price-index, aggravated by the one-sided monetary policy. A huge wave of strikes completes the gloomy picture.

"The Parliament has been alienated from its main task. Great problems regarding the sovereignty and the territorial integrity of the country are decided without reference to the Parliament in other quarters in Greece or abroad. The representatives of the people are humiliated by being asked to consent a posteriori.

"The mass media-radio and television, being under party control, continuously brainwash the people by presenting only one beloved profile and onesided picture of the situation. The people are possessed by distrust and depression. The crisis is not only economic and political. It is a national crisis. Its perpetuation could lead to a national catastrophe.

"It is exactly at this moment that the great, historical mission of the center presents itself. In countries with multi-party systems, the center forces unite to provide the regulating element, which guarantees normal and stable political life."

I hope that they are sincere in their wish; however, I would like to point out that in addition to these statements, Turkey and Greece sould act carefully toward one another at international forums.

DEFENSE MINISTER BAYULKEN RETURNS FROM NATO MEETINGS

TA152026 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 15 Nov 80

[Text] National Defense Minister Haluj Bayulken, who attended the nuclear planning group meetings of NATO defense ministers in Brussels, has returned to Turkey. In a statement to Turkish Radio and Television correspondents at Yesilkoy Airport, Bayulken said the meetings once more stressed the importance of the alliance's contribution to peace. Noting that the consultative and technical aspects of the meetings carried more weight, Bayulken added that the alliance's position from the viewpoint of nuclear arms were examined at the meetings. Pointing out that a unified view was reached on the necessity to correct the nuclear arms imbalance in Europe, Bayulken added that while this imbalance was being corrected, the members of the alliance wished the talks between the United States and the Soviet Union on nuclear arms control be concluded positively. Noting that the Turkish Government had, up to now, pursued such a policy, Bayulken added: I am afraid that if the nuclear arms balance goes against NATO, peace will be affected. While securing a nuclear arms balance, it is our wish that steps be taken toward arms reduction without any danger to the security of either side.

Bayulken concluded by saying that he also had beneficial talks with NATO Secretary General Luns and with the defense ministers of NATO member countries.

BAYULKEN SIGNS MILITARY AID AGREEMENT WITH FRG

TA171129 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 17 Nov 80

[Text] A DM600 million special military aid agreement between Turkey and the FRG was signed in Ankara today. The agreement was signed by Defense Minister Haluk Bayulken and by FRG Ambassador to Ankara Dirk Oncken. In a statement during the signing ceremony, Bayulken noted that the aid extended by the FRG to Turkey since 1964 has greatly contributed to the strengthening of the Turkish Armed Forces. Pointing out that the agreement on the 600 million mark donation to Turkey constitutes new military aid, Bayulken said that this amount will be used to equip the Turkish ground forces with modern Leopard tanks and Milan antitank missiles and to modernize existing tanks. Bayulken expressed the conviction that this aid will contribute to strengthening defense and maintaining the peace in the region.

In his speech, Oncken said that this agreement expresses the cooperation between the two countries rather than just aid. He noted that this cooperation, which will serve to strengthen the alliance that the countries belong to, should be enhanced within the framework of mutual goals. The special military aid will be extended over a 3-year period. The aid is being extended in order to increase the joint defense capability of the allies in accordance with the NATO agreement.

[Text] The National Security Council has approved a bill stipulating that cases being heard in martial law military courts can be postponed no more than 30 days. According to the bill amending martial law No 1402 that was adopted at the National Security Council today, the accused will be accorded no more than 15 days for their defense. However, in cases involving 15 or more suspects, this period can be extended up to a month. The law also states that cases that involve offenses punishable by prison sentences of up to 5 years will be heard at martial law military courts having a single judge. According to the law, cases involving public prosecution of collective offenses or multiple offenses committed by a single person will be heard at the court authorized to deal with the most serious offense among those under review. This law will also be valid for state prosecution cases that were filed before this law goes into effect.

According to another amendment to the martial law, sentences to be passed by the martial law courts cannot be reduced due to the defendant's good conduct during the hearing. According to the amendment, the decision on whether or not the accused will be arrested during his interrogation, or on whether his detention should continue, will be made by one of the member judges of the martial law military courts. A member judge will be in charge of examining objections to these decisions.

According to an additional martial law article, nullity suits cannot be filed in connection with administrative actions involving the implementation of authority granted to martial law commanders. The article also states that no requests can be made to stop the proceedings. Furthermore, civil liability arising from a personal wrong cannot be claimed in connection with administrative actions based upon the authority of the martial law commanders. Indemnity suits based on personal wrongs and suits of nullity filed before the law goes into effect and decisions made to stop proceedings will automatically be annulled.

According to another amendment to the martial law, martial law commanders will be responsible to the chief of the General Staff in connection with their duties and authority. Moreover, cooperation and coordination among martial law commands will be conducted by the chief of the General Staff's Office.

In the aftermath of the September 12 takeover, peace and quiet is prevailing all over the country, and wounds are being healed. Political terrorism is being curbed and terrorist and separatist elements are being nipped in the bud.

These are the remarks of General Hayri Undul, acting chief of the Armed Services Coordination Board, who spoke on the Turkish television Sunday.

In response to questions during the televised interview, the general noted that there had been a 80 percent decline in armed attacks since September 12. But on the other hand, bombings registered an increase of 60 percent and placing booby-trapped placecards an increase of 18 percent.

The general noted that Turkey had been pushed to the brink of a civil war in the days prior to the intervention of the armed forces on September 12.

CHANCELLOR SCHMIDT INTERVIEWED ON U.S. VISIT, NATO ISSUES

DW171259 Bonn ZDF Television Network in German 1810 GMT 16 Nov 80

[Reporters Reiche and Ellgaard interview in Bonn with Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt on the program "Bonn Perspectives"--recorded]

[Text] [Question] This time you will be going to the White House in Washington at a time when the guard is being changed--not an ideal time for intensified talks with a view to the future. Is there any urgency about continuing the discussion with the new administration, to avoid errors and rule out misunderstandings?

[Answer] I think it is a very good time; I picked it myself in the middle of 1980. At any rate I wanted to go to the United States shortly after the election.

[Question] Regardless of the winner?

[Answer] Quite right. Not with great pomp, but to have talks. While in Washington next week I will certainly have an opportunity to meet the outgoing Carter administration and the President himself, as well as the currently most important advisers of the president-elect.

[Question] Do you have a firm appointment with the president-elect?

[Answer] I did not ask for one. I do not want to create difficulties for him; he is not yet in office. But I have known a number of his advisers quite well for years. I am even friends with some of them. I have known for more than 10 years how some of them think, and for some of them this has been the case throughout the past 10 years. No, I think it will be useful for both sides.

[Question] The Federal Government trusts the continuity of U.S. foreign policy even after the change of government in Washington. Reagan's foreign policy shows a certain change in some points compared with Carter's. Reagan wants to make the United States the number one military power again, while you have suggested for years a balance between the East and the West. Won't that open up basic differences of opinion?

[Answer] I will continue in the future to argue for a balance, but I am not certain that you are interpreting Ronald Reagan correctly. If he claims that America must not be militarily weaker than others in the world, that the Western alliance as a whole cannot be weaker than the Eastern alliance, this is fully in line with my view of a balance.

[Question] As regards SALT II, for example, you have been arguing for years that the United States should ratify this agreement on the limitation of nuclear long-range arms, while President Reagan wants to renegotiate it with the Russians.

[Answer] I believe that the decisive thing is that Reagan does not want to negotiate on all parts of SALT II, but that primarily--according to everything I have heard--he is firmly determined to promote the SALT process as a whole. This indeed decisive. In German SALT means mutual limitation of strategic arms, it means balance. I consider Ronald Reagan's approach to SALT as correct. It will turn out in the end that our policy and the policy of the Americans--ours as that of a nonnuclear power which is very interested in this balance--are in full accord.

[Question] Even if some parts are renegotiated, the SALT agreement needs time. We hope that a problem connected with nuclear arms will be clarified by SALT III, the problem we call Eurostrategic arms, not intercontinental arms.

These are arms that affect Europe and we hope that they will be dealt with as an after-effect of SALT II, which by then is supposed to be ratified. Wouldn't that handicap negotiations on such an important issue as medium-range missiles?

[Answer] I do not think so. In the Federal Security Council, a cabinet committee here in Bonn, we have, as you know, discussed in a recent session the observable progress achieved so far in talks between the Soviet Union and the Americans on the limitation of these Eurostrategic arms, and actually we are not disappointed by the first round of negotiations in Geneva. Very clear differences of opinion can be seen, but both sides have clearly and honestly outlined their basic positions. That was necessary at the beginning. I am not concerned that this process could be upset by the change in the White House. On the contrary, I believe that the Soviet leadership will carefully adapt its negotiating strategy to the somewhat changed emphases of the new president.

[Question] There is a concrete issue involved in security policy matters and in connection with the United States, namely, 3 percent more in real terms to be spent on security. We have done it in the past, but now the Americans have serious doubts. The new federal budget contains expenditures of less than a real 3 percent. Is a conflict situation in the offing vis-a-vis our major ally?

[Answer] In the Federal Government's draft 1980 budget there also was less, but by the end of 1980 we will have achieved 2.8 percent. The average over the past 10 years is 2.7 percent, which is quite a difference compared to other NATO partners and even the United States itself. We are used to having such criticism voiced by the papers at the beginning of budget debates, criticism which sometimes has been fed by our own German opposition.

[Question] But also by the United States.

[Answer] Yes, certainly, it takes place here and then appears in the media and parliaments of other countries. The criticism is directed not merely at us. But I am certain that by the end of 1981--as by the end of 1980--we will be able to say that we have fulfilled the NATO commitments we have accepted. We have not accepted some commitments others suggested we should take over, but we have fulfilled the duties we have accepted. We will do the same in the future.

[Question] But don't the Americans interpret a real 3-percent increase somewhat differently than we do? Don't they clearly mean an increase in the defense budget?

[Answer] I am speaking of the defense budget. I am not talking about anything else.

[Question] Many other European states have naturally oriented themselves very much on us; we are almost a model. We are considered wealthy. Wouldn't a restrained attitude, some dropping under a real 3 percent, influence other European states who would then contribute even less?

[Answer] The matter is rather the reverse. A number of European states have not done what NATO expected them to do and what they have actually committed themselves to do for defense. We were not the ones to do it first, others did, and we will not follow them. But in view of the improper weight attributed at present by the newspapers of the world to the 3 percent, I must point out that the most important matter with regard to the common defense of the nations united in the Western community, the nations united in our defense alliance, the most important matter is having soldiers who are prepared to defend in an emergency--soldiers and the will of the soldiers to do their duty, soldiers with good training and good military equipment. The latter, however, costs money. And if I am worried by anything, it is not the monetary problem, but the question of whether there are enough soldiers available in every country.

[Question] Conscription in America?

[Answer] There is no conscription in America, no conscription in England, but there is in our country. What worries me with regard to our own country is not so much the defense budget, but a negative approach by a small part of the young generation--a matter that has been clearly stressed by the media, but which cannot be denied--vis-a-vis the necessity of defense as such. It is not merely a quarrel about external forms of military tradition--that quarrel is legitimate, that is all right, one can have different opinions on it and that must be discussed. But some people hide behind it their basic rejection of defense preparedness in general, and this worries me.

[Question] A question about the security issue, Mr Federal Chancellor. After Afghanistan you coined the phrase about division of labor in the alliance, to take some of the burden from the American troops here to keep them free for other possible missions. Opinion prevails in America that the Germans are pursuing some tricky tactics with regard to the future, that they are steering clear of current problems. Did you maybe promise too much?

[Answer] No, I did not. On the contrary, we have fulfilled quite a lot of what we have promised. As regards Pakistan, for example, we have done more for its economy than the Americans. We have done more for Turkey, our NATO partner, than the Americans. That was not easy for us. If we want to implement a number of suggestions by the finance minister dealing with economizing, suggestions that are not easy, it is because our international duties involving division of labor have grown extensively in past months.

[Question] Let us discuss Europe, Mr Federal Chancellor Europe wants to be a partner of the United States. That is a claim, but also a commitment. We have the impression that there is an idea about setting up some sort of crisis management for Europe in an emergency, a crisis staff, possibly in cooperatio with the United States if such a necessity should come about at some time.

[Answer] I would not call it a crisis staff, but I would very much stress what you have said in your last sentence about cooperation of European states and their governments with America, with the American Government. I am very happy that Ronald Reagan has underscored that idea so much. It means in practice that he plans to cooperate more closely, more closely than cooperation has been in past years unfortunately, with European governments. Cooperation not only means that one party demands something and the others implement it. Cooperation means consultation, listening to each other, asking questions and giving answers in order to seek and find a common path. In doing this, America will have to play the leading role. But not everything that American desks have come up with over the decades has been adopted by the Europeans as is. There are many cases in which the Americans have adapted their basic positions to those of the Europeans.

I remind you of one of the great debates of the early sixties on the so-called multilateral force, a combined European-American floating nuclear armed force. Nobody here in Europe trusted it very much, and eventually the Americans said: Well, it was probably not the best idea. And yet NATO has fulfilled its task excellently in the 15 or 18 years that have elapsed, namely, that of preserving peace in Europe.

[Question] Do you want to create our own instrument for managing crises, for a common attitude and voice of Europe?

[Answer] Not me. I have not heard either that somebody else wants to create a new instrument. There are too many instruments in the world, too many conferences. Close personal contacts among those responsible are necessary.

[Question] Will you perhaps travel to America with a European plan, a plan that has been discussed prior to your visit with President Giscard d'Estaing last week and with the British government chief?

[Answer] If that were the case, I would not talk about it here, but it is not.

[Question] A final question: Do the Americans possibly overrate our potential and our economic strength, voicing demands that we cannot fulfill?

[Answer] Not just the Americans, others as well. Some partners here in Europe sometimes tend to overrate our strength and abilities, including our capability with regard to finances. We have helped a number of states; I mentioned this a minute ago. I mentioned Turkey and Pakistan, and I could name other European states. I could mention the great debate in the European Community early last summer on the European Community's burden for England, a burden England could not or did not want to carry any longer. We made a considerable contribution there.

The danger of overrating our role always exists. Therefore I always stress that Germany can never play a leading role and that not even the appearance should exist that we could strive for this. We have difficulties, too. The whole world is in economic difficulties nowadays. That is due to the second oil price explosion, and we all must make great efforts to overcome these difficulties in our balances of payment.

England is better off than we are. They have their own oil, but we other continental Europeans must import oil. With regard to fighting inflation, we are better off than others; on the labor market we are better off than other Europeans. But we are not therefore a goose that can lay golden eggs, and we must see to it that our abilities are not overrated. But within the framework of what we can do, we will certainly contribute to the progress of the European Community and the whole Atlantic alliance.

DPA: BONN PREPARED TO ALLOCATE MORE FUNDS FOR DEFENSE

LD171718 Hamburg DPA in German 1445 GMT 17 Nov 80

[Text] Bonn/Washington, 17 Nov (DPA)--The Federal Government is prepared to spend additional sums on defense over and above the expenditure so far envisaged by the SPD/FDP coalition for next year. Indications to this effect from Bonn government circles today were also reinforced today, the day before Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's visit to the United States, by statements by Federal Finance Minister Hans Matthoefer on an additional increase in next year's budget expenditure which is evidently intended for defense purposes.

Bonn is thus responding to increasingly firm pressure from the U.S. administration, particularly on the Federal Republic, to honor the NATO agreement of an annual increase in defense spending of 3 percent in real terms. As a result of the coalition talks an increase of only 1.8 percent in defense spending in real terms had been envisaged.

According to information from sources close to the chancellor, in his meeting with President Jimmy Carter in Washington on Thursday Helmut Schmidt wants to avoid a clash on Bonn's defense spending. Federal Government Spokesman Klaus Boelling told the press in Bonn today that the purpose of several interviews on this topic given by the chancellor over the past few days was to make it clear that "the commitments to NATO will be fulfilled." Boelling said that this topic will be discussed positively in Washington.

Like Boelling, Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, who will accompany Schmidt to Washington, today also gave an assurance that no one has any cause to doubt that the Federal Republic will continue, including within the framework of the long-term defense program, to honor its obligations. It seems that in the Federal Government Genscher insisted that Bonn increase its defense expenditure for next year to a greater extent than originally agreed in the coalition talks. Meanwhile, it has been reaffirmed in Washington that in its talks with the chancellor, Carter will insist on the full 3 percent increase.

SCHMIDT, THATCHER CONFER ON EUROPEAN, OTHER ISSUES

LD171612 Hamburg DPA in German 1242 GMT 17 Nov 80

[Excerpts] Bonn, 17 Nov (DPA)--British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt spoke in Bonn in favor of close cooperation among the West European states, and also between Europe and the United States.

The chancellor's visit to the United States is preceded by an article by Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher stating the principles of the German-American relationship. In the article, published by the Foreign Ministry in Bonn, the alliance between Western Europe and North America is described as the basis for the freedom and security of the democracies of the Western world. Genscher spoke of a lasting and reliable bond between the United States and Western Europe and welcomed, as he put it, Reagan's "determination" to take future important decisions in close harmony with his European allies. "This means that the continuity and predictability of Western foreign policy will go on being safeguarded." Democratic Europe and North America were a "community of freedom sharing the same fate." Genscher underlined the U.S. leading role, avowed the principle of the division of labor in the alliance and described both the partnership between Europe and the United States and German-American friendship as a factor of stability in international politics.

At the center of the talks between Schmidt and Mrs Thatcher which, according to the chancellor, continued for 7 hours, were questions of international and economic policy as well as EC topics. The two heads of government underlined several times that there was agreement on essential points. The next meeting, presumably in May, is to take place at Chequers, the country residence of the British prime minister. Alluding to German-British relations and the last meeting in Great Britain, Mrs Thatcher said that the tree planted by the chancellor in Chequers was doing well.

Mrs Thatcher affirmed that Great Britain supported Europe and the EC unconditionally. Apart from the stabilizing effect on the Community as regards politics, economic involvement in the EC brought considerable advantages for Great Britain. The chancellor keenly shared this view and welcomed the fact that London intends to stay in the EC, playing its full part. The chancellor refused to comment on the issue of the Labor Party's attitude towards Europe. Mrs Thatcher said that defense expenditure was also discussed. She believed that Great Britain this year would achieve the 3 percent prescribed, just as in 1979. However, she could not foresee what the situation would be next year. The chancellor said in a television interview over the weekend that the Federal Republic would achieve 2.8 percent this year. At the press conference with Mrs Thatcher he interjected that this would amount to a real 3 percent increase.

In the discussion of world politics the two heads of government covered all the international crisis points. There was also agreement on the negative effects of oil prices on the balance of payments as well as on the need for a determined fight against inflation. Schmidt, when asked, agreed that the British pound was at present valued too high in relation to the Deutsch mark. He believed, however, that this would level out during the coming months. When asked about a repeat of the Guadeloupe meeting of Western heads of governments, initiated at the time by France, Mrs Thatcher said that meanwhile so many international conferences had been arranged that priority ought to be given to attempts at concluding those successfully. Schmidt said that so far no proposal for such a meeting had been submitted by the French Government, but only speculations in newspapers. Should France recommend such a meeting, then such a proposal would no doubt be carefully examined.

Before her return flight to London, Mrs Thatcher paid a courtesy visit to the federal president. She also visited the Beethoven House in Bonn. The British prime minister arrived in Bonn on Sunday evening, with informal talks beginning shortly after her arrival. The foreign ministers of the two countries also met.

Joint Press Conference

LD171200 Hamburg DPA in German 1055 GMT 17 Nov 80

[Text] Bonn, 17 Nov (DPA)--British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher today confirmed in Bonn that Great Britian stands unreservedly by Europe and does not question its links with the European Community.

At the close of 2 days of German-British consultative talks, Mrs Thatcher underlined to journalists at a joint press conference with Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt that the Community was one of the most important stabilizing factors in world politics.

The head of government moreover stressed that the increased economic involvements had brought considerable advantages for British exports and job security. Mrs Thatcher also advocated close cooperation between Europe and the United States.

Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt had earlier stated that Bonn and London were looking forward "with great confidence" to future cooperation with the United States after the change in the office of U.S. president.

In the field of the world economy the two countries agreed on the need for a determined fight against inflation and for maintaining a liberal trade policy. They also expressed their concern at the growing balance of payments difficulties experienced by most Western countries caused by the rising oil prices.

ISRAEL'S SHAMIR ARRIVES 17 NOV FOR 2-DAY VISIT

[Excerpts] Bonn, 17 Nov (DPA)--Yitzhaq Shamir, Israeli minister of foreign affairs, arrived in Bonn today for 2 days of talks with the Federal Government. Shamir first had a meeting with Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher who welcomed his opposite number at the airport. A talk between Shamir and Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt was planned for the afternoon.

Israeli Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir began 2 days of political talks in Bonn today with the Federal Government against the background of the Iraq-Iran war, new internal Arab differences and a possible rethinking of U.S. Mideast policy in favor of Israel. Shamir was largely concerned with obtaining greater German support for the Israeli-Egyptian peace effort and warning against Europe becoming further involved in working for PLO participation in a Mideast settlement.

At a dinner for Shamir, Genscher said that the normalization of relations between Israel and Egypt points in the direction of Israel being at peace with all peoples of the region, "including the Palestinian people." Genscher once again stressed that Bonn and the EEC rate Israel's right to existence and security just as highly as the implementation of the Palestinians' right to self-determination. The minister stated Bonn's readiness to continue to work with its EEC partners toward a peaceful settlement of the Mideast problem and to take a share of the responsibility in this respect.

Without making direct mention of Israel's measures for Jerusalem's full integration in the Jewish state and its settlement policy, Genscher said: "We support all efforts aimed at a comprehensive peace and oppose any fait accompli policy which poses additional (?obstacles) on the road to peace." At the same time he assured his Israeli counterpart, "It is not one's worst friends but rather the most reliable ones who, with sincere inetentions, also point out differences in views rather than keeping silent about them at a cool distance."

Cautions EEC on Mideast Declarations

LD172356 Hamburg DPA in German 1734 GMT 17 Nov 80

[Excerpts] Bonn, 17 Nov (DPA)--Israel expects the West European countries to refrain from any steps which might jeopardize a Middle East peace settlement being reached on the basis of the Israeli-Egyptian agreements. Israeli Foreign Minister Yitzhaq Shamir voiced this wish during his talks with the Federal Government today. Yitzhaq Shamir, who has been acting Israeli foreign minister for 8 months, arrived in Bonn today--his first visit to the federal capital--for 2 days of political talks. After a meeting with Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, Shamir said at a dinner given by Genscher in his honor that the Israeli Government could not approve any decisions or plans which were drawn up without Israeli agreement. Observers see this as a warning to the EEC countries to avoid further Middle East declarations in the style of the June EEC summit declaration at their next summit in Luxembourg at the beginning of December.

While Genscher did not elaborate on a Palestinian state, Shamir made it clear that Israel saw no need "to establish a further Arab Palestinian state between Jordan and Israel" in addition to the "Arab Palestinian state" of Jordan.

A government spokesman said this evening on the subject of the 1 and 1/2-hour exchange of views between Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Foreign Minister Yitzhaq Shamir that the meeting had centered on the Middle East problem and related issues. The meeting had served the continuation of the constant dialogue being held between the two friendly countries on the basis of their "good and increasingly closer bilateral relations."

BOELLING COMMENTS ON SCHMIDT MEETING WITH POPE

LD171524 Hamburg DPA in German 1417 GMT 17 Nov 80

[Text] Bonn, 17 Nov (DPA)--The talk between Pope John Paul II and Chancellor Helmut Schmidt on Saturday evening lasting about 50 minutes took place in a "particularly pleasant atmosphere," according to Government Spokesman Klaus Boelling. Questioned by journalists, Boelling said today that it had been a very plesant, concentrated and open talk "without any rhetorical embellishments."

With reference to the agreed confidentiality, Boelling refused to give details of the talk. However, when pressed further he indicated that theological as well as political topics had been touched upon. Concerning the Catholic social teachings mentioned in this connection, the government spokesman said that the federal chancellor had already "concerned himself intellectually" with that question before his first meeting with the pope when he visited Rome in 1979.

It seems that the chancellor, in discussing international problems, had also touched upon the situation in Poland.

REPORTS OF BANK LOAN TO SOVIET UNION 'PREMATURE'

LD171348 Hamburg DPA in German 1132 GMT 17 Nov 80

[Excerpt] Frankfurt, 17 Nov (DPA)--The granting of a DM10 billion loan to the Soviet Union by a German banking consortium in exchange for Soviet natural gas supplies is still pending. A spokesman for the Deutsche Bank in Frankfurt today referred to relevant press reports as "premature." The spokesman said that so far two rounds of talks had taken place--last summer and at the end of October and early November--between the Deutsche Bank, as head of the consortium, and Soviet representatives on the financing of German pipeline supplies and pertinent machinery. A further round of talks is planned for December.

TALKS HELD WITH SPANISH FOREIGN MINISTER ON TERRORISM

LD172106 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1830 GMT 17 Nov 80

[Text] Spanish Foreign Minister Jose Pedro Perez Llorca has arrived in Paris on an official visit. Here is Carlos Castillo in Paris:

Perez Llorca arrived in Paris this afternoon for a 48-hour working visit. Tomorrow morning he will meet the man from the Quai d'Orsay, Jean Francois-Poncet, and in the afternoon, Premier Raymond Barre. The Paris news media are unanimous in saying that the main subject of these talks will be the scant cooperation afforded by the French Government in combating ETA terrorism. Other subjects which will doubtless be raised are the progress of negotiations for Spanish entry to the EEC and also various aspects of bilateral relations.

The main point of friction between Spain and France remains the question of Basque terrorism. The international conference on terrorism which last week brought together 100 or so European experts at the Council of Europe in Strasbourg heard serious accusations expressed publicly and with forceful clarity against the inaction of the French Government. In his address to that conference Marco Tabar, Union of the Democratic Center senator from Alava, said that it is public knowledge in the Basque country that dealings and negotiations over the ETA "revolutionary tax" are carried out with total impunity in the French Basque country, with the full knowledge and absolute acquiescence of French authorities. It is equally well known that there exist in the south of France places where ETA terrorists are trained. A [word indistinct] reply had been awaited from the French delegation but this never came.

It is being said in well-informed circles in Paris this evening that both Jean Francois-Poncet and Raymond Barre will be trying their hardest to convince the Spanish minister that France is not displaying passivity in the face of Basque terrorism and that it has already taken a certain number of measures to prevent its territory becoming a safe refuge for ETA terrorists operating in Spain.

The magazine LE POINT, in its issue which went on sale today, talks of the famous "Spanish connection" in the case of the attack on the Paris synagogue and says that Madrid does not believe this suggestion to be true but nevertheless fears that it has been put about so as to justify French reserve in cooperation with Spain to combat Basque terrorism. Whatever the case, the French authorities are trying to give the impression at present that they are doing something. Former ETA member Juan Jose Etxave has been locked up in Bayonne for possession of weapons. Etxave had broken his links with ETA in 1972 but, according to the police, he was continuing to engage in clandestine activities.

EQUATORIAL GUINEA PRESIDENT: RESULTS OF VISIT 'EXCELLENT'

AB171831 Paris AFP in French 1543 GMT 17 Nov 80

[Excerpt] The Equatorial Guinean president has described the results of his 4-day official working visit to France as excellent. He pointed out that because of the delay in the implementation of the cooperation accords signed in November 1979, we had some fears prior to coming to Paris, but our fears were quickly dispelled. After denying that in its cooperation with Equatorial Guinea, France substituted for Spain, with whom we have cultural and linguistic links, President Obiang indicated that Equatorial Guinea maintains open cooperation with all countries in the area of petroleum. We have signed agreements for oil prospecting with France and Spain, and we have proposals from the United States. With respect to exploitation, we will wait until an oil law is drawn up. Its preparation is underway in France and Spain and many EEC experts are working on it too.

Presidetn Obiang, who refused to make any comments on the recent developments in Guinea-Bissau, will leave Paris on Tuesday morning for Cologne on a 12 or 24-hour private visit at the invitation of West German authorities. During the visit he will hold talks with top federal officials.

FRENCH DELEGATE ADDRESSES MADRID CSCE SESSION

LD180947 Paris LE MONDE in French 16-17 Nov 80 p 2

[Text] Jacques Martin, head of the French delegation to the Madrid CSCE conference, stated in particular:

"What is the meaning of our meeting? It is evidence of a conviction; it is also the opportunity for an assessment. It ought to be for all, and is for France, a reason for asserting an intention. It is evidence of a conviction because it shows the importance of a process which lies at the heart of the European situation.... It is the opportunity for an assessment because it is clear to everybody that the international situation influences the course of that process.... Finally, it is a reason for asserting an intention because the present circumstances, far from invalidating the framework and provisions of the Final Act, require that the Final Act be followed in full without complacency or deception.... The confidence which the Final Act proposes to introduce and develop in relations among our states is based primarily on security. Indeed, there is no confidence where security is not guaranteed.

"Security primarily means a balance of forces; however, security also means respecting the sovereignty of states. Respecting their sovereignty in organizing and equipping themselves for their defense; sovereignty in the political, economic or social decisions which determine their regime; and, finally, sovereignty in their right to belong to an alliance or not to belong to it, or to choose neutrality. Security also means refraining from threats or the use of force to settle disputes. It means replacing these methods with dialogue and negotiation.... If it is based on security, confidence is expressed by cooperation....

"We accepted that the conditions in which individuals can actually exercise the freedoms mentioned in the Final Act constituted a legitimate subject of debate among us since--and I quote the joint declaration signed 23 June 1977 between France and the Soviet Union--'respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms by all states constitutes one of the bases for a far-reaching improvement in their mutual relations....' Such a contract has been able to produce results and will be able to do so in the future only if everybody intends to abide by it. It is on this specific point that there are grounds for raising questions and showing anxiety in the assessment which we must now make. This is principally due to what is happening in the rest of the world....

"Europe is not an oasis in a universe which it can afford to ignore; it is an integral part of that universe.... That is why the military intervention in Afghanistan was so deeply felt in all of our countries; that is why confidence has been so undermined in Europe and that is why the course of detente has been impeded. This intervention is unacceptable as such and is a fundamental threat to the whole enterprise of which our meeting was to be one step; unless it is remedied, our meeting is likely to be an epilogue to that enterprise. However, our anxiety also stems from what is happening in Europe itself. Individuals are being prosecuted, persecuted and condemned simply because they are demanding the application of the Helsinki Final Act, in whose name we are meeting here today. Freedom of conscience is being hindered, as is the freedom to express religious faith. The doors to emigration which had been opened to Jews in the Soviet Union are closing again. The opportunities for contacts and visits between the two German states, which had been greatly increased, have been heavily restricted....

The violations, attacks and restrictions which I have just mentioned...affect the most fundamental and indisputable human rights--the human rights on which we freely reached agreement in full knowledge of the facts at Helsinki. That is why France cannot remain silent when these rights are called into question and considers that our meeting would be failing in its mission if it did not devote the necessary time to this matter."

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON SOCIALIST INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS

Brandt Reelected President

LD141530 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1230 GMT 14 Nov 80

[Text] The military coup in Turkey, Ronald Reagan's electoral victory and the impasse at the CSCE conference are the greatest points of concern among the delegates attending the Socialist International congress which began yesterday in Madrid. Willy Brandt was reelected president of the Socialist International by the plenum of the organization's congress. Similarly, the Swede Bernt Carlsson was reelected secretary general. Felipe Gonzalez continues to occupy one of the vice presidencies.

Today the session was opened with a debate on arms control and disarmament.

Kreisky Mediates Mideast Resolution

AU171110 Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German 15 Nov 80 p 5

[Excerpt] Madrid (AZ)--On the periphery of the Socialist International congress in Madrid, another step was taken on Friday toward a better understanding between Israel and Egypt. Both Israeli Socialist Party leader Peres and Egyptian Deputy Foreign Minister Ghali, together with Willy Brandt and Bruno Kreisky, worked out a resolution on the Middle East conflict, which Brandt presented to the Socialist International congress. The resolution, which urges the Arab countries and Israel to take measures for a peaceful settlement, was described by Chancellor Kreisky in a talk with ARBEITER-ZEITUNG as an essential step forward, among other things because in it, Israeli representatives also quite unequivocally recognize the existence of a Palestinian problem and of a Palestinian people.

The brief joint statement pays tribute to the initiated Egyptian-Israeli dialogue and urges all Arab countries to follow that example. At the same time the Israeli Government is asked to take appropriate measures in the West Bank and Gaza Strip to inspire confidence in a peaceful settlement of the Palestinians' problem. The resolution asks the Socialist International and all member parties to take into consideration the Palestinians' legitimate rights to existence. Despite this joint outcome of discussions held by Chancellor Kreisky in special talks on the periphery of the conference, among others with the PLO observers, differences regarding the Middle East situation are naturally continuing within the Socialist International member parties. This became clearly evident at a joint press conference by Kreisky and Peres, where both "agreed on not holding the same views on some aspects," as Peres defined it.

The differences focus primarily on the question of whether the PLO is a suitable interlocutor as representative of the Palestinian people, as is advocated by Kreisky, or whether the Palestinians should participate in negotiations merely within the framework of an Egyptian or a Jordanian delegation, as Peres expressed it. Nevertheless Kreisky feels that, in light of the development of the past few years, great progress has been made by the working out of a joint text.

The chancellor again paid tribute to As-Sadat's role as a trailblazer for the dialogue, although he made certain reservations regarding the Camp David agreement. Commenting on the role of the PLO, Kreisky said he was very much in favor of talks with it, such as here in Madrid on the periphery of the Socialist International congress, but membership in the Socialist International was out of the question because the PLO by its own definition is not a socialist but a supraparty organization.

Final Resolution Reported

LD162344 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1900 GMT 16 Nov 80

[Text] The final resolution of the 15th Congress of the Socialist International, which ended today in Madrid, includes an appeal for the ratification of SALT II, highlights the importance of initiating preparations for a European conference on disarmament, cites a statement by Willy Brandt and three other leaders on the Middle East, and proposes a world employment plan and also a new international economic order. In some of the areas dealt with, the resolution reads as follows:

The international situation: It is clear that in the current situation peace is under a much more serious threat than at any other time in the last 10 years. Relations between the great powers have seriously deteriorated. The outcome of the recent American elections have endangered SALT II; nevertheless, the Socialist International appeals again for the ratification of the SALT II treaty and for an early start to be made on serious negotiations on SALT III.

Poland: Our solidarity with the struggle for trade union rights is clear. We recognize these advances as successes achieved by the Polish workers and we believe that only they will be able to achieve whatever progress is to be made in the future.

The Madrid conference: The CSCE conference is not only a milestone in the postwar history of Europe but is of lasting importance in the process of maintaining peace and promoting European detente. The stipulations of the Helsinki Final Act have been inadequately complied with. We welcome the agreement reached in Madrid on a timetable for negotiations.

The economic crisis: We propose a democratically planned change of structure to contribute to eliminating the basic causes of the crisis. The problems of economic stagnation, inflation and unemployment can be successfully tackled only if there is an increase in productivity and purchasing power as a result of the creation of jobs and economic planning.

The Middle East: We call on the Israelis, the neighboring countries and the Palestinians to negotiate peace. The Socialist International will continue to play an active role for the attainment of a peace which will be just for all and both guarantee the security of all parties to the conflict and legalize the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people.

Afghanistan: The Socialist International expresses its horror and disappointment at the fact that the USSR has not responded to the appeal which has been made to it to withdraw the occupation forces from Afghanistan and to respect the independence and nonalignment of that country. We support the resistance of the Afghan people in the face of this occupation.

The Sahara: We support the right of the Saharan people to self-determination in accordance with OAU and UN decisions. We therefore call on the Polisario Front and Morocco to negotiate a political solution to this conflict, as Mauritania did.

Latin America: The Socialist International reaffirms its solidarity with the peoples of Latin America and the Caribbean in their struggle for freedom, democracy and social justice.

At the 15th Congress of the Socialist International Willy Brandt was reelected president. The next congress will be held in March 1983.

CARRINGTON CALLS FOR GREATER EC COOPERATION

LD171302 Hamburg DPA in German 0007 GMT 17 Nov 80

[Text] Hamburg/London, 17 Nov (DPA)--British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington today most emphatically advocated closer cooperation on foreign policy by the EC countries. The secretary stressed to the Overseas Club in Hamburg that the events in Afghanistan, Iran, the Middle East and in the Gulf have shown the weaknesses of European political cooperation. In his speech, which was rated in London as being part of the program for British policy within the EC, Carrington again spoke in favor of reform of the Community budget.

"The first thing which I feel we must do is to examine our political commitment to cooperation in foreign policy," said the foreign secretary, who had come to the German-British summit in Bonn with Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher. Ways had to be found of using a greater part of national diplomatic efforts for promoting joint European aims. Second, political cooperation had to be better organized.

"We cannot afford to go on forever with the ad hoc methods and improvised organization we have at the moment," said Carrington. "(?I am in) no doubt that political cooperation must be backed up by experienced foreign policy staff possibly made available on a temporary basis by the member states." A lot of employees do not have to be assigned to this task, but their qualifications have to be high.

The British foreign secretary criticized the fact that Europe reacted too slowly to world political crises. "Not until 3 weeks after the invasion of Afghanistan did I and my colleagues discuss the situation and debate as to how Europe should react," but the rate of reaction was important. This was why he had proposed that the EC foreign ministers automatically meet within 48 hours should three of them consider immediate consultations necessary in a crisis situation.

In his speech devoted to the future of the EC, Lord Carrington explained that economic and financial aspects were of fundamental importance for the success of the Community. This was why the restructuring of the EC budget was so important. The British Government felt that the same financial discipline had to apply to the Community's budget as applied to the national budgets. It was not true that London wants to destroy the Common Agricultural policy, but it has to be reformed.

In the secretary's view a reduction in the share of agricultural expenditure in the EC budget is imperative. Moreover, structural surpluses, above all in the area of dairy products, had to be removed. The restructuring of the budget did not only concern agriculture. The funds for regional and social expenditure were particularly important for Great Britain.

Lord Carrington put forward the view that there were still too many obstacles for the free traffic of goods and for the service industries in the individual EC countries. This was the case, for example, in the insurance sector. Moreover, "We should, for example, try to speed up our work on mutual recognition of professional and academic qualifications."

DEMOCRATIC PARTY ISSUES STATEMENT TO IMPLEMENT NEW PROGRAM

NC151927 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1730 GMT 15 Nov 80

[Text] On the occasion of implementing its new program, the Democratic Party [DIKO] has issued a statement saying that it totally supports the efforts of the government and the Committee of Missing Persons and Undeclared Prisoners of War to secure the necessary machinery to determine the fate of the missing persons. The statement said that DIKO's first goal is to respond to Cyprus' national issue and that it puts the national interest above all else. It supports the full implementation of UN resolutions calling for an absolutely independent, sovereign, territorially integral, nonaligned and demilitarized Cyprus. It also supports the inter-Cypriot dialogue being held to find a peaceful solution in the domestic aspect of the Cypriot problem as part of a solution as a whole. For this reason, it supports, as a basis of the dialogue, the 19 May agreement which, among other things, clearly includes the Makarios-Denktas agreement, the UN resolutions and the provisions for irrevocable rights and liberties of all citizens. It also supports a biregional federation solution that would safeguard both the unity of the state and the inalienable rights of the citizens, including the right of the refugees to return to their paternal homes. The DIKO statement adds that it believes in Cyprus' demilitarization and in securing strong international guarantees for its independence.

On the foreign aspect of the issue, the DIKO statement supports the convening of an international conference under UN auspices.

Specifically concerning the Famaguata issue, the DIKO statement supports the immediate implementation of paragraph 5 of the 19 May agreement. It supports, as a priority issue, the city's liberation and the return of its citizens in free and secure conditions. The city must be under the Cypriot Government's administration.

Regarding the issue of rapprochement with the Turkish Cypriots, the DIKO statement supports all such efforts, provided that the measures that will be taken will not strengthen the de facto partition situation.

The statement also says that DIKO will support all government efforts and programs to raise the standard of living of the people of every class.

In conclusion, the DIKO statement says that while the party supports private initiative, it will support any intervention by the state which is in the public interest.

MUSTAFA CAGATAY DENIES REPORTS OF CRISIS IN GOVERNMENT

TA171518 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1215 GMT 17 Nov 80

[Text] Prime Minister Cagatay has said that there is no government crisis in the Federated State. Speaking to correspondents this morning, the prime minister drew attention to speculative reports of a government crisis and said the situation was that several deputies had conveyed to the government questions which they regarded as problems concerning the Turkish Cypriot community. Mr Cagatay also denied reports to the effect that the same deputies had asked for the reshuffle of the cabinet.

In reply to a question, he said that six deputies from Famagusta had called on the government to study certain demands they put forward, but he added, their demands were sincere requests and not a memorandum.

GENERAL EVREN ADDRESSES JOURNALISTS IN IZMIR

TA171803 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 17 Nov 80

[Excerpt] Head of State Gen Kenan Evren this afternoon visited the Izmir journalists association. In a speech during his visit Evren said that no restrictions have been imposed on the press since the 12 September operation. Pointing out that the press has thus far displayed great understanding, Evren said: The occasional undesirable voices heard here--like in all other communities--should be received normally. However, when we say that they should be received normally, we do not mean that we are tolerant of them. It would be correct not to voice these remarks. We are well aware of the schemes designed by those who do not approve of this operation and their aims. However, we are determined not to allow such schemes to divert us from our path. We are determined to surmount every obstacle on our way and march on. It is on this march that we expect our nation and you to support and assist us as before and make our march a short one.

Evren also asked the journalists to extend his best wishes to the people of Izmir.

MILLIYET: OIL AGREEMENTS REACHED WITH SAUDI ARABIA, KUWAIT

NC171318 Istanbul MILLIYET in Turkish 13 Nov 80 p 7

[By Nilufer Yalcin]

[Exceepts] The visit of the Turkish delegation to Saudi Arabia, headed by Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen, is characterized by political circles in Ankara "as the most successful visit made to that country in the past 3 years." They say that this is the first time the Saudi Arabian Government has agreed to sign a bilateral oil agreement with Turkey for 1981.

The Saudi Arabian Government agrees that Turkey has suffered, with regard to oil supplies, greater harm than any other country from the Iranian-Iraqi conflict. It has pledged, therefore, to contribute to the supply of 2 million tons of oil for Turkey from the Gulf states until the end of the year. Competent officials say that "this attitude of the Saudi Arabian Government will provide great relief for Turkey during the next 2 or 3 months, and that contacts with these states are expected to begin in the near future. The understanding shown by the Saudi Arabian Government and the helping hand being extended to Turkey indicates that big strides are being taken toward cooperation in the economic as well as in the political fields."

Of the 2.5 million tons of oil, for which an agreement was signed in London last week, 320,000 tons will be provided by Saudi Arabia. Another agreement for 110,000 tons of oil from Kuwait has also been finalized. This means that about half a million tons of our total need has thus been secured.

ENERGY MINISTER DISCUSSES OIL CONSUMPTION, PRODUCTION

TA151712 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 15 Nov 80

[Excerpt] Minister of Energy and Natural Resources Serbulent Bingol has said that power shortages in the country have been caused by the delay in the inauguration of the Afsin-Elvistan thermal power station. Speaking at a meeting on oil production in Turkey organized by the Economic and Social Studies Conference delegation in Istanbul, Bingol said Turkey's annual oil consumption is 18.5 million tons and that this figure will reach 30 million in the mid-1980's. Bingol said the increase in oil consumption is adversely affecting the country's economy.

Also speaking at the meeting Nejat Eczacibasi, chairman of the Economic and Social Studies Conference delegation, said the OPEC countries' decision to increase crude oil prices will adversely affect the economies of developing countries.

(Nezih Nigci), a professor from the Bosporus University, said investments in oil prospecting in Turkey are insufficient. He added that plans should be made to increase Turkey's oil production by 10 percent annually. Ismail Kafescioglu, deputy director general of the Turkish Petroleum Corporation, said oil prospecting should be stepped up and existing oil beds should be better exploited to solve the economic bottleneck in Turkey. He added that Turkey's foreign currency revenues from exports are spent on oil purchases. Noting that Turkey's annual oil production is 2.3 million tons, Kafescioglu said domestic and foreign investors should be encouraged to invest in oil prospecting in the country.

GISCARD ON NUCLEAR POLICY, CHAIN OF COMMAND

LD191709 Paris LE MONDE in French 19 Nov 80 p 12

[Text] "The president's responsibilities mean that he alone can and should take decisions on deterrence questions.... These are decisions which, if they are taken, are taken without there being any intermediate stage between the president of the republic and the implementation of the decision.... The Strategic Air Forces form a central unit through which the various communications channels pass enabling the order to be transmitted...and it is transmitted to the means of execution, in other words to the firing device itself."

These statements were made by Valery Giscard d'Estaing on the program entitled "The French Nuclear Forces" which French Television Channel 1 is due to show this Tuesday, 18 November, at 2030 hours during which the head of state explains his responsibilities in the possible use of nuclear forces: bombers, missiles and submarines.

Asked to define the nuclear deterrence strategy, the president of the republic developed the idea which he had already explained during his press conference on 26 June, namely, that "deterrence is a collection of threats, a collection of risks directed at the adversary, at least one of which is deadly." Giscard d'Estaing was, however, more explicit in the television interview: "If the adversary is thinking of attacking you, he must consider that he is facing a collection of risks. He must not be able to know precisely, in other words he must not be able to calculate, what reaction will be prompted by a particular initiative he takes and, for this deterrence to work effectively, he must understand that there is at least a considerable risk, what I call a deadly risk.... It is therefore important to have a deterrent arsenal which, according to the adversary and the situation, makes it impossible for the adversary to be certain in advance of the ultimate risk, especially the deadly risk. That is deterrence."

Then the president described the organization of the command chain leading, if necessary, to opening nuclear fire. He explained in particular that unlike conventional battles in which "responsibility is delegated by Parliament and the government to the various levels of command," when nuclear means are used "the decisions must be extremely quick" and "taken within a few minutes" even if there has been a prolonged crisis.

"This decision can only be taken by one man and, in France, the president's responsibilities mean that it is he alone who can and must take decisions on deterrence questions. These decisions are, of course, prepared in conjunction with the whole chain of command, notably the armed forces chief of staff who plays a vital role in providing the means. The decision, however, and its implementation depend on the president of the republic alone."

The president of the republic then explained that the order is given by the head of state "by a mathematical procedure which gives a formula transmitted in stages to the means of execution, in other words to the firing device itself." "There are no modifications or alterations in the command chain as a whole." "It is important to realize," Giscard d'Estaing added, "that these orders are prepared in peacetime and that, for instance, the submarine command does not know the target at which it will fire its missile. It receives an order which sets the computers and the missile's computer in motion and, on the basis of that order, the missile is automatically trained on the target which has been chosen."

Since the nuclear decision has to be taken within a few minutes and since it "involves a large number of considerations...a very intricate network of political and military judgments," the head of state considers that "there is no room for making mistakes."

French Television Channel 1 also interviewed General Guy Mery, who was armed forces chief of staff from June 1975 to July 1980.

After pointing out that it is in France's interests to "diversify its nuclear weapons" by studying a new strategic missile and a new class of submarine General Mery said he thinks that counterforce deterrence (as against countercity or countereconomic deterrence) "is not in keeping with our country's size" and moreover "would be completely stupid."

"It would be stupid to imagine that we could have a counterforce policy in the face of a possible aggressor greatly superior to us in size," the former armed forces chief of staff explained, "because, even if we had sufficiently accurate weapons, we would destroy a very small part of his total means and would therefore certainly be subjected to immediate reprisals."

General Mery then spoke in favor of the neutron bomb because it is possible to envisage situations "in which it would be difficult to fire at close quarters with the weapons we now have." "Hence the idea," he explained, "which seems logical and sensible, of trying to have weapons which, while destroying military potential, have as few collateral effects as possible, in other words do not have heat or blast effects, do not destroy houses or set fire to forests and so forth, so that they can be fired in relatively densely populated areas and also so that they can be fired nearer our troops without them suffering the effects of their own weapons and hence attain greater military efficacy from a purely technical military viewpoint."

UK WISH TO DEFER EC MIDEAST MOVE 'SURPRISING'

LD191043 Paris LE MONDE in French 16-17 Nov 80 p 4

[Text] Following Lord Carrington's remarks, reported in the INTERNATIONAL HERALD TRIBUNE of 14 November, to the effect that Britain will oppose any new initiative on the Near East conflict until President Reagan takes office, the Foreign Ministry has made it known that these statements "occasioned surprise in well-informed circles."

"Of course," the Quai d'Orsay communique adds, "it is natural for the United Kingdom to wish to make clear its own positions or, on the eve of a change of presidency in Washington, for it to be concerned to stress the interest it has in the permanence of the Anglo-American special relationship.

"What is, however, surprising is that such stances should be placed under the sign of Europe. Indeed, it is not clear how it is possible to advocate a strengthening of political cooperation while declaring that Europe must deny itself any initiative or must make its actions dependent on the political state of affairs in the United States."

Well-informed circles add that France still intends that the European Council which is to meet in Luxembourg on 1-2 December, should adopt a text enlarging on the main points of the declaration adopted by the Nine in Venice in June, various drafts for which have been discussed over several weeks. It is feared, however, that the British stance may intensify the hesitation of several member countries (notably the Netherlands and Belgium) which wished to postpone this discussion until later.

IRAQ OIL DELIVERIES TO CONTINUE DESPITE WAR

LD191448 Paris Domestic Service in French 1400 GMT 19 Nov 80

[Text] France will receive Iraqi oil before the end of the month, despite the continuation of the Iran-Iraq war. Baghdad has undertaken to deliver 70,000 barrels per day to the Total and Elf Aquitaine branches, which means that by the end of the year France should get 400,000 tons of oil from Iraq.

SENEGAL'S SENGHOR, GISCARD DISCUSS CHAD, AID

NC191848 Paris AFP in English 1834 GMT 19 Nov 80

[Text] Paris, 19 Nov (AFP)--Visiting Senegalese President Leopold-Sedar Senghor today called for a United Nations peace-keeping force to be sent into war-torn Chad. "I think it is time to call in the blue helmets. The OAU (Organization of African Unity) should take this initiative," he told newsmen after talks lasting more than one hour with President Valery Giscard d'Estaing.

The OAU had approved a resolution to this effect at its last summit in Freetown, Sierra Leone, he said, adding that the pan-African body's "Committee of 11", which has special responsibility for Chad, would be meeting in the near future, preferably at foreign minister level.

Mr Senghor, who discussed the fate of the troubled former French colony with Mr Giscard d'Estaing, said all Africans felt themselves concerned by an appeal to the African and international communities from the forces of rebel Chadian Defense Minister Hissein Habre earlier this week. Mr Habre's forces have repeatedly denounced Libyan intervention in the civil war on the side of President Goukouni Oueddei and the supporters of his Transitional Government of National Union.

Mr Senghor, who is on a private visit to France, also discussed the dispute over the phosphate-rich Western Sahara, in particular, the democratic process worked out by the OAU, and the UN, which he said "showed the way forward." He and the French president discussed a 10,000 million franc (2,000 million dollar) loan that France has just made available to Senegal for rural development projects, he added.

LE FIGARO URGES EUROPE-U.S. JOINT ACTION

LD191131 Paris LE FIGARO in French 14 Nov 80 pp 1,4

[Patrick Wajsman article: "Surviving Together"]

[Text] For the past 4 years many Europeans have criticized the White House's diplomatic methods, its chronic inability to follow a strong and coherent line, its shillyshallying and its improvizations. In a word they have criticized its weakness. Those critics were right: We were entitled to expect the world's leading democracy and our most faithful ally to show more talent and conviction in defending the free world.

What is stranger, however, is that some of these people who, only yesterday, were slamming Carter-the-weak are now starting to criticize Reagan-the-strong. Is it therefore the United States itself rather than the U.S. President which disturbs their comfortable serenity?

Indeed these disguised Americanophobes argue in a very strange way. Under Ronald Reagan's tough leadership, they say, the European Nine will be "taken in hand again" and will no longer be able, as in the past, to "make their voice heard" and to "collectively oppose Washington." But why in heaven's name must we systematically oppose our friends on the other side of the Atlantic? Is it so inconceivable that our interests and theirs should coincide? Unless I am mistaken it is possible to be a good European, a good German, a good Frenchman without considering it essential to dissociate ourselves from the United States on every small problem affecting the Atlantic camp's future. Did General de Gaulle himself--the great opponent of hegemonies in the sight of God--not understand that it is not enough to say no to the Americans to be independent? Did he not illustrate this deep conviction by unconditionally supporting our powerful partners in the Berlin and Cuban crises?

I repeat that I am not advocating alignment, servility or allegiance toward Washington. The days of valets are over (except in the Eastern bloc of course).

It seems to me, however, that the election of a man as determined as Ronald Reagan gives us Europeans a historic opportunity--the opportunity to establish with the United States a clear understanding based on the common perception of a common destiny and free from any slight pricking of superfluous pride. Now that we are facing the Soviet threat, quarrels of etiquette, disputes over precedence and superficial sensitivity between the old and the new world are inappropriate. It is a question, quite simply, of surviving together. That surely deserves some slight effort....

Such a course would, first, presuppose that we stop stalling every time Washington asks us to increase our arms spending. We have been living all too long with a comfortable idea: "It is up to the United States to bear most of the financial burden of the common defense system; it is up to Europe to benefit from the delights of detente." This division of roles ("You can have the stick, we will take the carrot") is fundamentally unsound, so unsound that some U.S. senators, disappointed by our "sacred egoism," could well decide to resurrect the Mansfield amendment which, 10 years ago, proposed reducing the number of GI's stationed on the old continent. Is there any need to point out that neither the FRG, France, nor, more especially, the small countries in the alliance would jump for joy if that idea were implemented? The conclusion which can be drawn from this is that it is up to us to choose.

A real transatlantic partnership would also require us to defend with Washington a strategy to stem and push back Soviet expansionism. This means that we would have to try to contain the USSR's imperialist maneuvers throughout the world and, if possible, win back the ground we have lost.

The reader, accustomed to hearing the European political class making appeasing and conciliatory remarks, may find such a suggestion utopian. And yet how many ambitious actions could be carried out with our U.S. friends!

First, we could decide to give large amounts of aid (notably in the form of arms) to all those who courageously resist the Soviets or their Cuban mercenaries: Jonas Savimbi's guerrillas in Angola and Allah's underground fighters in Afghanistan.

Second, we could resort more systematically to the grain weapon and have no hesitation in decreeing a general embargo on the consumer durables which the Moscow hierarchs and their East European satellites need so desparately to back up their development policy.

We could also ensure that the Kremlin incumbents understand that in the future we will have no hesitiation in playing the "Chinese card" and even--if Moscow persists in sending its tanks and MiG aircraft to the four corners of the world at any moment--in exploring ways of establishing real military cooperation with Beijing.

We could threaten the USSR with moves to destabilize its Muslim republics by stepping up what is known as the "psychological war,"

Finally, we could strengthen--whatever the cost--the most "exposed" links in the non-Marxist world (Egypt, Israel, Saudi Arabia, Turkey, Pakistan, South Africa, Thailand...) and thereby show the Soviets just how determined we are.

Let me make myself clearly understood to the reader. I am not saying that all these means of exerting pressure should be used simultaneously or that there is no alternative to them. I am simply saying that there should be a consensus on both sides of the Atlantic on the soundness of such methods. Jimmy Carter's inconsistency gave the Europeans marvellous pretext for not doing anything which might annoy the Kremlin; how can we possibly--people exclaimed in Paris and Bonn--follow a man whose strategy is as changeable as the weather forecast! This pretext has now vanished. The old world's leaders will have to make a choice on this point too.

I would like to say one final word in conclusion. The transatlantic partnership will really only see its hour of glory if Americans and Europeans agree to rally round the principle of refraining from political rivalry without any ulterior motives. This clearly means that every time Washington is in a better position than Europe to promote the cause of peace the Nine should either keep discreetly out of the way or back the U.S initiative, and vice versa. Unfortunately this rule is not often applied. Do you want an example of this, one which is not to our advantage? In the Israeli-Arab conflict the Nine have been striving for many months to cut the ground from under the Americans by criticizing the Camp David process and loudly calling for an illusory "all-embracing solution." Why? Why humor the PLO terrorists? Why seek the favor of Islamic oil states? Why bring the USSR back into the affair? Is it to have the satisfaction of attending the great reconciliation feast? For 30 years the Europeans have proved totally incapable of making any progress at all toward peace in the Middle East. Was it wise to choose the very moment when hope was finally being revived to give lessons in diplomacy to Cairo, Jerusalem and above all Washington?

Let us reiterate that this is not the right way to show solidarity. The members of the free world have behaved like members of a club for too long. The time has come for them to form a team.

POLLS TAKEN ON GISCARD RECORD, PRESIDENTIAL RACE

LD191021 Paris LE MONDE in French 18 Nov 80 p 8

[Text] According to an opinion poll published by LE MATIN on Monday, 17 November, 64 percent of the people questioned think that Giscard d'Estaing "has not kept his promises." This Louis Harris-France Institute investigation, questioning 1,000 people from 13-15 November, produced the following results: 26 percent of the people questioned think that the president of the republic has "more or less kept his promises" and 10 percent expressed no opinion. Some 35 percent would place their trust in Giscard d'Estaing to "bring about a change in French society after 1981," as against 25 percent who would place their trust in Mr Mitterrand and 32 percent in neither.

In the domestic policy sphere 35 percent trust Giscard d'Estaing--as against 31 percent who trust Mitterrand--to combat inflation and price rises; 41 percent think that Mitterrand is more capable of fighting unemployment than Giscard d'Estaing (24 percent think Giscard d'Estaing is more capable); 41 percent prefer the existing head of state to Mr Mitterrand (26 percent prefer Mitterrand) for guaranteeing security.

Finally, as regards the defense of individual freedom, Giscard d'Estaing and Mitterrand come out equal with 37 percent. In the foreign policy sphere, 50 percent of the people questioned trust Giscard d'Estaing--as against 23 percent who trust Mitterrand--to "guaraneee France's independence." In the second round of the presidential election Giscard d'Estaing would obtain 58 percent of the votes cast (down 1 percent) and Mitterrand would obtain 42 percent (70 1 percent).

According to another opinion poll published by the weekly LE POINT (for the week of 17-23 November), carried out by IFOP between 28 October and 8 November on a representative sample of 2,561 French people aged 18 years and over, Giscard d'Estaing would maintain a clear lead over all his declared or potential opponents in the presidential election; however, his record is judged to be "rather negative" by 42 percent of the people questioned (as against 37 percent in September 1980), while 40 percent think it is fairly positive (as against 46 percent in September 1980). In the second round of this election the incumbent president would win with 60 percent of the votes against Mitterrand (40 percent), but is down 1 point from September 1980 while Mitterrand is up 1 point. In the first round one of the hypotheses put forward by IFOP gives the following results: Giscard d'Estaing, 36 percent; Mitterrand, 18 percent; Marchais, 16 percent; Chirac, 8 percent; Debre, 7.5 percent; B. Lalonde 6 percent.

PCP PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE BRITO ISSUES STATEMENT

LD191135 Lisbon AVANTE! in Portuguese 5 Nov 80 p 3

[Statement issued on 4 November by Carlos Brito, Portuguese Communist Party candidate for the presidency]

[Text] I

Because of the state body at which it is aimed and the political conditions under which it is held, the election to the presidency of the republic is of decisive importance in national life.

The effects of its results on the course of the democratic system and on the Portuguese people's vital interests and deepest aspirations are becoming increasingly clear.

The attainment by the reactionary forces of the presidency of the republic, added to the "Democratic Alliance's" control of the Assembly of the Republic and the government, would represent the attainment by reaction of all political power and the creation of more favorable conditions for developing its plans for an unconstitutional revision of the constitution, the restoration of state monopoly capitalism, the imposition of increasing restrictions on citizens' rights and freedoms, the elimination of the gains of April and total subordination of national interests to imperialism's dictates, along the path toward setting up another dictatorship.

The central, decisive and priority task of the democratic forces and all antifascists is therefore to defeat reaction's candidate, General Soares Carneiro, and to prevent the highest post in democratic Portugal from being held by a figure wholly committed to the ideas, values and methods of the past, gravely compromised by association with the fascist and colonialist regime and fundamentally hostile to 25 April, the workers and democracy.

Defeating Soares Carneiro--this is the path which the cause of freedom and democracy points out for confident, firm and determined action by all Portuguese men and women with democratic sentiments.

Defeating Soares Carneiro--this is the outcome to which the putting forward of my candidacy by the PCP and the information campaign which will be conducted around it are principally aimed at contributing.

II

The role which rests with the president of the republic in guaranteeing and defending the democratic system is one of the essential issues for each candidacy to clarify.

Under our constitutional system, exercising government tasks does not rest with the president of the republic. But the constitution bestows on him vast powers and capabilities for ensuring the defense of the system and exercising a general positive influence on national policy.

In order to achieve these aims, it is necessary, in our opinion, for the president of the republic's activity to be inspired by the following basic guidelines:

1. To respect and enforce the constitution, as one of the most important foundations of the stability of the democratic state.

The fact that the new presidential term of office coincides with a possible process of revision of the constitution does not alter this principle. On the contrary, it presupposes that the president of the republic will strive to ensure that the revision of the constitution strictly respects the rules laid down in the constitution itself, specifically as regards the necessity of a two-thirds majority for each amendment and as regards scrupulous respect for the essential characteristics of the system, which are not open to amendment, in accordance with the constitution's provisions themselves. It requires that any forms of unconstitutional revision of the constitution--specifically through unconstitutional recourse to a referendum, which would constitute a veritable coup--be firmly prevented.

2. To ensure under all circumstances citizens' rights and freedoms and the country's democratic life. Freedom of the press without any forms of censorship, and pluralism and independence in the state-owned news media, freedom of formation and activity of political parties, freedom of association, assembly and demonstration, religious freedom, trade union freedom and the right to strike will have to be guaranteed.

The safeguarding of workers' rights, the protection of citizens against discrimination on ideological and political grounds, guarantees for the opposition's rights and the guaranteeing of the democratic nature of the electoral process--preventing specifically the imposition by the present government and the present parliamentary majority of an antidemocratic electoral law whereby they would seek to remain in power contrary to the people's will--are of particular importance in the near future.

3. To contribute decisively to the stability and regular functioning of the democratic institutions, to the unity of the armed forces in defending the democratic system and national independence, to consolidating and strengthening local power and to developing regional autonomy within the framework of the unity of the state.

4. To guarantee the continuation of the economic and social transformations effected in the process of democratizing national life--specifically, the nationalization measures, the agrarian reform, control of management and workers' rights--which constituted measures essential for defending democracy and the national economy and are now an integral and inseparable part of the democratic system, a precondition for defending political democracy itself and a fundamental basis from the viewpoint of national progress and Portugal's independent development.

5. To make an active contribution within his own sphere of activity to implementing a national policy in keeping with the people's will and aspirations and with safeguarding national independence and unity.

Specifically:

--By contributing to the implementation of a policy of economic development and national progress based on the mobilization of national resources and energies, on support for the various sectors of the national economy so as to guarantee its maximum contribution to the creation of wealth, on the boosting of major projects of national interest, on the general galvanization of production activities and modernization of the production apparatus, on harmonization of national and regional development and on encouragement of creative participation by workers;

--By contributing to the implementation of a policy of prosperity aimed at improving the population's living conditions by containing prices, an increase in wages, benefits and pensions, the guaranteeing of and stability in employment, creating new jobs, correcting tax injustices, and improving social security, the health services and housing conditions;

--By contributing to the implementation of a policy of education and culture at the service of democracy and social progress which will democratize access to education, ensure the enjoyment and creation of culture by broad masses and promote the democratic education of the younger generation and its contribution to resolving the nation's problems;

--By contributing to the implementation of a foreign policy of independence, peace and cooperation, inspired by the fundamental principle that it is solely for the Portuguese to decide the national interests and firmly oriented toward diversifying Portugal's external relations, and specifically toward strengthening relations with the new Portuguese-speaking African countries and toward an active and responsible role on the international scene in a manner favorable to the cause of peace, detente, disarmament and the intensification of relations of international cooperation, respecting national sovereignty, mutual interests and the principle of noninterference in other states' internal affairs.

III

Under present conditions, a PCP candidacy--my candidacy--has become an essential form of involvement, both because the PCP alone is in a position consistently to unmask and combat reaction's candidacy and in order to bring about a clarification which will make it possible to reveal where the principal enemy and danger lies and what the best and most effective means for combating and defeating him are.

And it is for this reason that our election campaign will develop specifically around the following fundamental aims:

--To explain the significance of this presidential election and the importance of its results in the life of the Portuguese people;

--To contribute actively to mobilizing the antifascist electorate, combating abstention, with a view to ensuring defeat for the reactionary forces' candidate;

--To contribute to creating conditions more favorable to unity and understanding among the democratic forces and among all antifascists, as an essential precondition for defending and continuing Portuguese democracy.

We will follow closely the progress of our candidacy, the election campaign as a whole and the clarification of the other candidates' stances and of the political situation in general.

It will be on the basis of these factors that we will decide at the proper time whether the candidacy should go as far as the election or should be withdrawn before then, and, in that event, whether we will urge people to vote for another candidate capable of defeating reaction's candidate and offering guarantees that the democratic system will be defeated.

Portuguese democracy has the strength, will and ability to defeat the threat of reaction and fascism.

However, the presidential election campaign will be a difficult battle for the democratic forces. It will be conducted at a time when the government and the assembly of the republic are dominated by reactionary forces which are seeking to hamper and prevent the normal functioning of the democratic system and to use the state apparatus, its resources and the news media to help their candidate to the detriment of the remainder and in this way to falsify once more the expression of the Portuguese people's will.

Reaction also finds its activity facilitated by those who, at what is admittedly a difficult bend for democracy, are taking part in the presidential election not in order to explain but to confuse, not in order to tell the people the truth but to sell old and defeated illusions, not in order to serve democracy but to serve themselves at democracy's expense, not in order to unite democrats in the direction of victory but to split them and lead to defeat.

The central and priority aim in this election--barring the way to reaction's onslaught on the presidency of the republic--can be achieved.

It is with this conviction and confidence that, as a candidate in the presidential election, I address all Communist Party members, all democrats and all those who, by casting their votes for the PCP and the United People's Alliance have displayed high awareness of the interests of our people and our country, calling for their active participation and confident commitment in this election campaign, in this new battle to defend freedom and democracy.

PCP CRITICIZES DO AMARAL'S 17 NOV TV ADDRESS

LD191610 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1500 GMT 19 Nov 80

[Text] The PCP has issued a communique commenting on the televised address made on 17 November by Prof Freitas do Amaral.

The PCP holds the view that Freitas do Amaral is waving the anticommunist bogey of the Soviet threat so as to manipulate the feelings of the Portuguese people. The communique goes on to say: The general tone of the address was one of primary anti-Sovietism used to justify a policy which, demagogically presented as one of broad international relations, is in fact a policy of total subjection to imperialism, to the monopolies of the EEC and to the U.S. and Atlantic bloc military-industrial comples.

The communique further states that Freitas do Amaral speaks as an instigator of the cold war and of the worsening of international tension, without a single reference to a policy of peace, detente and disarmament.

MADRID REVIEWS 18, 19 NOV SPEECHES AT CSCE

18 November Speeches

LD181722 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1400 GMT 18 Nov 80

[Special correspondent Jose Manuel Salgado report from Madrid's Palace of Congresses]

[Text] Many speeches were made at this morning's CSCE session which, like yesterday's, was a closed session. Among them was a speech by Spanish delegation chief Javier Ruperez. The speeches made by the two Germanies and France can be described, along with the Spanish one, as the most important. Both the FRG and France went on the offensive on the subject of Afghanistan. For the French, for instance, this represents not simply a violation of the principles set out in the Helsinki Final Act but something more serious which, and I quote, endangers East-West relations. And it calls for a rapid solution of the problem so as to be able to approach other problems with a greater spirit of detente.

The East German delegate criticized the Americans rather harshly, saying that they are trying to turn the Madrid conference into a forum of confrontation and that if they continue in that way they will endanger the outcome of the conference itself.

Work will continue this afternoon after the public addresses to be made by representatives of the UN Economic Committee and UNESCO.

19 November Speeches

LD200308 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2105 GMT 20 Nov 80

[Text] Today the speeches on the subjects of security and general principles came to an end at the Madrid conference, and those on economic and other kinds of cooperation between the 35 countries which signed the Helsinki Act began.

As a prologue to the day, the participants visited the king of Spain and talked about the work of the conference.

Noteworthy among this morning's speeches was that of Austria, whose representative, Franz Ceska, set out what could be considered as the point of view of the neutral countries on a possible disarmament conference.

From this afternoon's discussion on cooperation mention must be made of the address by the U.S. representative, who defended above all the legality of an international right to impose economic sanctions on countries--which means Eastern countries--when they break the norms of international law. He also stressed that scientific cooperation has been interrupted on numerous occasions as a result of a unilateral decision by American citizens and without the intervention of their government.

In the opinion of the Austrian delegate, detente is universal and indivisible, and he added a new concept: that of the responsibility of the 35 signatory states of the Helsinki Act as regards what these countries do, whether alone or in blocs. With regard to the subject of disarmament Ceska said that the measures of trust do not replace the measures of disarmament, which must be carried out over all of Europe. At the Madrid conference, he said, a substantive agreement must be reached and the disarmament conference in the framework of security and cooperation should result from it. In his opinion, this is the best, if not the only way to detente, and he is a convinced supporter of the continuation of the conference.

On the part of the socialist bloc the Bulgarian delegate, (Stefan Staykov) condemned the increase in NATO military budgets, the deployment of U.S. medium-range missiles in Europe and the threats of a cold war.

The delegates from Portugal, Greece and Ireland--for the group of Western countries--stressed the indivisibility of detente and the criticism of the invasion of Afghanistan and the violation of human rights.

The Vatican delegation defended the religious freedom of the individual.

The chief of the Spanish delegation, Ambassador Javier Ruperez, today chaired the meeting which was held behind closed doors.

PSOE LEADER REJECTS IDEA OF COALITION WITH UCD

LD191201 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 12 Nov 80 pp 1, 13

[Excerpt] Felipe Gonzalez, secretary general of the Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE], has sent a circular to all his comrades in which he seeks to end the polemic over a possible coalition government with the Union of the Democratic Center [UCD]. He states in the message that the Socialists will not request that way out of the political situation but will continue their "strategy of responsible opposition." At the same time the Socialist parliamentary group of congress yesterday reelected its permanent committee after analyzing a document in which 12 deputies demand greater internal clarity and democracy. The majority of the suggestions contained in this document will apparently be adopted by the group's leadership.

The aforementioned circular from Felipe Gonzalez, dated Monday, 10 November, is addressed specifically to the parties and federations of the nationalities and regions and abroad, to the federal committee and to the members of parliament, and it states, in full:

"With regard to the avalanche of news, sometimes confused, in recent days, I wish to elucidate clearly the situation. The party will be true to the political resolution of its congress and to the decisions of the federal committee, which you all know. Consequently, despite the individual, worthy opinions of some comrades, the PSOE does not wish for and will not request a coalition government.

"On the contrary," Felipe Gonzalez' circular continues, "the PSOE will continue its strategy of responsible opposition to the present government and will contest the next election in the confidence that the majority of workers and other sections of citizens will support the party.

"The situation is difficult, and the party needs a combined effort to strengthen the socioeconomic and political strategy which we have been developing on all fronts.

"Those responsible on the federal committee will have to report on the debate and the resolution of the meeting of 18-19 October to avoid the spread of a climate of confusion.

"Socialist greetings

"[Signed] Felipe Gonzalez, secretary general."

YA ON REAGAN VICTORY, REVITALIZED SPANISH-U.S. TIES

LD190947 Madrid YA in Spanish 14 Nov 80 p 7

[Editorial: "New Stage in Spanish-U.S. Relations"]

[Text] Ronald Reagan's election as U.S. president will have profound repercussions on our country and in any case marks a new stage in Spanish-U.S. relations. Pending Carter's reelection or otherwise, these relations remained paralyzed for too long--for longer than the man who still occupies the White House devoted to his unsuccessful election campaign. Though it is not inappropriate to speak in terms of a power vacuum, to some extent, in the United States until the change of president on 20 January, it is most likely that Washington-Madrid relations will experience a necessary impulse in the coming months.

There are two fundamental topics that the Spanish and U.S. administrations have to consider: the renovation of the present Spanish-U.S. treaty or the renegotiation of a new one and Spain's possible future entry into the Atlantic alliance. Both issues have been shelved at the wishes of both Spain and the United States. With shared responsibility, Madrid and Washington have postponed their conversations, especially on the bilateral treaty. Now neither side can make excuses for not broaching it, allowing only for the amount of time it will take Reagan and his administration to adopt stances following 20 January.

Republican control in the Senate will strengthen Reagan in his view of relations with Spain, while it presents Madrid with an entirely new situation which will definitely influence both the form and the essence of the new treaty, which must be signed by next September. Ruling out its cancellation, Spain and the United States will most likely consider its complete revision and renegotiation. Whether or not the treaty is linked to the NATO issues, Spain's present circumstances demand that the United States behave differently toward Spain, on the basis of complete equality and observing the timetable for our country's rapprochement to the Atlantic alliance.

Because if Carter, taking advantage of the Suarez government's explicit wish to link Spain to the Atlantic alliance in due course, stated his support for the Spanish initiative, it is to be expected that Reagan, in his aim to revitalize Western defense, will not fail to express U.S. wishes to see our country in NATO soon. It is of no importance that official State Department sources have pointed to Spain's slight or almost nonexistent contribution to this defense. It is apparently a political hand which the United States wants to win from the Soviet Union and in which Reagan is willing to play even tougher than Carter.

NORWAY

'CAUTIOUS HOPE' ABOUT FISHING ACCORD WITH USSR

LD191735 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 15 Nov 80 p 18

[Morten Fyhn report: "'Useful' Jan Mayen Meeting"]

[Text] The 4-day meeting between the Soviet Union and Norway on the Jan Mayen fisheries zone ended yesterday without the Russians withdrawing their reservations against the zone. The Norwegian delegation nevertheless described the meeting as "useful."

Foreign Ministry press spokesman Geir Grung announced that the parties dealt with legal questions relating to the zone and various misunderstandings on the Soviet side. The Russians stressed the importance of their fishing in the zone and will now return home to further consider their view of the zone. Another meeting has not been arranged. Norway has made it clear that questions to do with fishing in the Jan Mayen Zone will now have to be raised in the permanent fisheries commission between the two countries.

After the meeting there is cautious hope on the Norwegian side that the Soviet reservations to the Jan Mayen Zone will now be dropped.

Ambassador Jens Evensen led the Norwegian delegation.

LABOR PARTY FAVORS UN-PROPOSED NUCLEAR-FREE ZONE

LD191840 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1530 GMT 19 Nov 80

[Text] In a speech in Oslo last night, Reiulf Steen, chairman of the Norwegian Labor Party, proposed the establishment of a nuclear-free zone in the north in a wider European context on the basis of the recommendation by the UN disarmament conference. Chairman Steen's proposal for a nuclear-free north would in addition to the Nordic countries also cover the Soviet Kola Peninsula and the east coast of the Baltic.

Here is a report by Ulla-Maria Johansen:

[Begin Johansen recording] It seems that the aim to create a nuclear-free zone in the north has entered the Norwegian security political debate to stay. A few weeks ago the Labor Party's former minister of the law of the sea, Jens Evensen, proposed the establishment of a nuclear-free zone on the basis of the proposal made in the past by Finnish President Kekkonen. Now the turn has come to the party's chairman, Reiulf Steen, who in a speech delivered yesterday noted that the establishment of a nuclear-free zone in the north should be the aim of the Norwegian labor movement, and that this should take place as part of a wider European context for the creation of nuclear-free zones in Europe. The aim of a nuclear-free north will be part of the Norwegian Labor Party's working program for the next 4-year period. This is a new stand by the Labor Party insofar as the party now recognizes the need for a nuclear-free zone in the north, which it has not done before. Chairman Steen's proposal is based on the UN disarmament conference's recommendation for establishment of nuclear-free zones, and is reciprocal by nature. In other words, in the form proposed by Chairman Steen, a nuclear-free north will also cover the Soviet Kola Peninsula and the east coast of the Baltic. Steen believes that the tactical nuclear weapons in the Kola Peninsula will at some time be included in the negotiations.

As a contrast to the statements by Chairman Steen, the Storting did not today talk much about disarmament. In the current debate on the defense budget, defense appropriations will be increased by 3 percent in accordance with government and NATO proposals.

The majority of the defense committee, the nonsocialist parties, are demanding an increase of 4 percent. The issue of storing American military equipment in central Norway dominated the budget debate. According to Defense Minister Stoltenberg the government will submit a report on this to the Storting in early December.

All parties, with the exception of the Socialist Left Party and the Liberals, regard the storage of military equipment as necessary. Per Utsi, a deputy of the Labor Party and member of the defense committee, noted that the storage of the American equipment in Trondelag in central Norway will safeguard Norway's own defense and will at the same time have a reassuring effect on Norway's neighboring countries. It seems that in time to come the plan to store American heavy military equipment will not be defeated in the Norwegian Storting at least. [end recording]

AFTENPOSTEN REPORTS ON NORWAY'S RELATIONSHIP WITH EEC

LD191207 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 11 Nov 80 p 9

[Per Nordrum report: "Norwegian 'Special Position' in Relations With EEC"]

[Text] Brussels, 10 November--Norway is in the process of achieving a special position in its relations with the EEC. Beginning next summer the two sides will hold regular annual meetings at ministerial level as part of the increased contacts aimed at expanding practical cooperation. This became clear during Prime Minister Odvar Nordli's talks with top EEC leaders in Brussels on Monday [10 November].

The prime minister also raised the question of the Norwegian wish to be linked to the EEC nations' increasingly important foreign policy cooperation. He was told that any formal link was out of the question, but at the same time the Commission's leaders said that Norway should contact the chairman of the EEC Council of Ministers to seek closer ties with this aspect of the cooperation between the Nine.

If such informal cooperation between the chairman and Norway should start to develop, this would represent something completely new in the Community's relations with a country which is not a member of the EEC. And it is clear that there are no other countries lining up behind Norway in this respect.

In less than 2 weeks EEC President Roy Jenkins will visit Sweden. On Monday a prominent EEC spokesman was able to say that Sweden is in no way "waiting its turn" either to have one of the semiannual meetings in the so-called mixed committee (which review the implementation of the trade agreement raised to ministerial level), or to achieve closer contact with the EEC's foreign policy cooperation.

At a press conference on Monday, Prime Minister Nordli attached great importance to the reasons the parties have for further developing the cooperation which has grown up, for example, between government members and the EEC Commission. However, he was unable to say anything definite about what developments could be expected in the wake of the new forms for contacts and cooperation.

It was the EEC Commission that had made the formal proposal for ministerial level meetings in the mixed committee. However, Norway and the EEC have been in contact for a considerable time about just this matter and the parties have been moving toward each other step by step, EEC sources said. By all accounts it is more suitable politically if the initiative comes from the EEC.

The first meeting will take place in Oslo next spring. It has still not been decided which minister or ministers will meet. It is possible that representatives will vary depending on which matters are of central concern.

Nordli's visit is the first a Norwegian prime minister has made to Brussels since Norway said no to EEC membership in 1972. No other prime minister from an EFTA [European Free Trade Association] country has had such a warm reception in Brussels. The prime minister and his retinue have been flattered by profuse and warm words about what great importance the EEC attaches to its ties with Norway.

Since 1972 "we have succeeded in building up a very special relationship," President Jenkins said. "I have always been convinced that, even though it does lie on the edge of Europe, Norway must continue to play an important role in Western European politics."

Prime Minister Nordli outlined relations between Norway and the EEC for the foreseeable future. He attached remarkably great importance to the EEC as a "stabilizing element, as well as a force for increased cooperation on our continent."

"As far as Atlantic ties are concerned, we see a dynamic progressive community as a prerequisite for equal and harmonious cooperation," Nordli said, adding that international cooperation had been enriched by a new and influential voice through the Nine's foreign policy cooperation.

"Norway does not take part in the political cooperation between the Community's member states. On the other hand, we need to keep up with events as well as possible and at the same time to introduce our own views into the European political cooperation," the prime minister said.

EEC circles admit Norway's growing need for contact with foreign policy cooperation since the EEC has become more active in the political arena, and Norway's other main partner--the United States--has lost some of its position, an EEC spokesman said on Monday.

"We will have to add a little more flesh to the bones of the relationship with Norway. In addition, the EEC does not wish its imminent expansion to include Greece, Portugal and Spain to give our partners in the north the feeling that the center of gravity has been shifted to the south and that the Scandinavian countries have become more peripheral."

But it is fairly certain that Sweden and other EFTA nations are not looking for the same ties with the EEC that Norway is in the process of developing during the prime minister's visit, which can already be described as extremely important and successful.

EEC circles explain this by the fact that Norway is a NATO country. However, EEC circles dismiss the suggestion that the EEC wants a special relationship with Norway because of North Sea oil.

The Commission thus advised Norway to seek direct contact with the chairman of the EEC Council of Ministers in order to obtain greater insight into or contact with the foreign policy cooperation. The council includes ministers from members nations' governments and it is the organ in which the most important decisions in the EEC are taken. Foreign policy cooperation is really only carried on in parallel with the rest of the EEC's formal cooperation.

Now that Norway has begun its approach to cooperation in the hope of being heard as well as informed, Netherlands Foreign Minister Christoph van der Klaauw will be the "contact man" from the end of the year. The post of chairman of the Council of Ministers is changed every 6 months. At present Luxembourg Foreign Minister Gaston Thorn occupies the chair. Thorn, who takes over as president of the EEC Commission on 1 January, can be expected to play a positive role in the development of contacts in the foreign policy field.

However, it is still unclear what form the Norwegian contacts with foreign policy cooperation will take. Both parties have agreed that any form of formal contact is out of the question.

In an informal conversation with the Commission's "Foreign Minister" Wilhelm Haferkamp, Prime Minister Nordli raised the question of the fisheries problems between Norway and the EEC. Haferkamp thought that there was good reason to hope for a solution to the problems, since the prospects for a joint EEC fisheries policy were now brighter than ever.

SWEDEN

SOVIET PLANS TO DOWN CRUISE MISSILES DISCOUNTED

LD191252 Stockholm International Service in Swedish 1000 GMT 19 Nov 80

["Radio Magazine" program]

[Text] The Swedish defense leadership is irritated over Soviet views that a nuclear war can be started over Sweden. Such arguments were presented in an article in DAGENS NYHETER recently. A Soviet journalist warned that the Soviet Union may shoot down American curise missiles loaded with nuclear charges over Sweden. The article is now arousing irritation in the Swedish defense leadership and at the Foreign Ministry. Very remarkable, says the Foreign Ministry.

[Reporter Staffan Ekendahl] The Swedish leadership and the Foreign Ministry have reacted very sharply to a Soviet statement inplying Sweden may be affected by the horrors of a nuclear war regardless of its neutral status. The threat, or warning, was issued a week ago by Soviet journalist Ilya Barankikas who is connected with the Soviet semiofficial news agency, APN. He stresses the cruise missiles which NATO is planning to deploy in West Europe can be directed against the Soviet Union party over the territories of the Nordic countries. Because Soviet radar surveillance, according to Barankikas, is very effective the cruise missiles will be discovered at an early stage on their course and shot down by Soviet antimissile homing missiles. The result may be explosions of nuclear charges over the territories of the Nordic countries.

Commenting on these allegations, Maj Gen Carl Bjoerman, chief of staff of the southern military district, says the picture given is unlikely from the point of view of weapons technology. Soviet instruments for countermeasures cannot be effectively operated against the cruise missiles unless these instruments are stationed on the territories of the Nordic countries. The general thinks that the Soviet commentator in fact means that in a crisis situation the Nordic countries would be subjected to a considerably greater risk than the missiles, namely an occupation from the East.

Now one may naturally ask what weight the Soviet journalist's statements carry. It is obvious he cannot issue such threats or warnings without sanction from higher quarters. But the Soviet side's motives are probably aimed at a propaganda effect primarily: They want Sweden and the other Nordic countries to react indignantly to this new threat against Nordic security and to protest NATO's plans. In the background is certainly also the hope to achieve greater interest in the constant efforts of Finnish President Urho Kekkonen to form a nuclear-free zone in northern Europe. This matter was most recently taken up during Kekkonen's recent visit to Moscow.

But, regardless of the motives of the article by the APN journalist in DAGENS NYHETER on 11 November, both anxiety and anger are aroused, not least as regards the Swedish Government. This is what Foreign Ministry spokesman Erik Pierre has to say:

[Begin recording] [Pierre] We think it is extremely remarkable that the Soviet Union permits the intimation that they have any right whatever to shoot down cruise missiles over Swedish territory. We find it extremely remarkable, and we find it difficult to believe that this is likely to reflect the official Soviet view.

[Question] Have they any means of shooting down cruise missiles over Sweden?

[Answer] Not even that, because as far as we can tell it would be necessary to have an airborne radar system and fighter planes constantly in the air, and for the time being this is not available in the Soviet Union. [end recording]

LD201100 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 0940 GMT 20 Nov 80

Measures will be brought forward on company law and insurance.

My government will continue to ensure that the nation's energy resources are appropriately developed and efficiently used. Legislation will be introduced to assist the conservation of energy and to impose a levy on the British Gas Corporation for specified gas purchases.

In Northern Ireland my government will continue in its efforts to protect all members of the community against violence and terrorism, to foster its economic recovery, and to create arrangements for the government of Northern Ireland that will better meet the needs of all its people.

My government are firmly committed to the maintenance of law and order in all parts of the United Kingdom. They will introduce legislation to improve the criminal law including repeal of the suspected person offence and will develop plans for giving effect to the proposals in the recent white paper on young offenders.

A bill will be introduced to change the law on nationality on the lines of the white paper published last July. Legislation will be brought forward to facilitate the education of children with special needs. Measures to improve the law in Scotland relating to education and to local government and to protect wives' home rights will be laid before you. My government will propose measures to improve road safety.

Pensions, war pensions and other social security benefits will be increased on November 24 and reviewed again next year. Legislation will be brought forward to place a duty on employers to provide sick pay for their employees during the early weeks of sickness.

Legislation will also be laid before you to promote the conservation of wild life and the countryside.

A bill will be introduced to reform the law of contempt of court.

Other measures will be laid before you.

My lords and members of the House of Commons, I pray that the blessing of almighty God may rest upon your counsels.

AGRICULTURE CHIEF BACKS COMMON AGRICULTURAL POLICY

LD181315 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 18 Nov 80 p 4

[Allan Osborn dispatch: "CAP Defended by Walker"]

[Text] Brussels--Britain will seek "creative changes" in the Common Agricultural Policy [CAP] when it holds the EEC presidency next year Mr Walker, agriculture minister, said yesterday. In a speech to the British Conservative Association in Brussels last night Mr Walker said it was important to demolish several myths about the CAP. It could take four to five years to bring about a "sensible" pattern of farm production in the Community, he said. Mr Walker's speech marked a clear break with the harsh anti-CAP line taken by Mr Silkin, his predecessor in the Ministry of Agriculture.

Some observers here regarded it as the strongest justification made of the CAP by a British minister since we joined the Community. Mr Walker said it was false that other EEC policies had been deprived of money because farming took so much. "There are no other policies organized on a European basis," he declared. Under the CAP, agriculture spending represented half of one per cent of the gross domestic production on the Community. "For this payment we received a security of food supplies and a stability that we would not otherwise enjoy," he went on. Progress was being made in cutting back food surpluses, Mr Walker said. While "a large and unwanted dairy surplus is not defensible it is defensible for Europe to have security in supply of a basic product such as grain... to have a commodity in store that could be easily disposed of throughout the world is not a weakness."

He said it was generally accepted that the number of consumers in the world could rise by 50 per cent in the next 20 years. "Against that fact we must not make the mistake of believing that there is an easy solution delightful to consumers of jettisoning our support for European agriculture in order to buy at the world's cheapest prices. Such a concept is but an illusion." Nevertheless, said Mr Walker, "we have a dairy surplus that is expensive, that dominates the CAP budget and that produces a commodity not ideal to meet world demand." "We must agree a method by which this production is reduced over a period of years and seek other types of agricultural production and suited to European and world demand," he said.

Criticism of Stance

LD181317 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 19 Nov 80 p 16

[Editorial: "Europe and Realities"]

[Text] Signs that the government, if not yet the British public, is warming towards Europe are now unmistakeable. Mrs Thatcher's press conferece in Bonn and Lord Carrington's speech in Hamburg on Monday both rang with the conviction that Britain belongs in the European Community and would suffer incalculable loss by withdrawing. Yet both tempered their enthusiasm with the observation that important reforms are needed of EEC policies, in particular for the budget and the Common Agricultural Policy. It is therefore both surprising and dismaying to find that on the very same day the agriculture minister, Mr Walker, delivered such an unabashed eulogy of the CAP that one French newspaper yesterday described it as "the biggest conversion since Paul."

Some of Mr Walker's points are valid. The food surpluses today are not as scandalous as they were two or three years ago. It is vital that Europe be self-sufficient in such a basic product as grain, and there is no guarantee that present world prices for many foodstuffs would remain below EEC prices if the Community--or even Britain alone--entered the market. It is right that a price should be paid to secure the survival of our agriculture. But that price is too high at the moment. Mr Walker said it was a myth that the CAP had deprived other Community policies of funds. Yet such is the structure of the budget that 75 per cent of all EEC spending--a colossal 8,000 million pounds sterling--goes towards farming each year, most of it in price supports.

Government officials are at pains to play down reports of disagreements between Mr Walker and the Foreign Office yet it is scarcely conceivable that Lord Carrington could have spoken about the CAP without once using the word "reform." Mr Walker moreover spoke of a rearrangement of European agriculture "within a four-to-five period." This is surely too timid. In a year, or little longer, the EEC will have exhausted its present sources of finance and will have to plead with governments for more money. That will be a unique opportunity to demand fundamental changes in farm spending that can only have the effect of benefiting the Community and improving our own financial position within it. Yesterday's announcement of a new Conservative back-bench group to seek reforms in the EEC underlines the scepticism and hostility with which the Community is so often regarded by the public nowadays and renders doubly ill-advised the kind of glosses which Mr Walker wants to put on its worst features.

THIRD ROUND OF INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS OPENS 19 NOV

NC191707 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1600 GMT 19 Nov 80

[Text] The third round of the inter-Cypriot talks began today at the Ledra Palace Hotel in Nicosia with a fresh meeting that is continuing the discussion of the question of Varosha's resettlement.

In a statement prior to the meeting, the UN secretary general's special envoy, Gobbi, said that the third round of the intercommunal talks opened today, adding: We maintain the same hopes as always. Asked about the missing persons issue and the Turkish Cypriot leader's threat to interrupt the talks if this issue was raised at the negotiating table, Gobbi said he would not like to comment on Denktas' statement. He added, however, that he had great hopes that the dialogue would continue. He said the Turkish Cypriot community is firmly resolved to continue the talks.

In connection with the missing persons issue, Gobbi said that pertinent consultations were being held within the framework of the UN resolution that also envisaged the establishment of appropriate machinery for tracing the fate of missing persons. He added: I am working on the problem and exchanging ideas with both sides so that the appropriate machinery can be set up. Asked whether this question had already been raised at the talks, Gobbi said that the dialogue was confidential and that he could not disclose anything.

Answering another question, Gobbi said that the proposals submitted about Varosha were constructive in some ways but of course were not always absolutely definite. He said: There are initial approaches to an important problem that allow a lagge amount of leeway for further developments.

Asked about the precise meaning of the phrase "resettlement of Varosha under UN auspices," Gobbi said: The phrase "under UN auspices" has established the principle that the United Nations will assist in the resettlement if agreement is reached and will provide the necessary machinery to achieve this goal. Asked whether the United Nations would also provide the administrative machinery, Gobbi said that this would be done if necessary.

Ioannidhis, the representative of the Greek Cypriot side to the talks, in his statement expressed the hope that a constructive discussion would be held at the meeting. He added: Our proposals and some proposals by the Turkish Cypriots are at the table. We consider the question of Varosha's resettlement critical in the sense that if it is constructively approached by the Turkish Cypriots, it will probably open the road to substantive negotiations.

Ioannidhis declined to comment on Denktas' statement and threats concerning the missing persons issue. He added: I prefer to refrain from commenting on this statement to maintain the good climate and good atmosphere of the talks.

Bayrak Radio Report

TA191638 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1530 GMT 19 Nov 80

[Text] The third round of intercommunal talks aimed at finding a peaceful solution to the Cyprus problem began today. Turkish Cypriot negotiator Umit Suleyman Onan and his Greek Cypriot counterpart Ionnnidhis met at the Ledra Palace Hotel in Lefkosa [Nicosia] at 1645 today.

Replying to questions by correspondents Onan said that the issue of Maras [Varosha] would be discussed in the meeting. He added that the Greek Cypriot reply to proposals made by the Turkish Cypriot side on this subject would be taken up. Onan said that Turkish proposals submitted earlier to the Greek Cypriot side were mostly concrete proposals that covered all the aspects of the Maras issue.

Also speaking before the talks resumed, Ioannidhis said that they considered the Maras issue as being of great importance and added that in the event the Turkish Cypriot side also dealt with the issue in a (substantial) way meaningful discussions could take place.

In reply to questions by journalists before the meeting, Juan Gobbi, the UN secretary general's special representative in Cyprus, said that he was still optimistic about the outcome of the talks. Replying to a question by a journalist in regard to the statement by Turkish Cypriot President Denktas to the effect that in the event the issue of missing persons would be brought up in the talks, the talks would be broken off, Gobbi replied that he did not interpret Denktas' statement in this way.

Recalling that next month a break of about 30 days would be given to the intercommunal talks, Onan said that he would participate in the meetings to be held by the Working Committee on Missing Perons to be held in Geneva on 8 and 12 December. The committee, which is meeting under the auspices of the United Nations, will conduct work on problems related with missing persons all over the world.

UN Communique on Session

NC191821 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1730 GMT 19 Nov 80

[Excerpt] The third round of the inter-Cypriot talks began today at the Ledra Palace Hotel. The meeting, which lasted 3 and 1/2 hours, continued the discussion of the question of Varosha's resettlement. A UN communique says that during the meeting, both parties proceeded with an extensive exploration of their views and had a very constructive and sincere exchange in the same friendly atmosphere that prevailed during earlier meetings. The next meeting will be held on 26 November. The communique adds: The 26 November meeting will continue the discussion of the question of the initial, practical measures by each side for promoting good will, mutual confidence and a return to normal conditions as envisaged by point six in the 19 May agreement.

Turkish Cypriot's Remarks

NC201105 Nicosia ELEVTHERI KIPROS in Greek 20 Nov 80 pp 1, 7

[Excerpt] In reply to journalists' questions on his arrival at the intercommunal talks, Turkish Cypriot representative Onan stated that he will go to Geneva at the beginning of December in order to participate in the working group meeting on missing persons. He also said that the intercommunal talks will be suspended around 10 December due to Gobbi's Christmas holidays in New York.

Mr. Onan stated that the Turkish Cypriot side's proposals on Varosha were described by certain circles, as he referred to them, as very positive. He also said that he expected to listen to and exchange views with the Greek Cypriot side in order to ascertain common points of view. He said that the Turkish Cypriot proposals on the Varosha administration and district issues were conclusive and detailed. He added: We have tried as much as possible to be more specific.

He continued: Should we agree on points of principle, it would be very easy to transfer these to paper. We will try to find common points. I believe that we have found some. In conclusion Onan said that by increasing these common points, without fail, this will help in finding a settlement or a common understanding regarding the Varosha issue.

Answering a question as to how he interprets the resettlement of Varosha under UN auspices, Onan replied that the United Nations will have general control. Answering whether he meant administrative control as well, Onan said the following: In our view, if this is a final solution, it is a different matter; if it is a transitional administration then it is again a different matter.

DENKTAS CRITICAL OF GREEK CYPRIOT ACTIONS

On Missing Persons Issue

TA181553 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1215 GMT 18 Nov 80

[Text] President Denktas received the UN secretary general's special representative in Cyprus, Mr Gobbi, today. In a statement to correspondents after the meeting, which lasted about 30 minutes, President Denktas said Mr Gobbi had briefed him on the latest situation concerning the intercommunal talks.

The president said the Greek Cypriot side had been exploiting the question of missing persons for propaganda purposes and had been trying to involve a number of institutions in the matter. In reply to a question, he said that the issue of missing persons was not on the agenda of the intercommunal talks and that if the Greek Cypriot side tried to raise the question again the intercommunal talks would have to be interrupted. If the Greek Cypriots insisted on this question the Turkish Cypriot side would deal with the matter through its negotiator who would not be able to handle both the intercommunal talks and the issue of missing persons simultaneously. Therefore the intercommunal talks would have to be interrupted. Mr Denktas suggested that the issue of missing persons could be handled by an intercommunal committee to be set up with the participation of a representative of the International Red Cross, as agreed upon previously. He added that an initiative had also been undertaken by a human rights group in Europe The president said that if necessary the Turkish Cypriot negotiator would go to international meetings to defend the views of his community and to air its grievances against the Greek Cypriots in the best possible way.

The meeting between President Denktas and Mr Gobbi was also attended by Mr Gobbi's new deputy, Mr Gilbert Schlittler Silva.

Chamber of Commerce Dispute

TA191407 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 0900 GMT 19 Nov 80

[Text] President Rauf Denktas has said that the claim of the Greek Cypriot Chamber of Commerce to acceptance as the national representative of Cyprus at the International Chamber of Commerce is contrary to the agreement reached for the resumption of the intercommunal talks.

In a statement on the issue today, Denktas said that the attitude of the Greek Cypriot Chamber of Commerce was nothing other than a continuation of the usurpation of Turkish Cypriot rights. Noting that it was the Greek Cypriot attitude that brought about the current situation in Cyrpus, Denktas said: There are two national communities in Cyprus. There are separate legal chambers of commerce organized by the respective communities. The Greek Cypriot community for years has boldly been using its commercial power and its commercial relations with the outside world to undermine the Turkish Cypriot economy and its commercial life. Now the Greek Cypriot attack has been repeated and a so-called victory has been achieved. You will see that these victories will help our economy become more independent and stronger. Denktas concluded by saying that this Greek Cypriot attitude has made inevitable the discussion of the issue by our interlocutor at the intercommunal talks.

TURKISH JOURNALIST INTERVIEWS DEFENSE MINISTER

NC190915 Istanbul MILLIYET in Turkish 17 Nov 80 p 6

[Interview granted by Greek Defense Minister Averof to MILLIYET correspondent Mehmed Ali Birand in Brussels--date not given]

[Excerpts] Question: Honorable Minister, the last time we met was in 1976. Since then many things have changed, both in Greece and in Turkey, as well as in international relations. Does Greece still view Turkey as "a threat?"

Answer: As far as we are concerned, even if not the whole of Turkey, at least part of it is still characterized as a threat to the islands. As you know, many speeches were made and a lot of noise was created in the past. There was a great deal of talk about the islands suffocating Turkey.

Question: Well, what about you? Do you continue to consider the Aegean Sea as a Greek region or a Greek lake? Are you prepared to share the Aegean with us?

Answer: The Aegean is not a Greek lake. We have stated this even in our parliament. An extensive part of it is international waters. However, you must not forget that there are Greek islands in the Aegean. One could describe it as an international sea with Greek islands in it. Just like Malaysia... Just like them, we cannot say the sea is ours. We must not ignore the facts. One of the facts you seem to forget is that Greece is a state composed of islands. We cannot share the Aegean with you because we have no right to do so. What belongs to us are our islands and their territorial waters. The rest of it is governed by international laws. As far as the continental shelf is concerned, we suggested that recourse should be made to the International Court of Justice in The Hague. I believe that this is the only way to resolve this issue. Mainly because of domestic politics, in addition to many other reasons, it is difficult to find another way out.

Question: Can't you remove some of the obstructions you have created in international waters which restrict Turkey's movements in the Aegean Sea (such as continual maneuver areas and air corridors)? These cause Turkey's suspicions.

Answer: We can remove some but we cannot remove others. I do not wish to enter into details now.

Question: What has been worrying Turkey is that you may extend your territorial waters to 12 miles. If you did that you would be closing the Aegean to Turkey.

Answer: We have not extended them so far. But this does not mean that we have forsaken our right to do so. However, we will not extend them against you or against other countries; we will not do this for purely political and psychological reasons.

Question: Is one of the reasons for your not extending your territorial waters to 12 miles the fact that Turkey has notified you that such a decision would amount to war?

Answer: Definitely not! If one country tells the other that if it exercised its rights this would mean war, then war does break out. No nation would allow its honor to be hurt in this manner. I believe in the maturity of the Turkish rulers. I therefore believe that our relations can be restored to normalcy.

Question: How did you view certain proposals advanced by Turkey some time ago against your arming the island?

Answer: This matter has nothing to do with the Aegean army. The islands are so close to you that they are in danger even without an organized army. Moreover, our arming the islands is entirely based on defense. Do you think that we can invade Anatolia with the arms we have on the island? I am arming myself in order to ensure my own security, because I am too exposed to you... And then, why should you insist on this so much? Your insistence gives rise to suspicions.

Question: Honorable Minister, when the 1974 Turkish and Greek air and naval forces in the Aegean are compared with those in 1980, it is seen that you have bridged the gap that existed. Does this not mean that you should have nothing to fear?

Answer: We were very weak in 1974. Today you possess greater strength. You have obtained more planes, such as the F-104's you have received from the Italians.

Question: Greece was the first to obtain 50 A-757 strike planes. These planes are not used for defense purposes; they are the offensive type. Do you think a balance has now been established in the Aegean?

Answer: These planes are bombers. If part of your territory, which happens to be far away from your base, is attacked, you have got to defend it.... Greece will not go beyond this. It must be understood that we are determined to defend our islands to the last man. These islands are very far from us and very close to you. This being the greatest handicap, we had to obtain adequate strength.

Question: Now that a balance has been established, will you stop arming?

Answer: If you resort to arming, we have to do the same. Otherwise there is no reason why we should continue this armament race.

Question: But, Your Excellency, various sectors of the Turkish Army lag behind in the process of modernizing itself. It has got to complete its program. Would you point this out and say "look, the Turks are arming themselves again?"

Answer: I believe that you are much stronger than we are. We have improved our position so that we may defend ourselves. As long as we do not feel we are being weakened and as long as we do not have to replace unserviceable weapons we will not obtain new war materiel. Karamanlis laid down a principle which is still being observed: The importance of defense should not be underestimated. But arming should not be undertaken at such a rate as to upset economic development and equilibrium.

Question: You were a foreign minister during the 1959-63 period. You were one of the builders of the London and Zurich agreements. And for this reason, you are being extensively criticized. Yet, you are one of those who can best diagnose the malady from which Turkish-Greek relations are suffering. What is happening to us?

Answer: The greatest difficulty and our greatest misfortune is mutual distrust. There is no more confidence left between the two countries. This is where the real disaster lies. We do not trust you and you do not trust us. During 1959-63 honeymoon period you had three foreign ministers of different character: Zorlu, Sarper and Erkin. Everyone of them was extremely mature and esteemed. We did have problems then as well, but we could telephone each other and resolve our problems in 24 hours. This was because we trusted each other. Today this confidence has completely disappeared.

Question: Is this a hopeless situation? Can we not restore an atmosphere of mutual confidence? What do you think has to be done?

Answer: All mutual and well-meaning efforts exerted so far have failed to yield positive results. I believe that the approach was wrong. We should not have tackled all the problems in the form of a package. [paragraph continues]

We should have resolved one issue at a time and celebrated it before moving on to the next one. This would have changed the atmosphere a little. Although it is a separate issue, we deem Cyprus a serious matter. So long as it remains unresolved it will continue to cast its shadow on other issues as well.

Question: Do you believe that with the new administration in Turkey things may change and a new era may begin? It seems to me that you have some kind of expectation. What is brewing?

Answer: It is not up to me to comment on the new administration in Turkey. I wholeheartedly hope that something will happen. Many people in Greece realize the dangers involved in the present situation and they believe that the disputes should be terminated. We are now entering a new era. I believe most sincerely that our relations will improve, but do not ask for details.

Question: The first development that we can expect is connected with the talks to be held on the NATO control command areas. The general conviction in Turkey is that once Greece has managed to enter NATO it will never take part in any talks, it will only choose to prolong matters and institutionalize the present provisional Rogers Plan. What is your comment?

Answer: We strongly desire to achieve a settlement, but if matters are tackled the way they were tackled in the past we are bound to run into difficulties. It would be difficult to find a settlement if a line is drawn across the Aegean and this or that country is assigned to control one side. If we sit at the conference table with this intention in mind we will not achieve a solution, for the region where the islands are is not suitable for such an arrangement. Your suggestion that a line should be drawn to include the islands as well cannot be acceptable. New ideas must therefore be found.

Question: Another problem that is causing anxiety in Turkey is the fact that the Armenians in Greece are very active and that the Greek Parliament supports their demands, their behavior and even their struggle. The Armenians continue to assassinate Turkish diplomats. Will you continue to condone this kind of behavior in your country?

Answer: No, no... In 1922 a number of Armenians--I do not know their actual number--came to Greece from Anatolia together with Greek refugees. They do not constitute a big society, but they have lived with us. They liked us and they became Greek nationals; they became our brothers. However, if we discover that anyone among them is involved in international incidents we will take immediate action. At present I have no knowledge of this.

Question: Having rejoined NATO, Greece is also entering the EEC as of 1 January. A great majority of the people in Turkey believe that Greece will veto a probable application by Turkey. Would you please comment on this?

Answer: It is completely out of the question. If other member countries do not make things difficult for you, you do not have to worry about Greece. Rest completely assured about this.

Question: Your Excellency, aren't there still persons who seek to realize the grand idea, who dream of constructing the great Greece?

Answer: The grand idea is definitely buried in history. This idea existed when the Hellenic kingdom was a small part of Greece. It was valid at places where the Greeks were in the majority. Today it is quite clear that the grand idea is nothing more than an historic concept. What is more, it is a concept which is impossible to revive.

Thank you Your Excellency.

I thank you too.

EVREN SPEECH STRESSES 'TRANQUILLITY,' PRODUCTIVITY

TA191537 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 19 Nov 80

[Excerpt of speech delivered by Head of State Gen Kenan Evren in Eskisehir on 19 November--recorded]

[Text] The nation is longing for peace and tranquillity and has endured every kind of difficulty. It was prepared to go hungry, but it did not want our citizens to kill each other. The demonstrated ovation is the result of securing this tranquillity, and I am well aware of this. There are those who cannot tolerate this situation. Do you know what they are saying to each other when they observe this great love and acclaim displayed by our people? They are saying that they cannot cope with you; they have eventually understood that they cannot cope. Believe me, the persons who disrupted the peace and tranquillity of this nation are now afraid to come out. This nation has always deserved peace and tranquillity, it is the nation's right, but it heretofore was unfortunately not secured. God willing, our nation will not experience such times in the future.

Dear citizens of Eskisehir, dear citizens: Rest assured and do not be pressed. We will fulfill all our tasks step by step within the framework of a plan. All your wishes will be fulfilled in time within the framework of a prepared plan. We are sure of this. Anyway, we embraced this task in order to eliminate the lack of tranquillity created by anarchy and terrorism. This was our first task and we covered great distances on this issue. We are nearing the end and we will eradicate it. We will eradicate it!

When we talk about solving economic problems in a short time we do not mean 1 or 2 years. We are not the only ones who are experiencing this economic crisis as numerous countries are being affected by it. The only way to overcome the crisis is to consume little of everything--even when we consume electricity--increase production and export our products. This country has a great deal to export, as long as we know how to sell and consume little. Let us not squander as squandering is also forbidden by our religion. Let us be thrifty even when we consume water. If the entire nation is economical and produces more, then we can overcome these difficulties in a short time. We know that you are very industrious and productive--especially Eskisehir, which is our grain storehouse. Try to produce at least twice as much grain. There will be a time when countries producing wheat, grain and food products will be come as wealthy as oil producing countries today. Be convinced of this, because the world greatly needs food products. Our country is a storehouse as long as we know how to work and sell.

The $25 million left will be used to purchase the necessary equipment for the oil exploration conducted by the Turkish Petroleum Corporation.

GUNAYDIN CONTINUES CITING GOVERNMENT 'MISTAKES'

NC181104 Istanbul GUNAYDIN in Turkish 17 Nov 80 p 7

[Article by Can Pulak: "What Is Crucified?"]

[Excerpts] There are people who have already begun to miss the past, which our nation recalls with abomination. These people, who owe the pomp they have lost to the presence of confusion and disorder, are disturbed by the fact that our country is moving toward peace and security. We painfully admit that there are such people. Some complain that they are living in an era when ideas are being crucified. They forget that only recently those producing ideas were themselves being "crucified by anarchy." How soon we seem to forget the great calamity which had befallen our nation!

We hasten to stress that we do not share the view that we are going through a period when ideas are being crucified in our country. We believe that it is not the ideas, but the defective and ill-omened mentality which almost hurled Turkey into catastrophe that has been crucified. Certain circles, who link their beliefs with their stomachs, are trying to wear down, enervate and eventually mislead the present administration. This sinister campaign will not do anyone any good. It can only harm Turkey as a whole rather than the administration. Hasn't the present administration done anything wrong at all during the past 2 months? Of course it has, but mistakes that may have been committed were unintentional.

We will continue, with only the best of intentions, to point out the mistakes of the administration. We will try to close the doors, which may be have been wrongly opened, and we will assess the mistakes with open minds. We will certainly draw attention to the continually rising cost of living, to the unemployment which is growing like an avalanche, to the delay in enacting the new taxation laws, which we believe will bring some relief to those in the low income bracket, and to the distresses of the nation which is confronted by a dangerously increasing housing problem.

This is our inalienable duty.

GASTON THORN CITED ON PLANNED MIDEAST INITIATIVE

LD201107 London ASH-SHARQ AL-AWSAT in Arabic 19 Nov 80 p 1

[Report on an interview given to Robert Little by EEC Council of Ministers Chairman Gaston Thorn in Brussels "last week"]

[Excerpts] Brussels, ASH-SHARQ AL-AWSAT--I met with Gaston Thorn at the European Commission headquarters in Brussels just before he flew to Rome for talks with the Italian Government.

I asked the future president of the European Commission following the announcement of the results of the American presidential elections, to what extent Ronald Reagan's election would affect the usefulness of the independent European initiative which the EEC intends to present to the United Nations with regard to recognizing the PLO and giving it the opportunity to participate in any future negotiations on granting the Palestinian people the right to self-determination. Gaston Thorn replied: "Let me tell you first of all that I support the presentation of an independent European initiative. As you may be aware, the EEC presidents and prime ministers agreed in principle at the Venice summit in June that if the Camp David agreement should fail to achieve a satisfactory settlement, it would be necessary for the EEC countries to play a direct role in reaching a solution.

"The conference decided to authorize me, in my capacity as chairman of the Council of Ministers, to hold consultations with all the parties concerned in the Arab-Israeli conflict. I prepared a report on these consultations that was debated in camera during the EEC foreign ministers meeting. The report will be submitted for discussion to the forthcoming summit, scheduled to be held in Brussels next month."

I asked Thorn if he was personally inclined to recommend full recognition of the PLO under the leadership of Yasir 'Arafat. Smiling shrewdly, he replied: "Let me put it this way: Upon my return from Rome, we will meet in Luxembourg with representatives of the Arab League delegation. I will meet with the delegation in my capacity as Luxembourg's prime minister and foreign minister. Does this answer your question?

"What I feel or say about this subject is not important because I am only an individual. But I cannot fathom how anyone can believe in the possibility of discussing the future of the Palestinian people or negotiating about it objectively without agreement with representatives of the organization that is recognized by the Palestinian people themselves."

I asked him if it was true that his report on his factfinding tour in the Middle East had indicated that the Camp David agreement was now void in the wake of Israel's proclamation of Jerusalem as its united and eternal capital. He replied: "If I start answering such questions, the report will no longer be secret. The fact is that the U.S. president-elect should decide what he intends to do with Camp David during his discussions with Menahem Begin. It would be of no use to the Palestinians or anyone else at this stage for one to speculate about what Egypt or the United States intends to do on this score."

DEFENSE MINISTER CITED ON EUROMISSILES, SALT

LD201657 Brussels LE SOIR in French 16-17 Nov 80 p 3

[Christian-Guy Smal report: "Eurostrategy: Belgium Is Playing an Optimistic Game, Defense Minister Frank Swaelen Says"]

[Text] The NATO member countries' defense ministers who have been meeting in Brussels at nuclear planning group level, ended their meeting Friday by reaffirming their anxiety at the continued growth in Soviet forces. The SS-20 missiles and Backfire bombers deployed by Moscow in addition to the existing SS-4 and SS-5 missiles further aggravate the Eurostrategic imbalance in favor of the Warsaw Pact forces. To counter this trend, therefore, it is necessary to modernize NATO's Eurostrategic arsenal by deploying 108 Pershing 2 missiles and 464 cruise missiles on the territory of five member countries, namely, Britain, Italy, the FRG, the Netherlands and Belgium. In this connection the ministers stressed the importance of the Geneva conference between the Americans and Russians--negotiations which, if they were to succeed, would make it possible (at least, it is to be hoped so) to reduce the military effort necessary in the Eurostrategic sphere. However, U.S. Defense Secretary Harold Brown did not disguise the fact that the interlocutors in Geneva are only at the stage of exchanging ideas "and that the technical difficulties involved (not to mention the political aspect) do not give grounds to hope for a rapid result."

Indeed the alliance is virtually at the same point as in December 1979, when it decided to modernize its Eurostrategic arsenal while inviting the Soviets to negotiate on controlling, if not reducing, nuclear weapons intended for the European theater. The Netherlands and Belgium, which have made their final decision dependent on the result of the negotiations between Washington and Moscow, have not fundamentally changed their stance despite the inconsistencies it involves. Moreover, NATO's famous "budgetary ideal," which fixes a 3-percent average annual increase (with inflation on top) in defense spending by each alliance member, has not yet entered the sphere of reality either. The situation is apparently even worse than it was a year ago. The FRG, which hitherto had the reputation of being a good payer, is beginning to waver. Of course, the U.S. defense secretary apparently showed understanding and sympathy for the European countries which have financial difficulties, but he nonetheless stuck to his guns. After all, the oil route, which the United States is determined to keep open, even if it means a major military effort, is also the route which supplies Europe.

New Belgian Defense Minister Frank Swaelen said in this connection that Belgium, despite its budgetary problems (explained in detail in Harold Brown's sympathetic ear) is playing an optimistic game.

In the matter of the cruise missiles Belgium is still basing its stance on three hypotheses: the success, partial success or failure of the Geneva negotiations. Once it had reached a certain point, "success" would make it possible not to deploy the missiles. A "partial success" would lead to a compromise--some token deployment of the Eurostrategic weapons--and, finally, a "failure" would make it necessary for all the allies to show solidarity.

Therefore in the latter case the consequences of failure would have to be accepted. In short, after the "flexible response" so dear to the Americans, we now have "graduated defense" ["defense modulee"] patented by Belgium.

Unfortunately, the future threatens to be less harmonious than that.

The Geneva negotiations will be lengthy and the missiles are scheduled to enter service (if you'll pardon the expression) at the end of 1982 or beginning of 1983. "I think we should be optimistic," Minister Swaelen replied to that. "The SALT II process (negotiations between Russians and Americans on intercontinental weapons--LE SOIR note) must be continued. It is not necessary to wait until negotiations are completed before taking a decision. Belgium will assess the real chances of an agreement every 6 months according to the general climate."

[Question] SALT II does not relate to Eurostrategic weapons and, furthermore, the treaty has been frozen by the U.S. Senate. How can you talk about a "process"?

[Answer] "Belgium hopes the treaty will be ratified," Mr Swaelen replied, "and, in any case, preparations for the SALT III treaty--which will include European theater weapons--should continue."

[Question] Do you really think that work can be started on SALT III before SALT II has been completed?

[Answer] "The Geneva talks seem to indicate that it can and, moreover, the Russians are not demanding that the one be completed before a start is made to the other."

[Question] However, if President-elect Reagan demands that SALT II be renegotiated, as he has promised he will, the whole situation will change....

[Answer] "That is a risk," Mr Swaelen admitted, "But we must be careful not to place Mr Reagan in the dock: there is a difference between programs and action...."

[Question] If you want to be ready to deploy the missiles in 1983, should the negotiations fail, you must take practical steps now.

[Answer] "Belgium is preparing for all eventualities but nothing has been decided yet."

[Question] And yet the Petit-Broegel base has already been reserved. The Foreign Ministry reported that a year ago.

[Answer] "No," Mr Swaelen replied, "nothing has been done."

Nonetheless, and the new defense minister admits this, the NATO European allies must have a "credible" stance if they do not want to be kept out of the real negotiations--the superpowers' negotiations.

The Eurostrategy dialectic has still not reached the end of its "process."

NETHERLANDS

FOREIGN MINISTER ON MADRID, FRENCH TIES, NATO

LD210933 Paris LE MONDE in French 20 Nov 80 pp 35,37

[Bernard Brigouleix interview with Netherlands Foreign Minister Christoph van der Klaauw in The Hague: "Although More Discreet Our Diplomacy Has Maintained Its Leading Role"--date not given]

[Excerpt] [Question] Was The Hague expecting a great deal from the Madrid conference, which opened last week?

[Answer] This conference has a twofold task: to exchange ideas on implementation of the Helsinki Final Act and to make proposals aimed at improving security and cooperation in Europe. One of the proposals which we regard as important is the organization of a European conference to draw up a series of measures aimed at restoring mutual confidence--measures which would be militarily significant and would apply to the whole of Europe, including the European part of the Soviet Union.

The current international situation, however--notably East-West relations--does not inspire optimism as to the course or results of the Madrid meeting.

[Question] Do you feel that bilateral French-Netherlands relations are following a satisfactory course?

[Answer] In general they are very satisfactory. Contacts among political officials from our countries have increased considerably in the past few years. This is true of contacts between the prime ministers and also the foreign ministers, and it is true of my colleagues in charge of other departments. Nonetheless, differences of opinion are possible even with the best relations. I am thinking primarily of the Rhine pollution question. In view of the country's special geographical position, the Rhine pollution problem is extremely important to the Netherlands. In a country as densely populated as the Netherlands its consequences are felt in the most diverse sectors; the government, parliament and public opinnon all feel strongly about this question. It is imperative that a satisfactory solution to this problem be found as quickly as possible.

A positive element has emerged in our bilateral relations very recently, namely, the recent successful conclusion of the negotiations on natural gas supplies. Nonetheless our close ties and our intensive cooperation at cultural level do not alter the fact that there are still some problems connected with the teaching of the French language in the Netherlands and of our language in France. We are working to overcome these problems.

[Question] What is the situation in the debate on NATO and the deployment of the Pershing missiles in West Europe?

[Answer] The strength of democracies like ours lies, among other things, in the possibility of a broad and constant discussion on government policy; such discussion does exist on the subject of NATO--the cornerstone of our security policy. However, I feel able to say that, for a very large majority of Netherlands people and their political parties, our membership of the Atlantic alliance and its integrated military command is not in doubt.

As regards the deployment of cruise missiles on Netherlands territory, the government has decided that it will take its decision on the basis of the international situation--particularly the state of negotiations between the United States and the Soviet Union--in December 1981 or, in other words, after the Netherlands general elections, scheduled for spring 1981.

DIE ZEIT CRITICIZES GOVERNMENT DEFENSE PLANS

DW201229 Hamburg DIE ZEIT in German 20 Nov 80 p 1

[Theo Sommer article: "The Chancellor's False Start to Washington"]

[Text] Hardly ever has a federal chancellor started on such a difficult mission to Washington as Helmut Schmidt is in the 1980 repentance and prayer [FRG holiday] week. The Federal Government managed to spoil two things at once: The farewell for Jimmy Carter and the entrance of his successor, Ronald Reagan. The old as well as the new teams showed deep mistrust toward the chancellor, believing that the West Germans want to dodge essential defense necessities, a suspicion fed by Bonn's refusal to keep a NATO promise and increase the military budget by a real 3 percent in the next fiscal year. American politicians of all camps say mockingly "hanger-on."

The German-American quarrel brings up a number of problems. First, in connection with the tactics of the Federal Government, how did it ever happen to come out smelling like a dodger? Then, asto the question on justification for the 3 percent demand, isn't this the usual figure fetish of defense bureaucrats? Finally, there is the question: Do we have a security policy concept for the eighties at all that seems reasonable or is clear to people outside the ghetto of strategists and the Hardthoehe [Defense Ministry]?

There is only one word that fits the tactics of the Federal Ministry: unskilled. First the intention to economize was shown--the military budget was supposed to increase by only 0.2 percent. When Hans Apel became rebellious, the chancellor took his defense minister to the Schaumburg Palace park to work things out; the result was an additional DM620 million, which brought the increase rate to 1.8 percent. But that did not suffice either to decrease the discomfort of Brussels NATO headquarters or to calm down Washington indignation, where Reagan's advisers--who recently are being imitated by Jimmy Carter--were preparing an expansion of the American military budget to 7 percent. When the chancellor boarded the plane to America he seemed to have a hunch that he would not be able tododge the 3 percent--even if it could only be achieved with the hlep of cosmetic measures.

It is hardly possible to be more clumsy. He who eventually gives in under pressure is the one whose contribution is esteemed lightly--the embitterment about his long resistance and obstinacy is always greater than the satisfaction that he yielded in the end.

We must not be bashful. The Federal Republic added almost 3 percent annually to its defense expenditures in the seventies, when all the surrounding alliance partners cut or curtailed their defense budgets. It has not spent the money--DM44 billion according to NATO information this year--for some nonsense. Investments to improve the combat strength of our conscript army take up about one third of the budget, while elsewhere it is just one fifth. The Bundeswehr also impresses the East--it is "not a night watchmen's firm," said Erich Honecker recently. Half a million men are under arms; some 700,000 reservists can be mobilized within 48 hours. The "Army Structure IV" plan envisages the establishment of six homeland protection brigades by the end of next year, all fully equipped and with an initial service strength of 50 to 85 percent.

All that certainly does not justify the reproach of being a dodger. There is no need at all for us to point a finger at the Belgians, the dutch or the Danes whose defense efforts are deteriorating more and more, regardless of whether the rule is Social Democratic or Christian Democratic. Their material and spiritial self-disarmament long ago produced such shameful slogans as "Denmarkization" or "Scandilux softening." We are miles away from that.

Yet it is a legitimate question whether the 3 percent demand actually makes security policy sense and the West Germans, who have done their duty so far without grumbling, have every right to bring it up.

The commitment of the NATO chiefs is primarily a mere clause on effort, and not a commitment for which one can be sued: Every NATO state will strive for an increase rate of about 3 percent, but more difficult is the question of three percent of what? Calculations permit all kinds of tricks. Many things, for example, depend on the "deflators"--the inflation factor one employs (but which is accurately known only later on).

A bit of window dressing can be achieved through cabalism and cameralism.

It is the real increase in allocations for training and equipment which is decisive; the federal defense minister made a note of this when the NATO Council made its decision. The Federal Government is well off in this respect, too: An overproportional increase of 7 percent is envisaged in the next budget. It does not matter how much money is spent, but for what it is spent.

So one must primarily ask: Do we really need 3 percent more?

There are quite a few people on Hardthoehe who like the increasing pressure on the budget. It creates opportunities to cut down some overgrown areas which would gaily continue to grow in normal times. Many things could be cut off dictated by lack of money ranging from some hundred Leo-II tanks more than needed that were ordered, to the old Dornier planes and part of the 22 Bundeswehr music bands ("Helmet off for prayer!"). Some technical over-refinements could be avoided and the reasonable trend toward simpler and less expensive arms could increase under the pressure of the situation. The military, who consider the automatic production of generations of arms as a technological concept, could be prompted more easily to change their way of thinking or to think at all.

Actually, the Federal defense minister needs the 3 percent badly. The new arms systems will all be more expensive than planned: The Tornado fighter plane by 135 percent; the frigate 122 by 37 percent; the Leo II tank is 3 1/2 times more expensive than its predecessor. But what makes the new arms effective is missing everywhere, namely ammunition and infrastructure; in placing the orders this seems to have been forgotten about.

Conclusion: The defense budget needs the 3 percent real increase just for the Bundeswehr. It needs it even more because of general security policy developments, although only very oracular remarks have been heard for some time in Bonn on that issue.

It is obvious that the challenges of the eighties will take place mainly in parts of the world that do not belong to the NATO area--first of all mainly in the Middle East. The Federal Government nimbly withdraws to the standpoint that West German vulnerabilities and moreover the Basic Law prohibit our even thinking about whether the Bundeswehr should look after German security interests in certain cases in these faraway regions.

Where should the Federal Germans take over new defense missions in Europe to permit the Americans to take more care of the East? If we ought to protect the access routes to the Atlantic to a greater extent, would it then suffice to simply withdraw the Federal Navy from its Baltic Sea mission? Should it not be strengthened? How should the Baltic Sea mission be fulfilled--with smaller warships, with more navy planes or missiles?

Every honest analysis will show that it will not work without the promised increase--if it will suffice at all. Basic considerations of a general foreign policy character produce the same conclusion:

A refusal to see to an additional 3 percent increase would spoil the beginning with the Reagan administration. It could serve as a reason for the Republican-dominated Senate and the House of Representatives to start a new wave of threats to thin out the American garrison in Germany. It would make it immensely difficult for Bonn to resist American demands running into billions which have recently been presented by Ambassador Stoessel: payment of offset accounts which are today being disdainfully called host nation support of an immeasurable amount, the taking over of all infrastructure costs and granting all kinds of social exemption rates for U.S. soldiers. Similar French demands are already on the table.

If Bonn missed the 3 percent target, it would have no chance to bring pressure to bear on the lagging NATO partners such as Denmark, Holland and Belgium who would all have to defend broad strips of German territory in an emergency--the mere idea is hair raising.

If the Federal Republic were to lag behind at a moment when France is increasing its military budget by 18 percent--which is after all about a real 6 percent--it would have an aftereffect not only on the Paris-Bonn-Washington triangle; closer German-French military cooperation would thus acquire a problematic angle.

If the social-liberal Federal Government wants to successfully support the indispensable continuation of the arms control dialogue between East and West, in Reagan's Washington as well as in Brezhnev's Moscow, it is impermissable to create the impression that it wants to be a military softy.

There are enough reasons, occasions and arguments for a big security policy debate in this country. But instead our defense establishment is hotly discussing unnecessary orders and superfluous military oath celebrations. It indicates how far we have gotten in the art of trivializing politics. No wonder the chancellor finds it hard in Washington.

GISCARD, POLISH ENVOY DISCUSS ECONOMIC AID

Delegation To Seek Loans

LD202040 Paris Domestic Service in French 1800 GMT 20 Nov 80

[Text] The new Polish ambassador to France, Mr Kulaga, was received this afternoon at the Elysee. Poland must find within itself the answer to its problems, Mr Giscard d'Estaing told him. He also added that France is willing to give the Poles the financial prodding required for them to overcome [words indistinct]. This is an appropriate phrase on the eve of the arrival in France of the Polish Deputy Premier Mr Jagielski, whose mission could not be simpler: to obtain loans. Poland, already burdened with debts, is now more than ever in need of money and food, as Pierre Gance explains from Warsaw:

The Polish delegation will undoubtedly ask for food--meat, wheat, (?dairy) products--because it is thought here that first of all, the population should be fed. The FRG has already lent the equivalent of FR2.7 billion. President Carter has authorized the sale to Poland of 4 million tons of grain and wheat. The Eastern countries are also granting aid: There is talk of the USSR supplying food worth FR420 million. Other such contracts will undoubtedly also be signed in Paris. This means a loan of almost FR1.5 billion destined for the purchase of food but also of consumer goods and semi-finished products. Only 3 percent of Polish imports come from France but we are its third largest Western supplier. However, high finance will not be discussed by the French and Polish sides. Poland does not want the international situation to worsen particularly at a moment when it is facing enormous economic difficulties. Therefore the question of detente in Europe will also be discussed, a detente for which both countries have worked together for a long time; It is due to the Poles that Mr Giscard d'Estaing met Leonid Brezhnev last June in Warasw.

Reassurance on Support

NC201651 Paris AFP in English 1636 GMT 20 Nov 80

[Text] Paris, 20 Nov (AFP)--French President Valery Giscard D'Estaing today assured the ambassadors of Pakistan and Poland during ceremonies at which they presented their credentials of France's support for both countries.

Mr Giscard D'Estaing told Yaqub [Ali] Khan, Islamabad's new envoy to Paris, that the French-Pakistani dialogue had assumed a "dimension and a new intensity" because of common efforts to develop a "new international economic order." The French leader praised Pakistan's activities in the Islamic Conference and in the non-aligned nations' movement to "restore to southwest Asia conditions of peace, security and respect of the right of people to decide their destinies without foreign interference." Mr Giscard d'Estaing said that France intended to continue its dialogue with Pakistan and to work especially to develop economic and social relations.

When Warsaw's new Ambassador to Paris Eugeniusz Kualaga presented his credentials today, Mr Giscard d'Estaing declared that Poland should have the right to solve its own problems without interference by outside interests. "The whole history of your country," the French president told Mr Kulaga, "displays its indomitable strength of character and the attachment of its people to retain mastery of its destiny." He added that France was anxious to seek ways of aiding Poland to surmount its current economic problems. Polish Deputy Premier Miecyzslaw Jagielski is scheduled to arrive here tomorrow to discuss relations between the countries.

DC LEGISLATORS SEEK RECOGNITION OF 'PLO'S IMPORTANT ROLE'

AU201625 Rome ANSA in English 1605 GMT 20 Nov 80

[Text] Rome, 20 Nov (ANSA)--Ninety Italian Christian Democrat members of Parliament have filed a query with Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo asking him to acknowledge aspects of the role held in the Middle East by the Palestine Liberation Organization when the European Community heads of state and government meet in Luxembourg on December 2.

The DC M.P.'s are seeking recognition of "the important role the PLO plays not only for a solution for the Palestinian problem but also in the more ample area of a lasting peace for the entire Middle Eastern region".

The foreign minister has also been requested to give Parliament prior information on the position he intends to take for the December summit on the Middle East.

This request is linked in the query to "favoring further steps for a European initiative (to avoid losing time on the justification of awaiting the orientation of the new Washington administration) and greater recognition for the role of the PLO."

PSI'S QUERCI EXAMINES CRISIS OF SOCIALIST LEFT

LD201529 Rome AVANTI in Italian 11 Nov 80 p 11

[PSI Directorate member Nevol Querci: "Socialist Left's Crisis"]

[Text] The way in which the PSI has established itself in Italian society during the course of history and the position that it has assumed within it partly as a result of the presence of the strongest communist party in the West are both elements that demand the existence of a strong and sound Socialist left.

However, despite this physiological need, so to speak, things seem to be moving in the opposite direction in the PSI. The various internal leftwing currents are in a state of crisis and the several migrations to the majority that took place at the latest Central Committee meeting are reminiscent of Caporetto [World War I battle in which Italian troops suffered huge losses]-while only now are we beginning to talk about the Piave Line [at which enemy attack was stemmed] with the plan to re-form a single leftwing current. But can a single leftwing current in itself be a synonym for a strong leftwing?

To find a positive answer to this question, we must first understand why we have reached the present negative situation. Is it a sufficient explanation to invoke the tactical errors and errors of conduct committed mainly by the major [leftwing] current, the one led by Signorile? Frankly I really do not think so; there have been errors galore, but it seems to me that all of them together can explain only part of the situation, and not even the greatest part.

What I mean is that quite apart from these errors, the crisis of the Socialist leftwing currents has its fundamental roots in the more general crisis of the Italian left, which as a whole has failed to prevent the regression which began with the end of the national solidarity policy. It was to this end that the hypothesis that by means of its full development--the Communists' entry into the government--it would at last be possible to unclog our political system, confined to and constrained within the narrow context of so-called imperfect democracy, was rejected. [paragraph continues]

Hence the following corollary: no historical compromise, no alternative and an Italian left as a whole without anything to offer and forced to reassess itself without delay; a further frightening paralysis of the political system, the slow but inexorable decline of the democratic system and the consequent resurgence of the empirical practice of living hand-to-mouth, inspired by the rather discouraging philosophy of he who seeks shall find. Hence within the PSI, and elsewhere, a free hand is granted to Craxi, who undoubtedly seems to be the ablest and favorite interpreter of empiricism.

I believe this is the prime reason for the crisis in the Socialist left. Of course this does not absolve it of blame, because in any case it has failed to update its own stances to match the current regression, to the extent that it has increasingly seemed to be repeating the same script within what is a decidely different framework.

Unless we proceed from this ruthless self-criticism and draw the necessary conclusions, the new left is most unlikely to become strong again and perform a real propulsive role. As Lombardi has said, the scenario for the eighties is a different one and the Socialist left must be different too.

It has a primary basic task: to straighten the party's political axis, which is now leaning frighteningly toward old and outdated attractions. I mentioned Craxi's empiricism. In view of the current situation he cannot be condemned for that. In any case I do not believe that things are any different elsewhere. We should be challenged, instead, because in fact day after day he is reintroducing the elements of an old line, different only in its objectives but not in the balance of forces involved. The objectives are different because, whereas in the old center-left the intention was to make the structural reforms argument prevail, the belief now is that the trial of strength with the DC can be won within the context of the government's political leadership, ignoring the fact that this implies a danger of competing for predominance in the moderate area. There is no change in the balance of forces, because the bloc on the political system decreed by the Christian Democrats' prejudices is accepted, without considering that this encourages extremist trends and not a regressionary process within the PCI. Furthermore, on the whole insufficient attention has been given to the fact that the country cannot await the completion of such experiments, which would, among other things, place much greater responsibilities on the PSI than it can bear. Additionally, De Martino was right in his criticism of the historical compromise: To ally with the DC with the aim of dismantling its power system with its own consensus is a theory that is unlikely to work out, even for a party such as the PCI, with the strength of its 30 percent share of the vote behind it. And what applies to the Communists applies also to the Socialists, at least. It is possible to challenge Craxi to try to correct his errors as long as the Socialist left is only minimally or not at all venal but very much determined to encourage and embrace the new factors emerging in the country, in the parties and among the parties. There must be a synthesis among its present various component branches. Consensus cannot be restored if we simply continue to brandish the banner of the alternative, albeit colored by an autonomy which nobody is calling into question, without having any proposals for the present. Similarly it would not be enough to invoke the need for improved relations on the left, without answering the question; unity on what and to what end?

It is necessary, therefore, to define a line of action directed outside the party, capable of encouraging new trends within the PCI and the other leftwing forces, among the Catholics and their political world, and of reuniting the part of the socialist cultural area that now finds reasons for detaching itself from the party in the crisis in the PSI leftwing and the prevalance within it of old temptations. This leftwing must, proceeding from the PSI's and PCI's differing stances with respect to the government, permanently set itself the aim of making the Italian left's great strength a useful and majority force.

AMARO DA COSTA INTERVIEWED ON DEFENSE POLICY

LD210935 Lisbon EXPRESSO in Portuguese 5 Nov 80 pp 12-13 (Review Section)

[Interview granted in Lisbon to Spanish journal DEFENSA editor Vicente Talon by Portuguese Defense Minister Adelino Amaro da Costa: "Government Would Very Gladly Welcome Spain's Entry Into Atlantic Alliance"--date of interview not given]

[Excerpt] DEFENSA: What is the current Portuguese Government's policy on defense?

Amaro da Costa: The Portuguese Government's national defense policy, approved in the assembly at the beginning of this year, has seven basic elements: 1) preparation of the end of the so-called constitutional period of transition, that is, the period during which a state body, the Council of the Revolution, with powers granted by the consitution of the republic, has existed in our country; 2) establishment of a new organizational frame of reference at the political and strategic level for directing, coordinating and implementing national defense; 3) adoption of a new system of military service, adjusted to Portugal's current historical, sociaological and cultural circumstances and the requirements of a graduated system of national alert; 4) enhancement and modernization of the armed forces and the making of the corresponding budgetary effort; 5) introduction of a national policy on goods and services advantageous for national defense; 6) strengthening of Portuguese cooperation within NATO; and 7) development of new systems of coordination and civil defense.

Priority for Internal Organization of Ministry of Defense

DEFENSA: What are the principal obstacles you have encountered so far in implementing this policy and in what areas?

Amaro da Costa: In all the areas of concern to the government substantial progress has been made, which I will not detail now, since it would take a very long time. However, it seems important to emphasize that an organic law concerning the basic rules of the Ministry of Defense has been approved for the first time in Portugal. Before the April revolution there were the navy and army ministries and the state secretariat for the air force. Defense as a whole was the responsibility of a minister without portfolio, called the minister of national defense. With the April revolution the military ministries disappeared from the government structure, leaving only the Ministry of Defense, but without an organized apparatus. I can say that, from the viewpoint of working instruments, the absence of organized basic rules has been the principal obstacle during these few months of activity. It is for this reason that I gave priority in legislative work to organize these structures. This work is also very particularly connected with the already cited aim of ending the constitutional period of transition.

Portuguese Fourth Republic--What Will It Be Like?

DEFENSA: You have talked about a Portuguese fourth republic. Could this plan harm the concepts of Portuguese defense, and more particularly, the military concepts?

Amaro da Costa: I talked about a Portuguese fourth republic in the sense that later, after the coming revision of the constitution, some basic aspects of the Portuguese state's current legal structure, which are still linked with the revolutionary period, will give way to a more genuine and real democratic system.

I do not believe that this depth of democracy can point toward basic changes in national defense doctrine. Portugal's solidarity within the NATO context, the strategic importance of the mainland-Azores-Madeira triangle and the importance of the issues raised by the exercising of national sovereignty over a sea area which is larger than the land area, will remain unchanged. But from the viewpoint of better integration of military strategy within the context of the overall strategy laid down by the government, there will be changes in this. And they will be those resulting from the abolition of the Council of the Revolution.

DEFENSA: The Portuguese constitution envisages the dissolution of the military blocs. How can you reconcile this with the clear desires for strengthening NATO expressed by the government to which you belong?

Amaro da Costa: It is true that the constitution envisages the gradual, mutual and balanced dissolution of the military blocs. But what will be the best method for dissolving the blocs? The military exhaustion of NATO, for instance, by reducing its interal soldarity and strength? I do not believe so. Deterrence remains the main weapon for peace and security. Dialogue on the issue of detente is possible, and we must engage in dialogue with the Warsaw Pact, but without giving way in our stances. Otherwise, we would not be contributing to the dissolution of the blocs; on the contrary, we would provoke a Warsaw Pact aggression against us Westerners. In other words, instead of two blocs we would have only one--theirs--in the end.

DEFENSA: Portugal has been a loyal ally within NATO for many years, except for a brief interval. In view of this loyalty, doesn't the paucity and obsoleteness of the Portuguese Armed Forces' equipment seem surprising to you?

In 1974 There Was Discrepany Between Loyalty to NATO and Actual Defense Effort

Amaro da Costa: Between 1961 and 1974, Portugal, sustained three war fronts in three African countries. The entire logistic effort was made to that end and with that aim. During that period, the whole updating of the Portuguese Armed Forces was aimed totally at guerrilla warfare and little else. Then the 1974 revolution came, and the armed forces had to make a tremendous effort, once the period of revolutionary agitation in the barracks was over, to restore internal discipline and achieve their readjustment to new historical circumstances. In the meantime, the country underwent a major economic crisis, brought about partly by external causes and partly by the interal revolutionary changes. Under these circumstances, it was not easy to achieve a more rapid updating of the armed forces. This updating is essential for many reasons. I hope that, if everything goes well, we will be able to formulate a long-term plan, which, with adequate mobilization of our own resources and with possible external cooperation, will enable us to change the present situation. So there is no contradiction between Portugal's presence in NATO since the Atlantic alliance's foundation and the armed forces' present material situation. What really existed before 1974 was a real discrepancy between Portugal's traditional loyalty to NATO, as far as the overall political and strategic framework are concerned, and the actual military defense effort for which national resources were earmarked. The former regime never succeeded in convincing our allies that the wars which Portugal was waging in African were of specific importance for NATO.

NATO's Military Aid for Portugal

DEFENSA: If I remember correctly, in October 1979 NATO's economic committee recommended to that organization's secretary general the setting up of a working group to aid Portugal's weakened economy. Has anything been done in this respect?

Amaro da Costa: I presume that you are referring to Directive 22, approved by the 25th annual plenary session of the Atlantic Assembly, held in Ottawa 22-27 October 1979. It was a decision made by the representatives of the alliance's member countries. So the suggestion of setting up a working group to study economic aid for Portugal was not the work of the NATO secretary general but of the members of that assembly. This means that it commits neither the governments of our allies nor the NATO secretary general.

Military aid for Portugal has indeed been studied within the ad hoc team formed by the allied governments for giving aid to Portugal and Turkey. The work of this team has led to the formulation of documents and important decisions. Within this context, for instance, the technical work took place which made possible the political approval by the NATO member countries' defense ministers last May of our naval modernization plan, involving three new frigates, which was described--and it is the first time that this has happened in NATO since its foundation--as a multinational plan. Even so, Portuguese financial and industrial involvement in this plan will be very substantial, since it is, over and above this, something of great military and technological importance for our country.

Euromissiles and Portugal

DEFENSA: Your government has shown itself to be in favor of the deployment of Euromissiles. Would they be accepted even in Portugal if this is what NATO asked? If so, what conditions would be set?

Amaro da Costa: I believe it is futile to consider the issue in abstract terms, especially following the Schmidt-Brezhnev meeting and the subsequent stances adopted by President Carter. We neither are nor will be advocates of deploying Euromissiles or any nuclear weapons on our territory. But it is also true that as far as we are concerned Atlantic solidarity is neither an empty word nor a theoretical symbol. This is clearly shown by our foreign policy stances. Therefore it will be necessary to make a continuous assessment of what we consider to be the alliance's interest, so as to define on this basis the forms of our cooperation in the general effort.

DEFENSA: Do you believe Spain should join NATO?

Amaro da Costa: This is a matter that must be decided by the Spanish people and government. If one day Spain decides to join the Atlantic alliance, Portugal would very gladly welcome this new and important element which would strengthen NATO.

DEFENSA: The agreements concerning the U.S. military presence in the Azores will be revised in 1983. Will the present statute be changed in any way?

Amaro da Costa: The foreseeable evolution of the international situation, Atlantic solidarity and Portugal's interests will be the decisive factors governing what criteria should be adopted at any particular moment with regard to our agreements with the United States, both on the Azores and on all matters of bilateral concern within the NATO framework. This point is as valid for 1983 as it is now.

New National Defense Law

DEFENSA: I have heard it said that a national defense bill is being prepared. If this is so, what will be the general contents of this bill and what path is being pursued in drafting it?

Amaro da Costa: On 30 May the Portuguese Council of Ministers approved the general outlines of a national defense bill. The bill contains four sections: general principles, the overall structure of national defense, special situations (states of siege, emergency, national alert and war) and mobilization. As far as the general structure of defense is concerned the following points are envisaged:

Leadership bodies: supreme political command by the president of the republic; political and strategic command by the council of ministers; military strategic command by the council of chiefs of the general staff;

Coordination bodies: political and strategic coordination by the Higher National Defense Council, composed: of the president of the republic, all the ministers and chiefs of the general staff; strategic coordination by the strategic coordinating committee, composed of the prime minister, deputy prime minister, ministers of foreign affairs, defense, finance and domestic administration and the chiefs of general staff;

Executive bodies the armed forces, the military and militarized bodies, civilian bodies dependent on the ministries and on the autonomous regions of the Azores and Madeira.

The plan will be presented to the assembly as a bill during the second legislative period. Therefore it has already been submitted for examination to all the parties of both the majority and opposition represented in parliament. I believe it would be opportune for there to be a broad and open national debate on the subject prior to the parliamentary debate next November.

DEFENSA: Last, what is your opinion of the CSCE conference due to begin in Madrid in a few days' time?

Amaro da Costa: I believe it will prove to be no more than the funeral of the Helsinki Final Act, unless meanwhile the Afghan invasion is forgotten, which would be an even greater disaster.

POLL SHOWS EANES LEADING PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE

LD201559 Lisbon EXPRESSO in Portuguese 15 Nov 80 pp 1, 16

[Text] Ramalho Eanes is still the presidential candidate with the most support among the electorate according to the second opinion poll carried out for EXPRESSO by NORMA [polling organization] in the districts of Lisbon, Oporto, Viseu and Beja.

The opinion poll was carried out from 6 through 10 November, following Mario Soares' address on Portuguese radio and television explaining his reasons for opposing Ramalho Eanes.

Mario Soares' appearance on the scene does not seem to have affected Eanes' candidacy in these districts because, apart from Oporto, his percentage has increased with respect to the previous opinion poll covering the same area which we published a fortnight ago.

Soares Carneiro suffered losses in Lisbon, Oporto, Viseu and Beja in the poll on the first round voting, while he gained only in Oporto in the second round compared with the results of the poll which we published a fortnight ago.

A fortnight ago in the first round Ramalho Eanes gained 36.5 percent in Lisbon and 59 percent this time, thus improving 22.5 percent; in Oporto the corresponding figures are 45.7 and 37 percent, representing an 8.7 percent drop; in Viseu 23.8 and 27 percent, a 3.2 percent rise; and in Beja 47.9 and 57 percent, a 9.1 percent rise.

In the first round Soares Carneiro gained 24.2 percent in Lisbon and 19 percent this time, a 5.2 percent drop; in Oporto 20.9 and 20 percent, a 0.9 percent drop; in Viseu 38.9 and 26 percent, a 12.9 percent drop; in Beja 3.5 and 1 percent, a 2.5 percent drop.

As for the second round, in the poll a fortnight ago Ramalho Eanes gained 46 percent in Lisbon and 63 percent this time, showing a 17 percent improvement; in Oporto 47.7 and 42 percent, a 5.7 percent drop; in Viseu 25.3 and 31 percent, a 5.7 rise; in Beja 48.9 and 65 percent, a 16.1 percent rise.

Also in the second round Soares Carneiro gained 33.4 percent in the Lisbon area a fortnight ago and 22 percent this time, falling 11.4 percent; in Oporto 21.4 and 26 percent, a 4.6 rise; in Viseu 39.6 and 26 percent, a 13.6 percent drop; in Beja 3.5 and 1 percent, a 2.5 percent drop.

Although Ramalho Eanes has suffered losses in Oporto, unlike Soares Carneiro, he is still 17 points ahead in the first round and 16 in the second in this district.

Unlike the previous poll, this one includes Carlos Brito, who received votes only in Lisbon and Beja, with 2 and 5 percent, respectively. This time Otelo Saraiva de Carvalho received a nil rating in Viseu and Beja and gained 3 percent in Lisbon and 2 in Oporto. Pires Veloso was also rated only in Lisbon and Oporto with 2 and 3 percent respectively. Aires Rodrigues received no votes in the poll while Galvao de Melo was rated only in Oporto, where he is ahead of the other minor candidates with 4 percent. All these candidates have fallen, virtually canceling each other out, in comparison with the poll which we published a fortnight ago, as can be easily ascertained by comparing the tables.

Let it also be noted that the percentage of the undecided has decreased and the percentage of those expressing the intention of voting has increased in most of the four districts, although it has decreased in Lisbon, contrary to what has happened in the other districts.

This poll was conducted by NORMA (whose credentials as an enterprise of this kind have caused it to be accepted as an associate of Gallup). The questions were supplied by ourselves, and we were anxious to choose four districts representative of voting trends among the Portuguese people. They are the same as those a fortnight ago, precisely in order to be able to assess the oscillations of the electorate, as a result of the latest political developments. Thus we chose a district with predominantly Democratic Alliance influence (Viseu: Democratic Alliance--67 percent in the legislative elections), a district with major Republican and Socialist Front [FRS] influence (Oporto: FRS 34 percent), a district with predominantly United People's Alliance [APU] influence (Beja: APU 47 percent) and a district with a more even distribution of votes (Lisbon: Democratic Alliance--40 percent, FRS--28 percent and APU--23 percent.

In relation to the total number of mainland voters, the area polled covered 45 percent of the total, and the poll was conducted among people aged 18 and over of both sexes. With this poll we sought to estimate the current voting percentages of each of the seven possible candidates in the first round of the presidential election and of candidates Ramalho Eanes and Soares Carneiro in a possible second round.

As far as further conclusions are concerned, we prefer to allow our readers themselves to draw them.

We will be unable to present any further polls between now and the election, since a law prevents the news media from so doing.

SPANISH, SOVIET DELEGATES AT CSCE STATE POSITIONS

LD202137 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1230 GMT 20 Nov 80

[Unidentified correspondent's dispatch on CSCE from the Madrid Palace of Congresses]

[Text] Two points encompass the interest arising from this morning's debates being held behind closed doors in the conference room of the Madrid Palace of Congresses and Exhibitions, the headquarters of the CSCE: on the one hand, the address by chief of the Spanish delegation Javier Ruperez, who set out our country's position on the second basket of subjects which covers the Helsinki Final Act--subjects relating to economic, commercial and industrial cooperation; and, on the other hand, the address by chief of the Soviet delegation Leonid Ilichev, which comprised a long statement of answers on the same subject, answers to the allusions made yesterday by second in command of the U.S. delegation Max Kampelman during his afternoon speech. It will be recalled that in the morning they were still discussing subjects relating to the first basket--a word which is commonly used here--which refers to military questions and questions on the security of Europe.

With regard to the address by Ruperez, he stressed the existence, at an advanced stage, of negotiations between the Spanish Government and the EEC with a view to our country's incorporation into the Community. Ruperez described these negotiations as of great significance to our country and the Community countries themselves. The process of adaptation and bringing our country closer to the Community, the chief of the Spanish delegation added, must necessarily condition the Spanish response to the questions on cooperation in the corresponding chapter of the Helsinki Act. Ruperez later referred to the submission by Spain of a wide-ranging report on our country's fulfillment of the provisions of the Helsinki Final Act, the so-called White Book which gives a full and public account of Spain's activities in the fulfillment of the various chapters of the act.

Ruperez later said that a fundamental question for us is emigration, which is examined in chapter five of the second basket of the Helsinki Act. We believe that the Madrid meeting, he said, can achieve progress in the intensification of cooperation between countries where there is emigration and those countries which import labor, with a view to improving the situation of the emigrant worker and his family, adequately protecting his rights and providing him with the help he needs in the sphere of family reunification, among others.

Ruperez also referred to the subject of international cooperation on energy and to tourism. Later, with regard to East-West relations, Ruperez said that we understand that the pure and simple application of the provision of most favored nation does not necessarily mean the absence of discrimination, given the diversity of the economic systems in which it operates. What is really important, Ruperez said, is not nondiscrimination but the effective reciprocity of rights and obligations.

The chief of the Spanish delegation referred to the present trade links between Spain and the socialist bloc, links which, he said, do not respond to the levels of economic development attained by both sides.

With regard to the address by Mr Ilichev, chief of the Soviet delegation--to which I referred at the beginning of this report--as I said, it was a statement, a continuous response to the references made yesterday by second in command of the U.S. delegation Max Kampelman in relation to the subject of cooperation, but which was centered fundamentally upon the role of the Soviet Union.

Ilichev said that economic sanctions are completely illegal and go against all the principles of both the Helsinki Act and the UN Charter, and he said that these sanctions do not lead to anything positive. He also said that Afghanistan is no more than an excuse to justify the economic sanctions carried out. Finally, he criticized economic protectionism which, he said, entails continuing difficulties within the cooperation between the East and West. Again, finally, he supported the calling of a pan-European conference on energy.

CARRILLO AFFIRMS PCE'S ADHERENCE TO EUROCOMMUNISM

[Text] Madrid, 4 November--PCE Secretary General Santiago Carrillo stated at a press conference this morning that nobody has sought his replacement as secretary general of that organization, that his replacement in that post is not under way and that he "enjoys political health"; he also stated that he does not regard a leftwing government as advantageous for this country at present, although he does so regard a progressive government which will resolve the country's grave problems. He emphasized the organizational independence of the Unified Socialist Party of Catalonia [PSUC] with respect to the PCE, although pointing out points of agreement in ideology and organizational rules between the two of them.

The Communist Party secretary general assembled the news media this morning to explain the decisions made by the Central Committee at its meeting this weekend. Previously, that party's press office distrubuted the text of the Central Committee resolution on the only point on the agenda of that meeting--the preparation of the party's 10th congress. The resolution says that the Central Committee "regards as correct, the method used by the executive committee for opening the congress debate."

Directed "Guidelines"

This method, Carrillo explained, takes the form of the sending of a general report by the leadership to the committees drafting the congress theses which will serve as guidelines for drafting these theses--an initiative which was approved by a vote of 23 in favor, 3 against and 6 abstentions. These directed [dirigida] "guidelines" were rejected by prominent Central Committee members, without their being in a majority at any point. Carrillo did not specify at the press conference these disagreements with the proposed "working method," and referred those interested to the coming issues of MUNDO OBRERO--the Communists' official journal--to discover the differences of viewpoint expressed at the Central Committee meeting.

"Not a Matter of Heir Apparent or Favorite"

The Communist leader announced the setting up of the post of deputy secretary general in the Communist Party--the election to which will take place at the first Central Committee meeting after the congress. Directing and coordinating the leadership groups--a duty which at present rests with the secretary general--will be the task for which this new post is to be responsible. The complexity of the organization and of the political situation necessitates this new figure, Carrillo explained, since "it is not a matter of appointing an heir apparent or a favorite or of preparing for a succession on which the Central Committee will decide at the proper time," he added. At this point he referred to the campaign which is being waged against him, as secretary general, and against [PCI Secretary General] Berlinguer in Italy, stating that conflicting interests, both of the rightand of other political sectors (he was referring indirectly to the Leninists in his party, although without criticizing them), which believe that by correcting Eurocommunism the PCE would head in another political direction, are involved in these campaigns.

A Single Party With Federalist Tendencies

"The general concern is that the PCE should be a single party and not a federation of communist parties, but should incorporate certain forms of federalism, combined with a central leadership which will decide on international and state issues," Carrillo maintained, in discussing the communist organizations' degree of independence. "A federation of communist parties would be transformed in practice into conflicting parties." He supported this line of argument with some reflections on the state autonomy process. "Spain is a nation of nations and regions. Spain is something which we do not relinquish. This lies in our party's tradition. Without the development and flourishing of the nationalities and regions, Spain cannot develop and flourish," he stated, and also pointed out that political practice is proving right those who are demanding a state pact among the political forces to realize the new constitutional state of the autonomies. "This pact is the more necessary," he said, "the stronger the opposition to this state of the autonomies."

He referred at another point to the strategy for achieving what he termed a progressive government which should include not only the leftwing forces but also the democratic forces in the country. He explained that a leftwing government is not the solution for Spain at present, since it would clearly lead to a splitting of the country into two blocs. "However, when democracy has been consolidated and the left has a majority, then will be the time for aspiring to that form of government."

Yes to UCD-PSOE Government

He positively assessed a possible Union of the Democratic Center [UCD]-Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] coalition government, emphasizing that the PCE had already suggested this on the very night of the last general election. The PCE would be prepared to support that coalition government if it had a progressive program. "A progressive government," he said at another point, "would not imply that the PCE should have ministers in the government. Although it should take part in the government's program." He also explained that a UCD-PSOE government which required breaking the municipal pact between Socialists and Communists would not have the Communists' support and could not acquire the progressive nature which was sought. He pointed out in this connection that in Italy the Socialists maintain a government pact with the DC and a municipal pact with the Communists. "That precedent could also be valid for Spain."

PSUC "An Untypical Case"

Despite the fact that the PCE's relations with the PSUC were not debated at the Central Committee meeting, the PCE secretary general was very explicit in defining the PSUC's independent nature. "The case of the PSUC, as Sole Tura says, is an untypical case. It is an independent party as a result of the fact that it was formed out of four parties. On that basis the PSUC was organizationally independent and remains so. It is linked with the PCE by the same basis of principles, the same policy and the same organizational rules. It has full independence for formulating its policy, and this was made clear at the meetings which we have recently held in Barcelona. Nobody doubts that independence," Carrillo stated.

Once more the Communist leader stated that the Communist Party will not abandon Eurocommunism and that it will move further along that path at its next congress. With respect to the Basque problem, he demanded maximum powers for the Basque Nationalist Party and setting up a new police force with a leadership which did not emanate from the former regime.

PEREZ LLORCA SAYS FRANCE MADE COMMITMENTS TO CURB ETA

LD191558 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1400 GMT 19 Nov 80

[Text] The Spanish minister of foreign affairs, Jose Pedro Perez Llorca, who had prolonged his visit to France by more than 20 hours, has just returned to Madrid on board a military jet. Mr Perez Llorca held meetings with his counterpart, Mr Francois-Poncet, and the premier, Raymond Barre, and spoke about the need for greater collaboration on the part of the French against the terrorist activities of the Basque Nation and Liberty [ETA] originating on French territory against Spain. The impression Spanish jounalists have today is that once again the French Government has remained cold and indifferent to Spain's request for more collaboration against the ETA. However, on his arrival, Mr Perez Llorca left the impression that he had gained some commitments from the French Government to struggle against the ETA which he described as a political intent carried out by means that the French would like to be discrete to be effective. Weighing his words, the Spanish minister said that this bilateral commitment will bear fruit in the not-too-distant future. Then the Spanish minister of foreign affairs said that it should be made clear that there is a change in the French attitude toward the phenomenon of ETA terrorism.

NORWAY

STOLTENBERG ON RESERVATIONS ON U.S. NUCLEAR STRATEGY

LD201201 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 17 Nov 80 p 8

[Olav Tryggve Storvik report: "Stoltenberg: United States Accepted Norwegian Reservations"]

[Text] "When we did not support the U.S. nuclear strategy and the plan for the modernization of the British nuclear force at the meeting of the NATO Nuclear Planning Group (NPG), this was because we cannot express our agreement with something that we have not taken part in preparing ourselves," Defense Minister Thorvald Stoltenberg said in an interview with AFTENPOSTEN.

The communique from the NPG meeting in Brussels was altered after Stoltenberg had protested a phrase in which the NATO nations gave their support to the new nuclear strategy. According to information received by AFTENPOSTEN, the British representatives reacted very temperamentally to the Norwegian protest, while U.S. Defense Secretary Harold Brown accepted the Norwegian position immediately.

[Question] Do the Norwegian reservations expressed at the NPG meeting mean that security chiefs in this country do not agree with the U.S. nuclear strategy?

[Answer] They mean that we cannot give our immediate support to a plan that we have not been able to form a picture of. As far as the plan for the modernization of nuclear arms in Europe that we supported last year is concerned, we took part in working groups together with the other NATO nations for several years, and we were able to voice our views at any time. This resolution also gave us the opportunity to take an initiative, and this meant that I felt a shared responsibility for the joint plan which included the offer of negotiations. The fact that we did not support the original phrasing in the communique this time is due simply to the forms of international cooperation. NATO is not a supranational organ but a form of cooperation between independent states, and if we want a joint policy it must be prepared jointly.

[Question] Does the reservation concerning the British and U.S. plans mean that the government wants to take part in working out a new nuclear strategy?

[Answer] No, it does not. It is the United States that has the nuclear arms and the technological and strategic capacity. The U.S. Government wants to pursue its own policy and does not wish to have all the other nations involved in the decisionmaking process. This is naturally completely in order, but in that case it is impossible to come and ask for support for the policy when everything has been decided. This is simply a matter of forms of international cooperation where supranationality is not involved.

[Question] But you were given a briefing on U.S. nuclear strategy by Defense Secretary Harold Brown during the NPG meeting in Bodoe in June, and the Defense Ministry has surely had time to look into the matter in the intervening period?

[Answer] Yes, but what are we to do with the figures that are given to us and the appraisals in this connection? We should end up in an almost impossible situation if we were to get involved in this.

The U.S. nuclear strategy expressed in presidential directive 59 is the result of work that has been going on for 10-20 years, work in which we have not taken part and for which we do not have the necessary capacity. This is also a consequence of our own nuclear policy.

[Question] Has the reservation against supporting the U.S. nuclear strategy anything to do with the fact that the Soviet press has repeatedly published claims of changes in Norwegian nuclear policy?

[Answer] No, I made this decision purely on principles relating to a country's policy, and what we could agree to. And we cannot give our immediate support to a policy that we have not taken part in evaluating ourselves and for which we do not have the necessary capacity.

RIKSDAG DECIDES DEFENSE BUDGET FOR NEXT 5 YEARS

LD191252 Stockholm Domestic Service in Swedish 1130 GMT 19 Nov 80

[Text] The Swedish defense expenditure will be over 68 billion kroner over the next 5-year period. This was decided by the Riksdag today, and this changes the decision made in May this year when the Social Democrats' proposal for a reduction of almost 2 billion kroner was approved after a ballot.

LIBYA STOPS CYPRUS AIRWAYS FLIGHTS EFFECTIVE 1 DEC

NC201223 Nicosia I SIMERINI in Greek 20 Nov 80 p 12

[Text] According to information received by I SIMERINI, Cyprus Airways flights to Benghazi, Libya, are coming to an end. Unilateral decisions was taken by the Libyan authorities who recently informed "Cyprus Airways" accordingly. According to the same information, "Cyprus Airways" weekly flights to Benghazi will cease effective 1 December.

According to the same information, the Libyan authorities gave as excuse for what they describe as a "temporary" break in flights the fact that the Benghazi airport is under repair. However, this argument has convinced neither the "Cyprus Airways" officials nor the Cypriot Government.

According to other I SIMERINI information, two interpretations can be given to the new decision by the Libyan authorities:

The first is: Libya--for political reasons--is trying to diminish and play down its diplomatic ties with Cyprus even more.
The second is: The Cyprus Airways flights have been stopped for military reasons; perhaps Benghazi has been declared a military area.

Whatever the reason, this new development will adversely affect thousands of Cypriots who work in Libya while, simultaneously, there will be repercussions on bilateral commercial relations.

Government Statement

NC210853 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 21 Nov 80 p 8

[Text] The Ministry of Communications and Works, referring to I SIMERINI's report under the title "Cyprus Airways Flights to Benghazi Cease," has announced the following:

"On 27 October 1980, the Cyprus Civil Aviation Department received a message from the director general of Libyan civil aviation addressed to the directors general of civil aviation of Syria, Lebanon, Jordan, Cyprus, France and the United Kingdom informing them that Benghazi International Airport would not accept regular and special flights of passengers and cargo due to lack of adequate facilities. It also said that this arrangement was temporary. In light of this official Libyan announcement, Cyprus Airways has decided to suspend the Larnaca-Benghazi flight as of 1 December 1980."

TURKISH FOREIGN MINISTRY OFFICIAL ARRIVES FOR TALKS

TA201409 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1030 GMT 20 Nov 80

[Text] Turkish Foreign Ministry General Secretary Ambassador Karmuran Gurun arrived by air in the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus today. In a statement at the state Eronan Airport, Ambassador Gurun said that he was in Cyprus as the guest of President Rauf Denktas and said that his visit had no special purpose. In his statement, Turkish Cypriot Foreign Affairs, Defense and Tourism Minister Kenan Atakol expressed his pleasure over Ambassador Gurun's presence on the island and added that the fact that the director general had chosen Cyprus for his first trip abroad was significant. He said that this proved once more the importance attached by Turkey to the cause of the Turkish Cypriot community. The director of the Cyprus and Greece desk at the Turkish Foreign Ministry and his private secretary are accompanying Ambassador Gurun on his 5-day trip to Cyprus.

The Turkish Foreign Ministry general secretary and those accompanying him were received at the airport by the Turkish Ambassador to Lefkosa [Nicosia] Inal Batu; Foreign Affairs, Defense and Tourism Minister Kenan Atakol; an official of the Presidency; and Turkish Cypriot negotiator at the intercommunal talks Onan as well as other officials of the Turkish Embassy and the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus.

In the afternoon Ambassador Gurun will first lay a wreath at the Ataturk Momument in Lefkosa [Nicosia] and will then visit President Rauf Denktas, Federated State Legislative Assembly President Oguz Korhan, Prime Minister Mustafa Cagatay and Foreign Affairs, Defense and Tourism Minister Kenan Atakol.

KORHAN STRESSES NEED FOR TURKISH GUARANTEE IN SETTLEMENT

TA201429 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1215 GMT 20 Nov 80

[Text] The president of the legislative assembly, Mr Korhan, has reiterated that the Turkish Cypriot people would never accept a Cyprus settlement which would not include Turkey's guarantee. He was commenting on the statement by the president of the Greek Cypriot House of Representatives, Mr Mikhailidhis, during a speech he had recently given at Ruhr University in West Germany.

Mr Korhan said: I regret to say that although Mr Mikhailidhis referred to the Denktas-Makarios and Denktas-Kiprianou summit agreements as constructive steps toward the solution of the Cyprus problem, he has--by the accusations he leveled against Turkey and by the appeal he made to the European countries to exercise their influence toward the solution of the Cyprus problem to the Greek Cypriot people's liking--constituted a flagrant violation of the aforesaid summit meetings and in particular paragraph six of the Denktas-Kiprianou summit agreement. This attitude of Mr Mikhailidhis is also bound to have an adverse effect on the intercommunal talks which have been going on between the Turkish and Greek Cypriot interlocutors for some time in an atmosphere of good will and sincerity.

Mr Korhan continued: Mr Mikhailidhis' statement, that if Turkey and Greece had not been guarantor states the world independence would have been more meaningful, shows that Mr Mihaildhis--like other Greek Cypriot leaders--has not abandoned the idea of enosis, since Turkey's and Greece's guarantee was considered necessary in order to prevent any activity likely to promote, directly or indirectly, either union with any other state or partition of the island. The whole world knows that had it not been for the Turkish guarantee, which enabled Turkey to come to the aid of Turkish Cypriots in July 1974, the Turkish Cypriot people of the island would have been massacred and the island would have been united with Greece. Mr Korhan added: In these circumstances the objections raised by Mr Mikhailidhis to Turkey's and Greece's guarantee, which would in any way be operative only in the event of an activity to promote union or partition of the island, can have only one objective. That objective is to prepare the ground for a solution to the Cyprus problem without any such guarantee, thus leaving Turkish Cypriots and the fate of Cyprus in the hands of Greek Cypriots who have never abandoned enosis and will never do so.

Mr Korhan concluded: In this connection I would like to remind Mr Mikhailidhis and all those who think like him that the Turkish Cypriot people will never accept a solution which would not include Turkey's guarantee. The hardships, privations, and oppression we have suffered at the hands of Greek Cypriots even when there was a Turkish guarantee are still fresh in our memories and it is not difficult to guess what our fate and that of Cyprus would be without such a guarantee.

RAIF DENKTAS CRITICIZES INEFFICIENT GOVERNMENT

NC210800 Istanbul GUNAYDIN in Turkish 19 Nov 80 p 5

[Report by Resat Akar]

[Text] Nicosia--After having reached accord with the six deputies for Famagusta who had put forward an antigovernment memorandum, TFSC Prime Minister Mustafa Cagatay encountered tough opposition from Raif Denktas, deputy for Nicosia, of his own party. In a speech delivered in the assembly, President Denktas' son, Raif Denktas, argued in today's session of the legislative assembly that the present government was very inefficient and added: "No government could be more inefficient. We [the National Unity Party]--are responsible for all the offenses. We cannot evade this responsibility.

Raif Denktas further argued that the criticisms of the main opposition party were justified and that the government took no stept to counter the very serious acts of corruption that were being perpetrated. Raif Denktas continued: "We can no longer delude even ourselves, let alone the people. All the dirty dealings should be exposed without trying to conceal the truth." Prime Minister Mustafa Cagatay, who was badly disconcerted by the statement made by Raif Denktas, said: " I have listened to a very ugly speech by Raif Denktas. He is incapable of even performing his duty as a deputy. That is why he is resorting to cheap politics. He is, however, deceiving himself if he thinks he is going to score success through clumsy politics."

RAUF DENKTAS DENIES REPORTS OF POOR HEALTH

TA191541 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1530 GMT 19 Nov 80

[Text] President of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus Rauf Denktas has announced that he is in very good health.

In a special statement to our correspondent, who visited him today, Denktas said that there is nothing about his condition to cause concern and that he is in very good health. O AGON SAYS TURKISH CYPRIOTS FILIBUSTER TALKS AGAIN

NC210900 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 21 Nov 80 p 2

[From "Our Positions" column: "The Turks Tactics"]

[Text] There are strong indications that the Turkish Cypriots are returning again to the well-known tactics of filibustering the intercommunal talks. Denktas' statement on the missing persons and his threat to stop the dialogue as well as the tactics of not submitting and debating specific positions for Famagusta create pessimism on the prospects of the talks. The Famagusta issue was the first item on the agenda of the talks because it was decided that solving this problem would facilitate a more general solution, create the necessary climate of trust, and lead to further progress.

The fact that the Turkish side does not appear prepared to proceed quickly in settling the Famagusta problem shows hesitancy--the least that can be said--if not lack of desire in finding a solution to the Cypriot issue. Thus, hopes that the new round of talks could have led to settling the problem appear to be diminishing because the Turkish side, which holds the key to the solution, is not prepared to use it.

ITALIAN PRESIDENT PERTINI ARRIVES ON OFFICIAL VISIT

AT201310 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1230 GMT 20 Nov 80

[Text] President of the Italian Republic Alessandro Pertini arrived in Athens today on a 3-day official visit at the invitation of President of the Republic Karamanlis. The presidential aircraft landed at the Ellinikon airfield at 1200 and was escorted by four Phantom fighters of the Greek Air Force.

Pertini was welcomed by President Karamanlis, Prime Minister Yeoryios Rallis, Chamber of Deputies Chairman Papanspirou, majority opposition leader and PASOK Chairman Andreas Papandreou, Deputy Prime Minister Papakonstandinou, members of the Cabinet, military commanders, Italian Ambassador to Athens Paolini, Greek Ambassador to Rome Pesmazoglou and other officials. A unit of the presidential guard acted as guard of honor.

Karamanlis received Pertini at the foot of the aircraft's stairs. After an inspection of the honor guard and the national anthems of Italy and Greece, Karamanlis presented the guests of honor to Pertini. The two presidents then rode in the same automobile in a motorcade to Athens.

At the columns of Olympian Zeus the Italian president was welcomed by Athens Mayor Beis at the head of the municipal council. Addressing Pertini, the mayor lauded the personality of the Italian president and his struggles against fascism and underlined that Athens welcomes him with love in his capacity as first citizen of a nation which, together with the Greek nation, created civilizations which made the Mediterranean the historic cradle of humanity. Beis decorated the Italian president with the gold medallion of the City of Athens stressing that Pertini's vision for liberty, independence and democracy is also the vision of the inhabitants of the Greek capital.

In his answer Pertini expressed thanks for the warm welcome and happiness over the opportunity to visit Athens once again in his capacity as president of the Italian Republic. He described his visit as the culmination of friendship and cooperation developed, particularly in recent years, between Italy and Greece both unilaterally and at the European level. Athens and Rome, Pertini added, are the two points which support the political-economic system which today supports Europe and by extention the entire Western world. The joint progress and cooperation between the two countries, he concluded, allow them to play an important role in the progress of Europe and in making the Mediterranean a sea of peace and prosperity for its peoples. Pertini is accompanied by Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo.

The first Pertini-Karamanlis talk will take place this afternoon at the Presidential Palace. Talks between Greek and Italian foreign ministers Mitsotakis and Colombo will also start at the same time at the Foreign Ministry. Tonight Karamanlis will hold an official dinner at the Presidential Palace in honor of Pertini. The dinner will be followed by a large reception.

Tomorrow morning the Italian president will receive National Defense Minister Averof who will accompany him to the mausoleum of the unknown warrior where Pertini will lay a wreath. Later the Italian President will receive Interior Minister Stratos who will accompany him on a visit to the Akropolis. At noon tomorrow Pertini will confer with Prime Minister Rallis and later will attend a luncheon in his honor by the prime minister.

Tomorrow afternoon Pertini will visit the archeological museum accompanied by Interior Minister Stratos and in the evening he will hold an official dinner at the Italian Embassy in honor of Karamanlis, followed by a reception. Pertini's official visit will end Saturday but he will remain in Greece unofficially for one more day, visiting Kefallinia, Epidavros, Navplion and Mikinae.

AT191300 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1230 GMT 19 Nov 80

[Text] Greek-Albanian trade talks ended today with Commerce Minister Kalaltzakos and Albanian Foreign Trade Minister Nedin Hoxha signing the relevant report which, among other things, provides that representatives from the two countries will meet once a year to examine progress in Greek-Albanian trade exchanges and adoption of measures for further expansion.

The signing of the report took place in the presence of Deputy Trade Minister Tataridhis and Bashkim Dino, the Albanian ambassador to Athens.

Earlier, the two ministers conducted a broad review of development in trade and economic relations between the two countries. They established that there has been a considerable increase in trade exchanges and that there are prospects for further diversification of products from each country.

In conclusion there was an exchange of views and explanations were provided on the ways in which the clearing system will be abolished and on how remaining accounts will be settled.

It is estimated that trade exchange will reach $60 million from both sides during 1980.

KKE CALLS FOR GOVERNMENT'S RESIGNATION, ELECTIONS

AT201540 Athens RIZOSPASTIS Greek 20 Nov 80 p 1

[Resolution of the plenum of the Central Committee of the KKE, dated 15 November, published in summary under the heading: "Return to Military NATO and the Struggle for Rejection of the Policy of Subjugation and for Change"]

[Text] After recent developments in foreign and domestic policy a new situation has developed in our country. This will affect its progress in all sectors.

This conclusion was reached by the recent plenary session of the KKE which kept the following facts in mind.

--The return of Greece to NATO's military wing and the acceleration of the process for signing the new Greek-U.S. agreement on bases--actions which decisively encourage the regime of reliance upon and subjugation to imperialism.
--The government's insistence, with ever-increasing class intransigence, on the policy of one-sided austerity and the fundamental rejection by it of all just demands by the workers.
--The reactivization of old and new terrorist methods in order to strike at the organized peoples mass movement.
--All the above facts are coordinated with the imminent implementation of the agreement for accession to the EEC.

The plenum's resolution concludes that these developments create additional difficulties as well as new prerequisites for the expansion, toward higher levels, of the people's united and organized struggle.

With particular evaluation of the decisions to return to NATO and to accelerate the base agreement, the plenum stresses the heavy consequenses which these decisions will have upon the international position of our country, upon peace in the area, upon the progress of the Cyprus issue and upon the workers' standard of living.

The Central Committee of the KKE:

Demands the immediate resignation of the government which at this moment is at a far greater and full opposition with the peoples' and with national feelings and demands the declaration of elections under the simple proportional system of election.

It calls upon the Communists to utilize the great experience gained from recent peoples' mobilizations and to contribute with all their strength: Toward elevation of the organized mass movement to the height of today's requirements; toward a determined promotion of cooperation between the anti-imperialist democratic forces; toward development of the peoples' struggle for the defense of detente and peace, against NATO and the bases, for survival and the defense of democratic freedoms, against authoritarianism, terror and the undermining activities of imperialism.

It calls upon the Communists to offer, as of today, all their strength so that the KKE's line for the next election may become the property of the broadest possible masses. Under the specific conditions of this election battle the goal of taking authority away from the rightwing and the goal of electing a democratic government can only be attained through a determined effort to strengthen the KKE so that it can participate in the second distribution of seats. Today, more than ever before, a vote for the KKE will not only be beneficial but will at the same time take votes away from the right, adding them to the forces in support of change. It wlll strengthen the more concientious forces for change and will truly guarantee a democratic turn in the country's progress.

TAKHIDHROMOS QUOTES POLL TO DEMONSTRATE PASOK LEAD

AT201645 Athens TAKHIDHROMOS in Greek 20 Nov 80 p 14

[Text] A Panhellenic poll conducted in 107 cities, towns and villages for TAKHIDHROMOS by the "ICAP ELLAS AE" company, demonstrated the following:

--PASOK always remains the first party preference of Greek voters. This was also demonstrated by the poll we conducted last March.
--A very significant proportion of the populace (20 percent) has not yet decided which party to vote for. It is not only this 20 percent of the undecided who leave thier position unclear. There is another proportion of 30 percent who refused to reply to our question regarding their voting preference; there is a proportion of 5 percent who stated they will cast blank votes and another 2 percent (women) who stated they will vote for whoever their husband or son will tell them to. Consequently there is a total of 57 percent with unknown perferences..

In other words approximately 6 out of 10 (57 percent) persons questioned by us fundamentally did not specify which party they would vote for if elections were to be held.

This is a very high number and for this reason we do not think that we can draw correct conclusions, based on this poll, as to which party would get what percentage of votes in the eventuality of elections. Such conclusions can be drawn, with sufficient accuracy, only when the views of 5 to 10 percent of persons questioned remain undecided. They cannot be drawn when nearly 6 out of 10 persons questioned (57 percent) remain undecided as it is in our case. More generally those who draw conclusions from polls without mentioning the percentage of the undecided or of persons who refuse to reply to a question, cannot be considered serious researchers.

This is the reason which leads us to the decision not to publish the figures of the poll's results in respect of percentage of votes per party.

We will, however, mention what appear to be the more general trends among the electorate based upon our poll. We must state here that these trends, which were established in October, are approximately the same as those we also established with our poll last March. Specifically:

--PASOK has clearly increased its strength and continues to hold the number one position in voter preference.
--New Democracy has shrunk and has passed into second place but only with a small difference by comparison to PASOK.
--The KKE has replaced the Center in the third party position but with a sufficiently great difference between it and the two leading parties.
--All the other parties (EDIK, KODISO, Nationalist Front, Progressive Party, EDA, KKE (Interior) and so forth receive a very small proportion of votes.

As we have stated, this poll was conducted in 107 cities, towns and villages between 1 and 30 October. It was organized in such a way that it covered, in sample form, 100 percent of the population throughout Greece.

We asked the question: "If elections were held today which party would you vote for?" and we showed a card with the names of all parties printedon it. This was asked of 2,698 Greek men and women over 20 years of age. The poll was conducted by 47 male and female pollsters and their results were checked by 51 checkers.

Other facts emerging from the poll were the following:

The views of women in the sample group were the most undecided (63 percent) compared to men (49 percent).

PASOK appeared to have twice the number of male voters compared to women voters and it has a considerable superiority in the 20 to 29 age group while it suffered a considerable loss in groups over 50 years of age.

PASOK also enjoys a superiority among the more affluent classes and in the areas of Athens, Thessaloniki, Ipiros and Kriti.

In the Peloponnisos, Thraki and the Aegean Islands, PASOK and New Democracy demonstrate approximately the same strength.

In Sterea Ellas, Evvia, the Ionian Islands, Thessalia and Macedonia, New Democracy leads.

The KKE also shows a great strength among the 20-29 age group and a particular supremacy in towns with 50 to 130 thousand inhabitants and in the Ionian Islands.

The other parties demonstrate no particular strength and the poll was unable to establish whether they even exist in certain age groups and areas.

MILITARY APPEALS COURT APPROVES TERRORIST DEATH SENTENCE

TA201733 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 20 Nov 80

[Text] The Council of the Military Court of Appeals has approved the death sentences passed on Erdal Eren, who killed Sekeriya Onge, a military policeman, in Ankara's Yukari Ayranci District. The death sentence passed by the Ankara Martial Law Command Military Court was later reversed by the Military Court of Appeals and the Public Prosecutor's Office objected to this decision. The Council of the Military Court of Appeals reviewed the Eren file and found the public prosecutor's objection appropriate. The file was later sent to the Third Office of the Military Court of Appeals for examination. After examining the file, the Third Office decided that Eren should be sentenced to life imprisonment. However, the public prosecutor of the Military Court of Appeals again objected to this decision. The Council of the Military Court of Appeals discussed the file today and found the death sentence passed by the Ankara Martial Law Command Military Court appropriate and approved it. Eren martyred Sekeriya Onge during a demonstration in Ankara's Yukari Ayranci District on 2 February 1980.

LEADERS GIVE IMPRESSION OF REAGAN, REVIEW TALKS

Schmidt Remarks

LD221434 Hamburg DPA in German 1347 GMT 22 Nov 80

[Text] Hamburg, 22 Nov (DPA)--Future American President Ronald Reagan has given Chancellor Helmut Schmidt "a very strong feeling of having the firm determination" of wanting to start negotiations with the Soviet Union on arms limitation and to "conduct the negotiations tenaciously and patiently". This was stated by the chancellor on Saturday in an interview with North German Radio [NDR]. He, added, "this was very important for me."

Some, "perhaps a little exaggerated" remarks by Reagan, Schmidt thought were due to the election fight and to the fact that a lot of the American media "had picked on some things, giving them prominence" in preference to other matters of equal importance. The European press, in turn, had then once again blown up these remarks. "I believe that we in Germany received a biased impression of Ronald Reagan during the election fight", Schmidt said.

During his talk with Reagan, Schmidt gained the impression: "This is no rash man taking on unnecessary risks." He was certain that the new American administration will "bring together a large bunch of very experienced officials." There will be "a great accumulation of expertise, experiences and abilities." "I do not believe that the problems in the defense sector will be to the fore," Schmidt said in the interview made available by NDR to DPA. "I believe that the new American administration will concentrate at first on economic problems which are grave and similar to those everywhere in the world today following the second oil price explosion; they are similar to ours."

Genscher Reactions

LD231542 Hamburg DPA in German 1504 GMT 23 Nov 80

[Excerpt] Bon, 23 Nov (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher is confident that under the presidency of Ronald Reagan there will be a "very responsible American foreign policy." In an interview for South German Radio Genscher said on Sunday: "I believe that in the coming months not a few people who have been guided by prejudice will have cause to put aside those prejudices." In no way will the phase of the policy of detente and arms control policy as regards the Soviet Union come to an end under Reagan.

Genscher, who accompanied Chancellor Helmut Schmidt during his latest Washington visit, expressed his confidence that there will be no differences between Washington and Bon concerning the policy of detente and compromise. He pointed out that the new U.S. administration has also essentially declared its willingness to continue the process of strategic arms limitation. Genscher said that the coalition's stability in the foreign policy sector is assured, but nevertheless he also underlined that as broad a consensus as possible between government and opposition in foreign policy questions is desirable.

Press Comment on Talks

DW211138 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0605 GMT 21 Nov 80

[Press review on Washington meeting between Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and President-elect Ronald Reagan]

[Excerpt] NEUE OSNABRUECKER ZEITUNG writes under the headline "Establishment of Contact" among other things: The forthcoming change of government in Washington entails insecurity and uncertainly in the Western alliance.

The surprising meeting of top-ranking German politicians with Ronald Reagan demonstrates that the new White House master shares that opinion. By doing this he is learning from lessons of the past. In view of dangerous tensions in East-West relations, it is urgently necessary that the new orientation take place without causing big tremors. This is why decisive significance must be attributed to the talks Federal Chancellor Schmidt and Foreign MInister Genscher had in Washington.

BRANDT WARNS AGAINST INTERFERENCE IN POLAND

LD231612 Hamburg DPA in German 1539 GMT 23 Nov 80

[Text] Hamburg, 23 Nov (DPA)--SPD Chairman Willy Brandt has warned against interfering in the present political affairs in Poland. Only the Poles themselves can settle their internal problems. In an interview for the Bremen-published paper WESER-KURIER (Monday edition) the SPD chairman nevertheless emphasizes that Poland especially now should "not be written off," but should be seen "as an important partner in European cooperation, whether in the CSCE process or in the preparation of a conference on questions of disarmament."

Asked whether the Soviet Union as the leading Eastern power could permanently accept independent trade unions "not in accord with the system," Brandt referred to Lenin who, shortly before his death had asked (by analogy) "whether the thesis of trade unions being mere drive-belts of the party is tenable." In Poland, too, a new relationship could develop in which trade unions are no longer mere recipients of orders given by the party.

PAPER CRITICIZES NATURAL GAS DEAL WITH USSR

[Juergen Eick editorial: "The Other Side of Security"]

[Text] Is everything that is not forbidden permissible and therefore honorable? And most of all, must one fully exploit every juridical leeway in business if it increases turnover? Is it only the Federal Government's task to safeguard national interests? One can understand only too well the conflict of some directorates, and it would be too easy to moralize in a pharisaical way.

Yet the question must be put to the boards of directors of our biggest stock corporations and to a group of almost two dozen banks: Who will profit economically and politically more from that gas-line contract, the Soviet Union or the Federal Republic? Even more so since this is the largest credit German banks have ever granted a trade partner. This transaction is a prime political issue because of its size and the fact that the beneficiary of the credit is the imperial power of the East bloc which has never stated that it has given up world revolution as an aim of communist policy.

Certainly, it sounds tempting: Capacities will be filled for years, jobs will be safeguarded. But can we really enjoy that? Is our competitive strength so weak that we have to accept deals that have an embarrasing political odor? Are we perhaps committed to being grateful to the Soviet Union for curtailing unemployment in our country? This is a rather strange deal: The suppliers of the pipes also have to supply the Russians with the money so that they will be in a position to pay for what they have bought. The gas will only be supplied 5 years later.

We always pay, and vis-a-vis the GDR as well. The hostile delimitation acts of the GDR leadership against the Federal Republic naturally have the blessings of the Kremlin, if they were not even initiated by it. Our continuously exaggerated good conduct will probably bring us only the contempt of the cynics of power on the other side.

Why are we throwing this enormous credit at the Soviet Union, which cannot pay in an "orderly" way for what it buys because its economic efforts serve the continuous strengthening of its military powers? Professor Kernig of Trier pointed out recently that the strategic field involves everything in the Soviet Union such as personnel, materiel, energy, transport and construction work. Filling the gaps--technologically and with regard to capital--is what is reserved for the West, which thus makes its contribution to the continued Soviet armament.

"The German affinity for the Slavic East and particularly Russia is a chapter in itself" (Gerd-Klaus). Is this more historical statement still valid today? The names of some politicians immediately come to mind. The scornful criticism of the American President and the devoted bows to Brezhnev have not passed unnoticed by anybody, and the enormous credit for Moscow has been prepared politically in this respect, naturally at an exceptional interest rate which can be made to appear somewhat larger through some gas price compromise. German bank customers will ask themselves furiously why their credits from the same banks are so much more expensive.

The Americans around Reagan consider the natural gas project from the viewpoint of global energy supply, so to speak, as a welcome opportunity to decrease dependence on Arab energy sources. But they too see the danger of a threatening dependence, which one observes naturally with special skepticism so close to the Iron Curtain: Do we pay for safeguarding energy with increasing dependence on Moscow?

Once the project has been implemented we will be dependent on the Soviet Union for 30 percent of our gas consumption. The promoters of that agreement find it harmless; others find it tolerable or plainly intolerable. If somebody wants to cut off supplies to somebody else, there is hardly anything more ideal than a gas pipeline. It is a classic means for exerting pressure without any possibility of retort. The find thing about it for the Soviets is that they do not even have to apply that pressure; the effect is there simply because of the pipeline's existence. As the "fleet in being" of the English, the "pipeline in being" can open similar political effects for the Soviets in the direction of Finlandizing the Federal Republic.

The federal chancellor must explain to the Americans why the Federal Republic can increase the defense budget by just a real 1.7 instead of 3 percent, while German banks simultaneously give an unprecedented supercredit to the Soviet Union for its economic power, and thus indirectly also for its combat strength. Naturally the money comes from different "pots," but the Federal Republic is involved in any case. What a contradictory policy! The Federal Republic pursued an Olympic boycott because of the Russian invasion of Afghanistan, a boycott this paper supported by stating that such a general political line of utter reservation outght to be binding not only for sports but also for the economy. The planned vehement financial embrace of the Kremlin leaders goes beyond all bounds.

COMMENTATOR ON ISRAELI FOREIGN MINISTER'S VISIT

DW211215 Frankfurt Hessischer Rundfunk Network in German 1705 GMT 18 Nov 80

["Excerpts" from Commentary by Bonn Correspondent Paul Middeldorf]

[Text] If stating the bitter truth and differences of opinion is the standard for measuring relations between friends, relations between the Federal Republic and Israel are in the best of shape. It is a fact, however, that no agreement exists at present in the policy of both countries with regard to significant problems. The past casts its dark shadows, burdening Israel's relations with the Federal Republic more than Israel's relations with other states. In the course of his stay in West Germany Israeli Foreign Minister Shamir has missed little opportunity to point that out. He complained that the Federal Republic, like its European neighbors, showed understanding for the claims of the Palestinian Liberation Organization, which he calls a gang of murderers with whom one cannot negotiate. This is the core of the quarrel between Bonn and Tel Aviv. For the time being Israel still believes in the good will of the Germans, although it is less than ever convinced of the correctness of Bonn's policy. Israel hopes, however, that the European, or at least the German assessment will change under the influence of Reagan's Middle Eastern policy, which in preelection times was clearly pro-Israeli.

POLAND'S JAGIELSKI ARRIVES FOR TALKS ON AID

LD211232 Paris Domestic Service in French 1200 GMT 21 Nov 80

[Text] Polish First Deputy Premier Jagielski arrived this morning in Paris aboard a special plane.

He is having lunch at this very moment with Economy Minister Rene Monory, and will meet President Giscard d'Estaing at the Elysee this afternoon.

This is a lightning visit due to financial difficulties. The Polish people, shaken by the crisis, need money. It is said that Paris might answer favorably to the request for loans formulated by Warsaw. Economy is closely linked with diplomacy. In short, France might in fact be interested in lending money to Poland.

'Very Satisfied' With Talks

NC212000 Paris AFP in English 1916 GMT 21 Nov 80

[Text] Paris, 21 Nov (AFP)--Polish First Vice-Premier Mieczyslaw Jagielski said he was "very satisfied" with an hour-long meeting he had here today with French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing.

However, he declined to comment on the talks, and on how much economic aid France was prepared to give Poland, although French officials said yesterday that Polish requests would be examined in a positive spirit.

The Polish minister met French Economy Minister Rene Monory today and was due to meet Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet.

French Presidential Spokesman Jacques Blot said today that talks between the two sides on Polish requests for aid would continue in the next few days "so as to reach concrete decisions".

The spokesman said that the French president had confirmed that "France was disposed to reply to the worries of the Polish authorities in different areas".

Mr Blot said that the French president had accepted an invitation from Polish Communist Party leader Stanislas Kania to visit Poland on a date yet to be arranged.

EXPERTS ARGUE IN FAVOR OF ADOPTING NEUTRON BOMB

LD211535 Paris LE MONDE in French 16-17 Nov 80 pp 1, 6

[Jacques Isnard article: "French Military Officials Advocate Neutron Bomb"]

[Text] Within the space of a few days General Claude Vanbremeersch, Jean Martre and Michel Pecqueur, armed forces chief of staff, general representative for armaments, and Atomic Energy Commission [AEC] general administrator, respectively, have argued for French possession of the neutron bomb to the National Assembly Defense Committee members who gave each a separate private hearing at the Palais-Bourbon.

For his part Defense Minister Joel le Theule, after recalling that no decision to mass produce the neutron bomb would be taken before 1982-1983, was at pains to state at the Senate Foreign Affairs Committee meeting this week that the essential thing for France is to have enough diversified nuclear weapons for the president of the republic to be able to choose a potential response freely.

According to the AEC general administrator the French Armed Forces in 1980 have a total destructive power of 77 megatons--1 megaton is equal to 55 times the energy released by the Hiroshima explosion--divided among 200 different nuclear weapons.

In their statements to the deputies who were questioning them on the neutron bomb's place and role in the national deterrent force, the French military officials, therefore, unanimously argued for this weapons, highlighting only the advantages of the neutron bomb (enhanced-radiation weapon with reduced collateral damage).

In general Vanbremeersch's view France should follow all progress made in nuclear arms technology and, with regard to doctrinal considerations about use, must "not get a mental block" which, 15 years ago, would have made France reject the production of tactical nuclear weapons imposed by General de Gaulle. Mr Martre, for his part, pointed out that the neutron bomb is "the safest weapon among those offering equal efficacy." Finally, stressing that the "important thing is to have the most suitable weapon corresponding to the needs of the time," Mr Pecqueur said he thinks that the neutron bomb is "essentially a defensive weapon," and that when "fired at 2km intervals," an enhanced-radiation weapon "gives complete protection."

As is known the neutron weapon uses thermonuclear fusion and concentrates radiation and (direct or delayed) contamination effects while reducing the blast and heat effects produced by a fission tactical weapon of the type which already exists.

To put it simply, it could be said that the radiation effects produced by a 1-kiloton neutron weapon--the Hiroshima bomb released an energy of 18 kilotons--extend over an area of around 7 sq km, the same as for a 10-kiloton pure fission weapon. The so-called collateral effects are limited: An area of 3 sq km for blast and heat effects in the case of a 1-kiloton neutron bomb instead of an area of 32 sq km for thermal effects (heat) and 17 sq km for mechanical effects (blast) for a 10-kiloton pure fission weapon.

Hence the possibility of using much weaker charges to neutralize and adversary without causing too much collateral damage near friendly troops in contact with the enemy or in inhabited areas where it could be decided to ban nuclear fire.

When speaking to the Defense Committee deputies Mr Pecqueur suggested that the AEC technicians are now able to obtain these specific results with a 2-kiloton weapon. "We must continue the research started at the end of 1976 and go further," the AEC general administrator explained.

If a 1-kiloton weapon also has a terminal guidance system which makes the end of its trajectory very accurate on impact, it can penetrate the ground to a depth of some 30m and create a crater in an airport runway putting it out of use permanently without causing nearby external contamination.

Similarly such enhanced-radiation weapons could provide defense at medium and low altitudes against air attack or could protect very sensitive areas of territory by means of specific surface-to-air missiles.

The general representative for armaments envisaged that neutron warheads could, one day, be mounted on the Hades missile which is being studied as the replacement for the army's Pluton surface-to-surface tactical missile.

The Hades program, costing an estimated Fr5 billion consists of placing a missile which can carry its charge 250km on a double mount on a wheeled vehicle.

The Hades missile, with a range twice that of the existing Pluton missile, would make it possible to fire deep into the enemy's defense system while leaving the army 50-60km away from the line of contact. It could be equipped with a nuclear warhead, derived from the weapon prepared for the generation-85 nuclear submarines or with a neutron bomb having an accurate guidance system.

None of the military officials questioned by the deputies specified how many such weapons it would be desirable to have in the French panopoly. Mr Pecqueur stressed that only the tests and studies on experimental devices cost a great deal. Mass production of operational weapons would not, on the other hand, require major expenditures. "Doubling the existing number of weapons," the general administration stated, "would be possible simply by increasing the AEC's budget by 5 percent."

When speaking to the Defense Committee Mr Pecqueur stated that in 1980 France has a total nuclear power of 77 megatons, comprising 200 different charges. He estimated that the United States has an arsenal of 20,000 weapons of which 7,000 are deployed in Europe.

The destructive potential of the strategic arms in service is difficult to evaluate according to objective criteria. However, according to the AEC technicians, it is possible to consider that a 1-megaton charge would destroy--with 50 percent of the damage observed in the field and its surrounding area--a surface area of 55 sq km, in other words around half the area of the city of Paris (105 sq km).

Mr Valery Giscard d'Estaing explained to journalists who interviewed him at the Elysee on 26 June that "the nuclear deterrent involves many risks of which one, which is directed against the adversary, is deadly." "Any nuclear attack against French soil would automatically lead to a nuclear strategic response," the head of state concluded.

Asked to comment on "this uncertainty of the final risk and, especially, of the deadly risk" run by an adversary, General Vanbremeersch answered the question put to him by members of Parliament in a categorical manner by paraphrasing the president's statements as follows: "Any nuclear attack against our territory, even by one one enemy missile, will lead to an all-out response."

According to statements by Mr Martre and Mr Pecqueur, the French arsenal is to acquire in 1985 two new--strategic and tactical--arms system which will very considerably increase its destructive power.

For instance, 5 of the 6 strategic submarines will be equipped with the M-4 missile whose range is 4,000km and which carries 6 150-kiloton thermonuclear warheads, each of which can either be dropped in succession on targets situated near one another or be released over a single objective at spaced intervals. Taking into account this kind of dispersal the overall effect of the M-4 missile is equivalent to that of a 2-megaton missile. A single submarine equipped with 16 M-4 missiles, as planned for the first vessel called "L'Inflexible," will be able to threaten more targets of various kinds than can all the present French submarines put together.

The length of time during which submarines will be able to remain at sea will be increased. In fact, according to Mr Pecqueur, the periods between the servicing of warheads, made necessary as a result of the physical wear and tear of the materials of which they are made, such as tritium, will be increased from 2 years and 6 months to 5 years.

And, finally, in the tactical sphere, by 1985, some 15 Mirage-IV nuclear bombers will be equipped with the ASMP medium-range air-to-ground missile. Mr Martre stated that this missile would, depending on the model, carry a nuclear payload of 100, or 300 kilotons and that its range will be some 100km. At a later state, air force Mirage-2000 penetration aircraft and naval aviation Super-Entendard aircraft are to be equipped with ASMP missiles, the former by mid-1986 and the latter at the beginning of 1987.

With their two types of payloads, these aircraft could be used to attack so-called "hardened"--resistant and protected--targets situated at the rear of the battlefield, such as airfields, in any weather and at a very low altitude.

Addressing deputies, both the chief of staff of the armed forces and the AEC general administrator have independently developed the idea that, under certain circumstances, aircraft like the Jaguar and Mirage-IV equipped with ASMP missiles would cease to be tactical arms systems and, because of their operational range would, in fact, become part of the anticity or antieconomic forces strategic nuclear arsenal. Similarly, once equipped with ASMP missiles, Super-Etendard aircraft based on aircraft carriers would become part of the strategic air force.

FRANCOIS-PONCET ON LIBYAN INTERVENTION IN CHAD

[Text] Questioned in the National Assembly on Wednesday, 19 November, by Jacques Baumel (RPR, Hauts-de-Seine), who mentioned the intervention by Libyan forces in Chad, Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet said: "The situation in Chad is more tragic and more complex than ever. The civil war which began a long time ago is the result of foreign interference which France comdemned. It is also the result of the fact that the various factions in Chad refuse to reach agreement and put the national interest first. The withdrawal of French forces was a response to the wish expressed by the groups forming the Chadian Government and was in keeping with the desire expressed by the African states at the Lagos meeting.

"At present reliable reports indicate apparently large troop movements coming from Libya. The legal basis of this intervention is unclear, as is the objective assigned to the troops. The French Government will continue to follow developments in the situation with the aim of ensuring that Chad's territorial integrity and independence are respected. In this respect the French Government's attitude will be determined by the reaction from the Chadian population and African states, and it would be surprising if those states did not react to foreign incursions into that country."

THATCHER, FORLANI CONFER ON EC, INTERNATIONAL ISSUES

LD240355 Rome Domestic Service in English 0310 GMT 24 Nov 80

[Excerpt] The international situation following the election of Ronald Reagan, and Community questions in preparation for the European summit set for early December in Luxembourg were the main topics at the Rome talks between the British prime minister, Margaret Thatcher, and the Italian Prime Minister, Forlani.

The two leaders favor an immediate relaunching of the collaboration between the United States and Europe. This, they believe, is essential in the present international situation which is characterized by many destabilizing factors.

In the meantime there has been a meeting between the two respective foreign ministers, Lord Carrington and Emilio Colombo. Although the two ministers expressed concern over developments in Poland they were optimistic about the situation in Madrd at the CSCE.

COMMENTS ON OUTCOME OF PERTINI GREECE VISIT

LD240244 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 2130 GMT 23 Nov 80

[Text] President Pertini has returned to Rome and has expressed satisfaction with the results of his visit to Greece. Our correspondent in Athens reports:

Both the Greek press and public opinion agree that the visit of President Pertini was a success both on the European level and on a bilateral level, for the state visit has taken place on the eve of Greece's entry into the EEC and has reaffirmed the solidarity between the two countries. Such solidarity is necessary to overcome any problems which may arise from competition in the economic field within the framework of a realistic view of the situation in the Mediterranean area, for the defense of the common interests and to promote a better balance between the northern and the southern regions of the Community.

The visit also had repercussions on the friendship between the two peoples, due greatly to the personality of Alessandro Pertini, who won the affection of the public by his informality, especially during his visit to Cefalonia. At Cefalonia he paid a special tribute to the men of the Acqui Division who fell while fighting against Nazi reprisals for having tried to wipe off the shame of the fascist war against Greece.

AFTERMATH OF EARTHQUAKE, MOBILIZATION REPORTED

LD240340 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 0213 GMT 24 Nov 80

[Excerpts] It is feared that the number of victims of yesterday's earthquake, which was felt in almost all of Italy, is destined to increase. In Naples, where a nine-story building collapsed in the (?Soggioreale) quarter, firemen have up to now recovered four bodies. Mobile units of the Interior Ministry's Civil Protection Department are already enroute to the disaster areas.

The under secretary of the interior, Angelo Sansa left for Potenza as soon as the seriousness of the earthquake was clear. Even Foreign Minister Colombo has left for the Lucanian city.

Regarding the railway situation: The train services in the quake-hit zones were interrupted after the first quake so as to check the lines. They were found [word indistinct] unaffected and service has now been restored.

EANES DISCUSSES ELECTION IN ADDRESS TO NATION

LD220036 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2030 GMT 21 Nov 80

[Address to the nation by Portuguese President Antonio Ramalho Eanes on 21 November--live or recorded]

[Excerpts] Portuguese people: Through the last few years, Portugal has lived in peace and liberty; our institutions have functioned; the democratic regime has been consolidated and has proven its vitality. Despite the political crises, in my capacity as the president of the republic I have been able to exercise a stable and moderating role, which ensured democracy, social tranquillity and stability and the conditions which have made possible the effective economic recovery begun in 1976.

Comparing the situation which prevailed at the time I took office and the current situation, with the least of objectivity it will be recognized that a democratic order has now been established, that there is now unity and discipline in the armed forces, that we have safeguarded the nation's independence, and the national identity has been strengthened, earning for Portugal a new prestige in the world. We have succeeded in making social strides, despite the fact that there is more still left to be done in this sphere; and that we are now in much more favorable conditions to distribute, with justice, the wealth we ourselves have produced, providing better living conditions to every Portuguese citizen.

On my part, I have not spared efforts of any kind, so that I could duly accomplish the mission for which I was elected by the Portuguese people. And I say, only for the purpose of emphasis, that as a man without personal ambitions I have done my utmost to fulfill with complete seriousness and devotion the duties and requirements of the presidential office to which I was elected by the people.

In all circumstances I have sought to unite and not to divide the Portuguese people. I have sought to induce in a climate of tolerance, the (?pace) of dialogue indispensable to the good harmony in Portuguese society and to national solidarity. [Words indistinct] of tolerance and understanding among the Portuguese people is the fundamental respect for the opinion of others and for the eminent dignity of man which I also hope to see maintained and reinforced in the coming election campaign. In this campaign all citizens will freely express and manifest their views, in the full exercise of their rights and in perfect conditions of equality throughout the national territory. All candidates must be given the same and equal opportunities, without exceptions or discrimination of any kind, namely, in the state-owned media which should not overlook [words indistinct] to which their role is subordinated in this period, so as to ensure that equality.

Those concerned must, at their various levels of responsibility, comply and ensure the compliance with the laws and directives which will make the popular suffrage authentically genuine. As far as I am concerned, as the head of state, I hereby assure you that I will fully carry out my responsibilities and, if necessary, the power with which I am legally vested, to the ultimate consequences.

Portuguese people, thanks to 25 April 1974, it is for the second time that you will be democratically and freely choosing your president of the republic. This election, by direct and universal suffrage, ascribes to the president of the republic, as an organ of sovereignty, an exceptional importance in our present political system. The president of the republic and the Assembly of the Republic are the only bodies of power which are elected directly by the people. For these reasons, in the context of our constitutional system, the governments enjoy the political confidence of these two organs of sovereignty. For my part, I have always respected and will respect the outcome of all elections, the direction and the vindications of the Portuguese voters. Every one, particularly those holding responsibilities, are dutybound to observe the rules of a pluralist democracy and the dictates of popular sovereignty. And those not doing so should be reminded that experience shows that the judgment of those (?seeking to eliminate others politically) is often wrong. With the judgment of history, and above all the judgment of a people so good and generous as ours, the voters will never deceive themselves.

Portuguese people, on taking office in 1976, I stressed that we are a nation which has always written a new page of greatness following each crisis. Therefore, I add that whatever the obstacles and difficulties, I am sure that we will pursue our historic destiny and win our future in peace, in liberty, in security, in justice and in progress. I trust that the election campaign will run in a tolerant and in a (?dignified) manner, in a climate of order and democratic coexistence and that on 7 December every eligible citizen will fulfill his or her civic and patriotic duty of voting.

SOARES CARNEIRO OUTLINES PLATFORM FOR ELECTION

LD211501 Lisbon DIARIO DE NOTICIAS in Portuguese 15 Nov 80 p 3

[Excerpts] Publishing his political manifesto, General Soares Carneiro indicated the need for "efforts" to ensure that the constitutional revision "is affected by a broader consensus of deputies, reaching the two-thirds majority required by the text of the constitution." Acknowledging the size of these efforts--not so great, however, "as to distort the revision in its basic essentials"--the candidate backed by the Democratic Alliance stated the possibility of "recourse to a national referendum in the event of an impasse" and indicated that he favored "recourse to a referendum, if necessary."

The document presented yesterday afternoon in the Sheraton Hotel by Soares Carneiro in the presence of several dozen guests and journalists states in its preamble that "Portugal is at last waking up to the reality that two conflicting dreams have avoided reality"--the Salazarist, imperial dream, "incapable of understanding the changes in the world," and the revolutionary dream which followed it, "cheating on 25 April and falling into the orbit of an alien imperialism." And he stressed the need to "decide on a coherent national plan" and to "summon up the courage to implement it everywhere in the nation and in all state services."

In his introductory remarks, having stressed that "the Portuguese state is still in crisis, without coherent leadership, either for want of profound solidarity among government bodies or for want of clear demarcation of authority," Soares Carneiro also emphasized that if he becomes president, "the president will never change course according to the circumstances or if it suits him personally," adding:

"The national plan which I present to you and without which my candidacy would not make sense is based on two fundamental considerations: a realistic assessment of what we are and the sure conviction that we can make Portugal a more just, more prosperous and freer country."

In the two following chapters Soares Carneiro considered the problem of the Portuguese communities and political institutions, stressing, with reference to the former, that "the Portuguese people, who have lived and are living their history dispersed over several continents, find themselves in the privileged position of being able to understand the interplay of interests and cultures which today more than ever before characterizes the world." emphasizing at that point that "for us Portuguese the nation is not and never has been a static idea.... Today, having returned to the frontiers when we set out," he said, "but having left behind during our journey around the world part of our soul and many of our creations, we remain in constant contact with the communities we have established on all continents."

Broaching the second point, he started from the premise that "the state and its laws must guarantee the security and freedom of the individual, at the same time protecting him against undue exercise of authority and lack of it," alluding first to the weakening of this authority in 1975, which created favorable conditions for "organized forces to gain power," and then to the subsequent experience of "an ostensibly strong state which seriously restricted individual freedom and the autonomy of civil institutions," adding, in this connection, that "the autocratic regime overthrown on 25 April 1975 oppressed Portuguese society, patronizing citizens as if it were dealing with minors or irresponsible people."

Soares Carneiro deduced from these two situations that "we now have to build a strong but not oppressive state" because, he stressed, "the state's democratic authority must be strengthened, while ensuring that the activities and initiatives of individuals, groups and civil institutions are not unduly restricted by injudicious and unlimited state control."

In light of this Soares Carneiro proposed a course of "full democratization of political institutions, releasing them from all remaining forms of undemocratic tutelage," including, in this connection, the existence of the Council of the Revolution, and he regarded it as intolerable that "political forces of a totalitarian tendency should retain in Portuguese public life--thanks to the complacency of the powers that be--an influence out of all proportion to their electoral power."

By extension of the principle that he advocates, Soares Carneiro maintained that "in that kind of regime the president of the republic ensures the normal functioning of the institutions and their transparency," which presupposes, as the document explains, not "openly or covertly" antagonizing other sovereign organs, while recognizing "the supremacy of parliament in terms of legislation and not competing with the government in the implementation of the country's general policy."

On the other hand, Soares Carneiro expressed his respect for the parties and the need for collaboration, "especially with those of a democratic nature," as an essential way of "consolidating democracy;" but he pointed out that they and the Assembly of the Republic do not present an "exhaustive picture of the country's public life." Stressing that "it is incumbent on the head of state, as institutional arbiter, to take the initiative in cases of serious conflict or obstinate political deadlock," Soares Carneiro went on:

"In this case he has at his disposal three exceptional measures: the right to dissolve the assembly and the power to call a referendum can immediately put the ball in the people's court; the declaration, in the latter case, of a state of emergency or martial law will prevent certain people from taking it away from them by subverting democracy. I would be very sparing with these measures, which are not to be squandered. But if they were really necessary I would not hesitate."

The theme of the defense of the principle of decentralization, which "the real concept of the state strongly implies," was broached by Soares Carneiro when he embarked on an assessment of the relationship between the economy and society. First, he pointed out that it is not enough for the state not to become oppressive, to be democratic in its institutions. It must also "limit its own activity, respecting private persons, individuals' or groups' freedom to act."

Thus, the Democratic Alliance believes that "the state should not want to control everything.... Without relinquishing, of course, their functions of general guidance and their supplementary role, the public authorities must, above all, create favorable conditions for the demonstration of initiative by private persons."

Having emphasized that the gravest excesses of state control have been perpetrated in the economy and stressing that "in no other West European country does the state monopolize a complex of economic sectors like banks, insurance companies, basic industries and breweries," Soares Carneiro also stressed that "this exclusion of private enterprise," which he deemed incompatible with the desire to join the Common Market, "is serious in itself because of the immediate harm it causes in terms of the efficiency of enterprises and expansion of investments." He added:

"This posture is reinforced by certain provisions of the current constitution of the republic, which must be modified."

Advocating actions in favor of private enterprises and "correlation of it with the public sector," Soares Carneiro said: "This kind of support is due and will at last be rendered without damaging the state's activity in terms of guidance and discipline."

He went on: "Effective discipline on the part of capitalists presupposes that the state is fair with them, supports them and guarantees them stability. Collectivism has resulted in the flourishing in Portugal of bureaucratic irresponsibility and wild capitalism at odds with the treasury and the laws, a builder of immoral fortunes lacking any social function."

The main vectors of Portuguese foreign policy were in some cases referred to in critical terms by General Soares Carneiro who, having alluded to relations with Portuguese-speaking countries and our participation in NATO, talked about Portugal's entry into the EEC:

"The deliberate diversification of foreign relations is essential to the preservation of our national independence, without which cultural autonomy declines and freedoms are lost in many cases."

Constitutional revision was also on the candidate's agenda. He said his options are "consonant with those of the Democratic Alliance and point unequivocally to the need for a serious constitutional revision."

And he said in this connection: "With regard to civil and political freedoms the current text is generous and must be preserved. But its ideological principles need to be radically amended to eliminate the revolutionary and Marxist-oriented pronouncements incombatible with the formulation of a Western-style democracy. The enshrinement of a double legitimacy is also out of keeping with a Western-style democracy since the latter only recognizes that which is expressed in free elections, rejecting any tutelage on the part of political vanguards."

Soares Carneiro stressed that "a Western-style constitution does not impose any economic or social development model either," and then he summed up his candidacy:

"It is not a prophetic or messianic mission but merely a matter of making myself available to the people's vote."

MADRID RADIO REPORTS ON 21 NOV CSCE SPEECHES

LD220034 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2100 GMT 21 Nov 80

[Report from the Palace of Congresses]

[Excerpt] Human rights was the subject today at the Madrid conference: 18 countries gave their points of view, among them the United States, Great Britain, the two Germanies, Luxembourg, Czechoslovakia and Spain. The East is insisting on the security aspects, seeking above all a conference on disarmament, while the Western countries are insisting that it is necessary to reach a balance between disarmament and human rights. One significant speech today was from Poland. The Polish delegate said that there could not be military detente alone, and he asked for a balance between economic and human rights.

The speech by the U.S. delegate, Griffin Bell, can be considered less aggressive than that given by his colleague, Kampelman, at the opening of the conference. Although Bell spoke of violations of human rights and Afghanistan at various points in his speech, he also included recognition of some improvements in the human rights situation, noting that 50,000 East Germans had visited the FRG and a similar number of Jews living in the Soviet Union had been able to leave during 1979. At the conclusion of his speech, Bell opened a window to hope by describing what could be a future of understanding in which Europe ceases to exist in two blocs and shares interests and values.

Luxembourg, which spoke in the name of the EEC, asked for the ending of the practice of trade restrictions, and after also insisting on a balance between disarmament and human rights, said that in the 1980's the countries of Europe would have to accept the political changes which would be produced in the march toward peace, freedom and cooperation.

As previously, England gave the harshest speech of the Western countries. It insisted on the need to withdraw Soviet troops from Afghanistan and referred to the recent UN condemnation on this subject.

The FRG took a moderate and pragmatic line, restricting itself mainly to facts. The German delegate said, for example, that a quarter of a million citizens from the East visited his country last year, although he did not fail to criticize the bureaucratic obstacles in the way of getting a visa, which makes it necessary sometimes to make five applications. He also referred to the latest measures taken to increase the amount of hard currency which had to be exchanged in order to enter East Germany and the interference with radio broadcasts from the West.

SUAREZ INTERVIEWED ON TERRORISM, MONARCHY, GIBRALTAR

LD222205 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1900 GMT 22 Nov 80

[Report on press conference given by Spanish Prime Minister Adolfo Suarez in Seville on 22 November]

[Excerpts] Adolfo Suarez said that ETA will be eradicated from the Basque country and will not gain any political victory. Despite this, the prime minister said, he was conscious of theSpanish people's concern over terrorism which came from the lack of any spectacular results. Suarez said that the vital task of getting rid of popular support for terrorism was being achieved, and he said that the results, while not the best, are good. In conjunction with this policy it is necessary to deepen Basque self-government, which will bring about an antiterrorist reaction, signs of which are already visible.

Asked whether there had been any concrete results from the Spanish foreign minister's visit to France, Adolfo Suarez said that the job of getting rid of terrorism is Spain's responsibility, but that violence has international implications which make international cooperation necessary, specifically with France, because terrorists live in its territory. Concerning concrete results, he said:

[Begin recording] I think that one thing accomplished during this visit by Mr Perez Llorca was the political decision of the French Government to deepen, as the note issued by the Spanish and French foreign ministers said, collaboration and cooperation in the struggle against terrorism. In what way can this cooperation be measured? It can be measures in a very obvious way, in the rapid processing of the extradition requests made by the Spanish authorities, and it can also be measured by collaboration and cooperation over information at a police level which will go deeper than that existing at present. [end recording]

Asked whether he planned a visit to France to discuss the subject of terrorism, Adolfo Suarez said that he may make a rapid visit but that basic cooperation will be a matter for the Foreign and Interior Ministries.

Finally, asked whether the development of terrorism could bring about the dissolving of parliament and the calling of new elections, the prime minister said that in the first place, there is no direct relation between terrorist activity and an early election and in the second place that the government's decision is to fulfill its legislative mandate for the sake of the country's political stability.

In connection with recent dismissals in the military, he said that the internal decisions of the armed forces should not be exaggerated.

Another reporter asked him to give an assessment of the 5 years of the monarchy, and Suarez replied:

[Begin recording] Perhaps I don't have the time to assess 5 years. It is obvious that from the first moment that his majesty the king, Juan Carlos, assumed the title of head of state, of king, as I have said on many occasions, his majesty the king was a gift from providence at the most delicate moment in the country's history. I think that his majesty the king has fully taken on the many problems facing Spain, at a regional and national level, and I would also say the many personal problems of every Spaniard, whatever his ideology. [end recording]

Finally, at the end of more than an hour's press conference, Adolfo Suarez, when asked about Gibraltar, said that since the Lisbon meeting where the conditions were laid down for developing the talks, resuming communications and equality of rights, progress has been made in some areas, but that until there is full equality and reciprocity between the Spaniards working in Gibraltar there will be no opening of communications.

PNV, GOVERNMENT EXCHANGE STATEMENTS ON ETA

PNV Communique

LD220010 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2000 GMT 20 Nov 80

[Text] The ruling body of the Basque Nationalist Party [PNV] has issued a communique in connection with the Front for Peace and Against Terrorism, which says that the PNV has already said that violence or terrorism in Euskadi stems from concrete political reasons and that one reason behind the continuation of support for ETA is precisely the lack of belief in, or evidence of, the establishment or real autonomy in Euskadi.

Government Reply

LD220026 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1900 GMT 21 Nov 80

[Text] The government's reply to the Basque Nationalist Party's communique. The secretary of state for information, Rosa Posada tells us what it is:

[Begin recording] Before reporting on the procedural matters [of the cabinet meeting] I would like to tell you that at the cabinet meeting the communique issued yesterday evening by the ruling body of the Basque Nationalist Party [PNV] was examined and on the basis of this examination the government wishes to make public the following communique:

The PNV leadership has issued a surprising and confusing communique which the public will have to assess as it deems appropriate, but on which the government cannot remain silent. It is regrettable that a communique full of ambiguities should attempt to mix up and confuse the terrorism of ETA with the economic problems affecting the Basque country and the whole of Spain, with the implementation of the autonomy statute and, particularly, with the economic agreements.

It is absolutely unacceptable to claim justification on political grounds for the terrorist activity of ETA and other violent actions when an autonomy statute is being fully implemented, which was drawn up with the support and backing of the PNV, which establishes self-government in the Basque country, which allows the maximum powers and recognizes the full identity of the Basque people. The development of the statute is taking place with maximum speed and study and negotiations over the economic agreements for the Basque country have nothing whatsoever to do with terrorism, though these do have to be made without privileges or without discrimination, showing the proper solidarity with other Spaniards.

The government also takes the view that no one can feel himself justified in killing and regrets the lack of responsibility of a party with the duty to govern, which, after only just taking office, recommends giving up, believes the political arena too difficult, and, in a burst of anger, throws in the towel.

Similarly, the government repudiates any political position which does not recognize the need for the total rejection of terrorism. Therefore, the lack of solidarity reflected in the communique is evident, especially in calling the Front for Peace, set up jointly by those parties which genuinely wish to get rid of terrorism, a front to play to the gallery. [end recording]

PNV Note on Government Reply

LD222322 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1900 GMT 22 Nov 80

[Text] The Executive Committee of the Basque Nationalist Party [PNV], the Euskadi Buru Batzar, has issued a communique in response to the government's reply to a first communique by the PNV on violence in the Basque country. The note says the following:

The Euskadi Buru Batzar of the PNV learned with surprise of the note issued by the Council of Ministers which met in Madrid yesterday, in reply to our own. This Euskadi Buru Batzar ratifies the communique it issued on the 20th in every respect, and repeats once again that the PNV rejects the use of violence and terror, in all its manifestations, and also repeats its complete determination to work with all the means at its disposal to bring about peace in Euskadi, with no conditions attached. However, in view of the mistaken interpretations, whether deliberate or not, of our document, in particular the note already referred to from the Council of Ministers, we feel it is necessary to make the following points:

That the government has not yet realized that ETA and its commandos are one thing, and the mass of people who support the position on which ETA bases its terrorist activity or support its activities at the ballot box entirely another.

But to say, as the government's note does, that the implementation of the autonomy statute, in particular the economic agreements, and the special situation of the Basque country have nothing to do with the political reasoning with which these groups try to justify their unjustifiable actions--which the PNV has never shared--constitutes for us, at best, serious shortsightedness on the part of the government. To say that the statute is being fully implemented, as laid down by law, and that this law is a reality in full force, is false, and to maintain that the development of the statute is being carried out with the maximum speed is completely false. We are pleased to see that the government says via its spokesman that the way to achieve peace in the Basque country is through the deepening of autonomy, because this is precisely the basis of our argument.

This party, which has assumed the responsibility of governing, does not believe that remaining in power is the supreme end of a party or of some people, but it believes that power is a service and if it is prevented, whether deliberately or not, from exercising the responsibility which the people has conferred upon it, and it has accepted, it will not hesitate in the event to denounce the situation.

The government says that the lack of solidarity revealed in the document is obvious, especially in calling the Front for Peace, made up jointly of the parties which genuinely want to end terrorism, a front to play to the gallery. This phrase is a model of manipulation and twisting of words and reality. Our reply to such manipulations:

1. What we said is that the creation of a front playing to the gallery is easy, but that we cannot speak of a joint front if it does not take on all the complexity of the vital issues involved in defending peace and democracy;

2. While the government was composing its unfortunate note talks were going on yesterday between the different parties which in a positive sense, were leading to concrete agreements on which to base their actions;

3. The Front for Peace has not been constituted yet as all the participating parties have said.

UCD LEADER REJECTS COALITION, DENIES PROBLEMS

LD211041 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 13 Nov 80 p 10

[Mary Merida interview with Union of the Democratic Center [UCD] Secretary General Rafael Calvo Ortega: "UCD Definitely Does Not Want Coalition Government"]

[Excerpt] We discussed all the topics currently of concern to the UCD with the party's Secretary General Rafael Calvo Ortega, who started by saying that the UCD definitely does not want a coalition government and that the idea had been introduced by the Spanish Socialist Workers Party, not by the UCD. "It is the socialists who want this coalition government because of their own problems, and this is why they are putting forward this idea, which we do not support because we are not in favor of it." "And those who say that we need a shot in the arm must be told that there is no country in the world where a ruling party which has won a vote of confidence needs a shot in the arm."

[Question] Nevertheless, it does seem that the UCD still has some internal problems and critical sectors among its own members who are hindering its political action, apart from serious leadership problems. Is this not so?

[Answer] The UCD has fewer problems than other parties and this is a fact. The point is that we are a free party whose members' freedom of expression is important. One reason why or disagreements--which are experienced by any other party, for that matter--are known is because we do not try to hide them. As for leadership problems, it is not true that we have any; and it is to broach and debate all these and other issues that we will be holding our next congress, our second.

I believe it is clear that the opinions of those who claim that the UCD does have leadership problems are completely biased, as are many others. It is also being said, for instance, that our congress will be postponed, and this is not true either, but merely the result of another biased opinion.

[Question] But is it true that at the UCD's January congress there will be a debate on the advisability of separating Adolfo Suarez's posts as prime minister and party chairman?

[Answer] Yes, this is indeed one of the topics on which a report will be presented and which will therefore be debated at the congress.

[Question] But is it your personal opinion at present that the two posts should be separated or not?

[Answer] At present I believe not.

[Question] Why not? Is this not done in other countries?

[Answer] Yes, but political parties and situations differ from country to country. A 3-year-old party is not the same as a 60-year-old one, so that comparisons are not valid in this case.

[Question] Could there be biased opinions on this point too?

[Answer] Of course, several.

"UCD, An Expanding Party"

[Question] Influential representatives of the political and financial worlds assert that the UCD is an unstable party. As its secretary general, what do you have to say about it?

[Answer] What I say is that the UCD is a growing party, that we are probably the only one whose membership is growing and that the party's ability to be self-financing is also increasing. Therefore not only is it not becoming weaker but it is continually expanding, with the opening of new offices, the establishment of local committees, and so forth. Before expressing opinions to the contrary, people should be fully acquainted with the real situation, as I am, and this is why I can speak and know what I am talking about, like my colleagues in the Executive Committee, I therefore stress that the UCD is continually expanding and that its ability to finance itself is increasing, with the consequent strengthening that this presupposes.

I SIMERINI CRITICIZES ABSTENTION IN UN AFGHANISTAN VOTE

NC221001 Nicosia I SIMERINI in Greek 22 Nov 80 p 3

[From "The Liberal" column: "The Repeated Mistake"]

[Text] By an overwhelming majority the UN General Assembly has once again asked for the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan. Cyprus was once again among the handful of countries that abstained--itself a victim of foreign invasion and occupation. Instead of exploiting the opportunity and remedying the mistake it made last January in not condemning the Soviet invasion, Cyprus repeated its mistake before the eyes of world representatives. The Cypriot vice president [of the assembly session], Mavromatis, reiterated the same unacceptable excuse that Foreign Minister Rolandhis had used, namely, that Cyprus abstained from voting in protest of the international community's indifference toward the Turkish invasion of Cyprus. Of course we all know that this is not true--Cyprus simply does not want to displease the Soviet Union. Cyprus, which is a prisoner of its inconsistent policy, has now come to deny the support that it itself is asking from others and thus ridicules itself before the world. If our government insists that it has abstained in protest of world indifference toward our problem, then Cyprus must accept that its much publicized and expensive policy of internationalizing the issue, that we have been following all these years, has completely failed.

I SIMERINI ON GOVERNMENT'S DEALINGS WITH TURKEY

[Editorial: "The First 6 Months of 1981"]

[Text] All indications show that the new round of talks will bear no fruit. An elementary political assessment indicates that Waldheim's last intervention was not a joke.... The rejecting way with which the government handled the matter was ridiculous and irresponsible.... In this country, now and over 25 years ago, the sickening rejection tendency had become endemic.... At the end, the Greek Cypriots see their dreams, hopes and struggles buried.... And then they are told "there is only one enemy, imperialism!" And this is the end of the chapter.... And this chapter is even introduced into schools for the youngsters to learn which, like a sturdy ear of corn rises today and is harvested tomorrow!...

Seriousness and responsibility are already rare in the political minds of the official leadership. It appears that this leadership fails to plan ahead for the following day. What then can be said about long-term planning? Inefficiency is total by correct political assessment as is the fixing of goals in the struggle and methods of action. It appears that the Cypriot issue is coming to a deadlock once again. However, in this country all speak about hatred, and express ambiguous words and mystic phraseology.

What is happening in reality? Does Turkey want a settlement of the Cypriot issue or not? All agree to the mere assessment that the Cypriot problem will be solved when Turkey makes concessions. Further, all agree that these concessions will be made only when Turkey is convinced by its Western allies or if it loses a war with Greece. Today, the allies extol Ankara's new regime! They give it moral and material support. They do not exert pressure on it, but are instead being pressured by the dire need to support Turkey.... And Greece cannot even think about a war confrontation.... What is deduced then? Once again there are no basic hopes for concessions by Turkey and therefore no solution to the Cypriot issue.

After the military coup in Turkey, the new leadership made two maneuvers in its foreign policy. It accepted to lift its opposition for Greece's reintegration with NATO; and simultaneously declared that it wanted a solution to the Cypriot issue. These two maneuvers face certain external diversions of the new regime. However the problems remain. The Aegean was and still is the greatest problem, then comes the Cypriot problem.... Apparently, the Turkish leadership is trying to gain time. It wants to put order in its country's internal situation and thus show that it leads Turkey once again toward democracy. Simultaneously, it wants to confront--even temporarily--the economic problem. This temporary encounter would make the new regime's intentions and abilities more trustworthy. This is why the Turks maneuver in order to gain time for all this.

The new Turkish leadership says to Athens that the Aegean issue is not related to Greece's reintegration within NATO; the issue is in its entirety and will be solved some time.... The Turkish leadership told the Turkish Cypriot leadership to discuss but to be inconclusive and to refrain from approaching settlements at the talks. It wants to gain time, so as to impose itself on Turkey first and then see what will happen in Greece and how the Greek political situation will develop.

Anyone of elementary political intelligence knows very well that until then Ankara does not intend to make any decision. Consequently, it must not be expected that any positive developments will ensue in the Cypriot issue. Under these conditions, the first 6 months of 1981 will be one of the most critical periods in Cypriot history. During these 6 months the domestic political developments in Greece, Turkey and Cyprus will be outlined. These developments will show if Greece will encounter new upheavals or if there will be a normal course toward some permanent settlements.

AKEL LEADER DENOUNCES RALLY PARTY, COMMENTS ON ELECTIONS

NC230831 Nicosia CYPRUS MAIL in English 23 Nov 80 p 1

[Text] The AKEL party leader, Mr Ezekias Papaioannou, has made his strongest ever attack on the Rally Party and its leader Mr Glavkos Kliridhis. Speaking at Dherinia Village, near Famagusta, Mr Papaioannou said that the greatest threat to Cyprus today beyond imperialism and Turkish occupation is the extreme right, which he identified with the Rally Party.

Referring to the promise of Mr Kliridhis that his Rally Party alone held out the promise of change, Mr Papaioannou replied that the only change he could bring was "for the worse," not for the better. Mr Papaioannou said that Mr Kliridhis had for 16 years been in charge of affairs, as house president which made him the acting president, and was in charge for six months from July to December 1974 after the coup and the invasion, but had brought about none of the changes he now promises.

The AKEL leader said Mr Kliridhis has been apprehended for telling lies to President Makarios, the National Council and the people, (a referrence to the secret agreement with Mr Denktas about presentation of proposals, the existence of which he denied). Furthermore, Mr Papaioannou said that if Mr Kliridhis is returned to power it would be bad for the working people because, as he said, he would increase taxes and cut social benefits and by means of polarisation would lead the country into class confrontation.

Mr Papaioannou expressed confidence in an AKEL victory in spite of the "public opinion pollsters" who, as he said, "tried to cook results of convenience." The AKEL Party, he said, would contest the elections putting up 35 candidates for all seats in the House but he offered collaboration with the "democratic patriotic forces."

"We have not sought to impose our views or ideologies and we are glad that in the democratic center there are people who have their own views and disagree with the disastrous policies of the Rally and polarisation," Mr Papaioannou said. The AKEL leader defended the intercommunal talks and said that the two months of talks have not been in vain. "Each side now knows better the position of the other and the common points, however few, which may exist."

He was against any NATO solution and invited the government to make it clear to the British and Americans that it is against the presence of any bases, and that it demands full demilitarisation.

REPORTAGE ON OFFICIAL VISIT OF ITALIAN PRESIDENT PERTINI

Meetings, Banquet, Ceremonies

AT221200 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1930 GMT 21 Nov 80

[Text] The presidents of Greece and Italy, Karamanlis and Pertini, this afternoon had their second round of talks at the Presidential Palace and this evening they are attending a dinner at the Italian Embassy. The hour-long talk of the two presidents was attended by the Greek and Italian foreign ministers, Mitsotakis and Colombo, the Italian ambassador to Athens and the Greek Ambassador to Rome, and other officials.

In the morning Pertini laid a wreath at the mausoleum of the unknown warrior. He was accompanied by National Defense Minister Averof and Italian Foreign Minister Colombo. At noon Pertini visited the Akropolis accompanied by Interior Minister Stratos. Later at the Political Office Pertini conferred with Prime Minister Rallis who also gave a luncheon in his honor at the Kastella sailing club.

Addressing Pertini, Rallis stressed the joint ideals which unite the two nations and expressed friendly feeling and appreciation for Pertini's personal contribution to our country's struggle for the restoration of democracy and our accession to the EEC. Rallis also said the two countries will continue to cooperate with a spirit of sincere friendship in their search for the most profitable positions required by joint struggles, interests and orientation.

In his reply, Pertini expressed deep satisfaction because shortly Greece will be a full member with full rights in the EEC. Greek accession, he stressed, is an historic event which united the past and the future of Europe.

In the afternoon, Pertini laid a wreath at the monument to heroine Lella Karayianni, the leader of the anti-fascist organization Bouboulina during the German occupation. Tomorrow Averof will escort Pertini to Kefallinia where he will lay a wreath at the cenotaph of the Italian soldiers executed by the Germans.

Official Visit Concludes

Also in the sendoff party were Prime Minister Rallis, Chamber of Deputies Chairman Papaspirou, members of the cabinet and military commanders. At Kefallinia, Pertini will lay a wreath at the monument to the Italians executed by the Germans.

Departure for Home

[Text] Italian President Pertini left for Rome this afternoon ending the unofficial portion of his visit to Greece. At Ellinikon Airport he was seen off by the interior minister and the director of the Diplomatic Bureau of the president of the republic.

This morning Pertini visited Epidavros by helicopter, and saw the theater and the museum. Later he motored to Navplion and visited the site of Mikinai. He returned to Athens at 1630 by helicopter and boarded an Italian Airlines aircraft at Ellinikon Airport.

Shortly before his departure, Pertini expressed full satisfaction over his visit to our country. I wish to stress, he said, that I have formed the best of impressions from this visit which I believe will further contribute to a closer tightening of relations between our two peoples. During my stay here I conferred with President of the Republic Karamanlis and Prime Minister Rallis on international and bipartite issues and on questions related to cooperation between Greece and Italy within the framework of the European Community. I would like to stress the positive role which Greece and Italy could play not only in the European area but also in strengthening international peace.

RIZOSPASTIS Condemns Pertini Statements

AT211200 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 21 Nov 80 p 2

[From the "Radical" column: "The Extoller of NATO"]

[Text] As of yesterday, Italian President Pertini is our country's official guest. In a series of interviews granted to Athenian newspapers before he even arrived in Athens he considered it expedient to extol the imperialist NATO wolf alliance. He stated without reservations: "Greece is a bastion against the East. For NATO it is an advance guardpost. Woe if it ever collapsed..." In another interview he emphatically reiterated that "Greece is a bulwark of utmost importance to the Atlantic alliance..." At the same time, however, in the very same interviews, the Italian president appeared as a defender of democracy and liberty. Did he forget that the Greek people were deprived of democracy and elemental freedoms during seven whole years under the junta-fascist dictatorship which was forced upon them by NATO and the United States?

Perhaps he heard nothing of the thousands of dead and missing and the 200,000 refugees, the result of the Turkish invasion of Cyprus incited by NATO which continues to support it? Was he not informed by his aides about the all-people's protest demonstrations which recently shook Greece and which were directed against reintegration within NATO's military wing? Was he not informed that all democratic opposition parties condemned this reintegration? For the Greek people, this extolling of the NATO wolf alliance which broght so much hardship and privations to Greece, which today sabotages detente and undermines peace and security in Europe, is unacceptable to say the least. It is also equally unacceptable that he should appear as a protector of NATO at the time when in neighboring Turkey the U.S.-NATO imperialists have enforced a bloodstained junta which has pushed the country into an orgy of violence, terror and executions. After all this, we justifiably ask the question: Did Pertini come to Greece as a representative of the Italian Republic or did he come as a representative from Luns?

CHAMBER DEBATES POLYTECHNIC ANNIVERSARY INCIDENTS

AT221345 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1230 GMT 22 Nov 80

[Text] At today's meeting the plenum of the Chamber of Deputies is dealing with last Sunday's incidents during the march staged for the Polytechnic anniversary. The meeting convened at 1100 with Prime Minister Rallis as first speaker. Rallis said the government would have preferred postponement of the debate for a few days so that the findings of the official investigation may be announced, thus clearing up the situation.

"Criticism," Rallis continued, "conducted by the parties and the press of the opposition dictated that the debate should be held as soon as possible, however, in order to inform the nation on exactly what happened and how it happened." The prime minister also explained that the debate is conducted at the level of party leaders but that today's proceedings will also permit representatives of political groups in the Chamber to speak so that they will be in a position to reply to any criticism.

Rallis then read the prosecutor's report on the incidents. It mentions that the MAT, the riot control police, were forced to defend themselves when attacked by demonstrators armed with stone, clubs and molotov cocktails. "It was stated," the prime minister said, "that the MAT hit demonstrators on the head with their clubs. It was impossible," he added, "at a time when 200 men were attacked by 2,000 demonstrators, to pay attention to where they were hitting."

The prime minister criticized the opposition parties stating that they are trying to monopolize the Polytechnic and for placards carried during the march which proclaimed: "Out with the rightwing." He then asked: "Which rightwing?" Rallis then continued, "Panayiotis Kanellopoulos, myself and others were the ones who were the first to resist the regime of 21 April." Rallis then stressed, "when you say 'out with the rightwing' you want to present us as the fascist rightwing while in fact we are 42 percent of the Greek people."

In conclusion the prime minister accused the opposition parties and blamed them because they tolerate the occupation of university school buildings by students.

PASOK chairman and leader of the majority opposition party Andreas Papandreou then spoke, opening his address with two statements.

The first was on the prime minister's reference to the struggle of the rightwing against the dictatorship. He said, "We recognize all those who fought against the dictatorship irrespective of their party origins. That was a struggle against the foreign motivated dictatorship and we never underestimated the contribution of anyone."

The second Papandreou statement dealt with the students and the occupation of university school buildings by them. Referring to the students, he said their trade union activities truly do not permit them to devote themselves exclusively to their studies. "The responsibility for the standard of studies," he added, "rests with the government."

Papandreou then referred to the 16 November incidents and said, "It is a fact that there is a section of the studying youth which believes in the use of nonparliamentary and violent methods to fulfill its missions. There are other elements, however, which intrude and operate in an effort to lead to actions which destabilize the regime. At the same time," he added, "provocateurs and parasite elements also operate in such instances in their effort to exploit every possible opportunity in order to undermine the democratic regime."

"The police," Papandreou added, "had information that certain elements would create incidents during the march and that they would attempt to march on the U.S. Embassy. The police could have permitted this section of demonstrators to proceed a few blocks along Vasilissis Sofias Ave in order to isolate them. As it is known, however, the police attacked people who were taking part in the peaceful march and even unsuspecting citizens."

At this point the chairman of PASOK attributed grave political responsibility to the government which, as he said, did not expel junta and fascist elements from the ranks of the police force, elements which are only a small minority within the security forces but which, lead them to atrocities against the people.

EDIK, Democratic Center Union, leader Zigdhis then spoke, accusing the parties of the leftwing of turning the Polytechnic anniversary into an opportunity for party confrontation. "EFEE, the National Student Union of Greece," he said, "is not a central student organization. It is a federation of party youth organizations."

Zigdhis said the incidents were created by leftwing anarchists and by stooges of the fascist rightwing. He described the way in which the demonstration was handled as wrong. He also criticized the government, blaming it with grave political responsibility over the incidents and because it created the MAT. "The MAT," he said, has no place in democratic regimes. It only has a place in fascist regimes."

Former prime minister Panayiotis Kanellopoulos started speaking at 1400.

PLO ENVOY HOLDS PRESS CONFERENCE, VISITS PASOK

I KATHIMERINI Report

AT221440 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 22 Nov 80 p 2

[Reportage by Alekos Trakas on a press conference held by Armali, PLO diplomatic representative in Athens, on 21 November 80]

[Text] "Greece would play an important role within the framework of the EEC so that its partners may adopt a more concrete and positive position on the Palestine issue," stressed--among other things--Shawqi Armali, the PLO diplomatic representative in Athens, during a press conference held for representatives of the Greek and foreign press.

Armali added: "Unfortunately to date Europe was unable to take the responsibility for amore basic initiative on the Palestine issue. On the contrary, it has 'petrified.' Naturally there have been timid attempts and very little progress in its position toward the Palestine issue. Each one of its efforts toward progress, however, was always stopped by U.S. policy. The entire world expected some European 'expanded initiatives' particularly after the declaration of European leaders in Venice. Instead of this--and particularly recently--we have seen certain European countries such as Great Britan and the Netherlands attempting to 'paralyze' every new initiative under the excuse that this helps the task of the new U.S. president who, however, did not hesitate to describe the Palestinian people as 'terrorists'."

Referring to the Cyprus issue, he stated: "There is great friendship between the two peoples. In addition to this we are today united by misfortune. Whenever we were able, we never hesitated to help the people of Cyprus, not only politically but also materially. The Cypriots reciprocated when we found ourselves in a difficult position."

Replying to a question on U.S. bases in Greece, he said: "We are always against military bases no matter where they may be situated. This is because U.S. administration policy has always been hostile to the legal rights of the Palestinian people. In reference to these bases in Greece, I must stress that we will never confront each other over Greek domestic affairs. I will only state that we hope the Greek Government will prevent the use of these bases for an attack against Arab states and the Palestinian people."

Answering other questions he stressed:

--Yasir 'Arafat will come to Greece provided he is invited by the government and not by parties.
--The PLO has been recognized as the sole legal representative of the Palestinian nation by 114 countries and maintains diplomatic missions in 60 of them. It has diplomatic relations with all the socialist countries and "information bureaus" in Paris, Rome, Brussels, Vienna and in Japan.

RIZOSPASTIS Report

AT221540 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 22 Nov 80 p 10

[Report on "the press conference by S. Armali" on 21 November under the headline: "The Israeli Zionists Enforced a Regime of Terror and Violence over Occupied Arab Lands"]

[Text] A regime of violence and terror has been enforced over occupied Arab lands by the Israeli Zionists. This was denounced by Shawqi Armali, head of the PLO office in Athens, in yesterday's press conference. He added that on the West Bank of Jordan, in Gaza, on the Golan Heights, the murder, inhuman torture, mass arrest and deportation of Arabs, the burning of entire villages, make up the daily criminal policy implemented by Israel. He also stressed that all these crimes are being committed with the full support of the United States while Reagan goes as far as to maintain, after all this, that the PLO is a "criminal" organization.

Armali stressed that the PLO is the established exclusive and legal representative of the fighting Palestinian people and presented a series of facts which demonstrate its broad international recognition. Specifically he mentioned that the PLO has opened bureaus in all socialist countries and that these bureaus enjoy full diplomatic status and that the governments of these countries provide moral and material support. The PLO is today recognized by more than 60 countries including countries of capitalist Europe.

"The Bases Are Directed Against Us"

In respect to U.S. policy on the Middle East issue he stressed this policy always was and remains hostile to the Palestine people and the Arab states. "This is the reason why," he stated, "we are against U.S. bases no matter where they may be situated since they are directed against us."

In reference to the existence of U.S. bases in Greece he stressed: "I do not wish to interfere in Greek domestic affairs. I do hope, however, that the Greek Government will not permit the use of these bases against the Palestinian people and the other Arab states of the Middle East."

Expressing his concern over the Iran-Iraq clash, Armali underlined that this is harmful to peoples liberation struggles and to the Palestinian cause. The PLO, he stressed, immediately took a position in support of terminating hostilities. He said there are serious differences between the Arab states on many basic problems. The PLO, he added, works toward a solution of today's difficulties, toward restoration of Arab solidarity and for a common front against Israeli aggression.

Referring to the Cyprus issue he stressed that the PLO is unreservedly in support of the independence, territorial integrity and national sovereignty of Cyprus. "We firmly support with all our strength the just struggle of the Cypriot people," he said.

Western Hypocrisy

Answering a question from a foreign press correspondent on whether the PLO condemns the Soviet "occupation" of Afghanistan, Armali replied: "There is no Soviet occupation in Afghanistan. According to our information the Soviet forces are in Afghanistan on the invitation of the legal government of Afghanistan. This concerns an action undertaken after an official invitation from the Afghan Government."

Unmasking the furor and hypocricy of Western imperialists around Afghanistan the Palestinian diplomat stated: "The United States and the other countries of the West which rave about an alleged occupation in Afghanistan support with all available means a truly existing occupation such as that of Israel over Arab lands. They support and encourage all the illegal actions of Israel such as the establishment of Jewish settlements in occupied lands, the annexation of Arab Jerusalem and numerous other bestial actions in various parts of the world."

The other day S. Armali visited PASOK Chairman A. Papandreou at his Kastri home.

Papandreou Supports Palestinians

AT221555 Athens EXORMISI in Greek 22 Nov 80 p 1

[Text] "PASOK unreservedly supports the struggle of the Palestinians against Zionist imperialism."

This statement was made by PASOK Chairman A. Papandreou to the Athens representative of the PLO Shawqi Armali who visited him at Kastri.

Armali explained to Papandreou the delicate phase through which the Palestine problem is now passing and stressed the belief of the Palestinians that the day of their victory is not too far away and expressed the warm greetings of PLO President Yasir 'Arafat.

A. Papandreou requested Armali to return his greetings to Yasir 'Arafat and repeated his invitation to the fighter Palestine leader to visit Athens.

Greece will be represented by Minister Without Portfolio Dhimas at the head of a delegation which is due to leave for Belgrade Monday.

The meeting will examine Greek-Yugoslav cooperation in various sectors; cooperation in joint development projects, and other issues of bipartite interest.

Specifically in the sector of economic, scientific and technical cooperation, the meeting will look into the adjustment of the relevant agreement to the new facts arising from Greece's full accession to the EEC.

In the trade sector, the meeting will review trade exchanges between Greece and Yugoslvaia and will look into possibilities of expanding and diversifying Greek exports within the limits of Greek obligations toward the EEC.

In the industrial sector, the meeting will examine the forms of cooperation already established. An effort will also be made to find sector of mutual interest for further expansion of industrial cooperation in the supply of products to the markets of the two countries or to third countries.

In the transportation sector the meeting will discuss Greek-Yugoslav positions primarily in respect to road and rail transportation, once again stressing the Greek position for freeing transit transportation through the territory of each of the two countries.

MARTIAL LAW COMMAND DISMISSES 169 GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

TA211712 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 21 Nov 80

[Text] The Ankara Martial Law Command has dismissed 169 government employees and has also decided to transfer 20 others to jobs outside Ankara. A Turkish Radio and Television correspondent has learned that the Martial Law Command made this decision in accordance with new legislation which gives it such a right and authority. An announcement by the Martial Law Command says that the command exercised its right because these employees were involved in various illegal actions and misused their posts in carrying out these acts.

An amendment made to the martial law legislation on 21 September stipulates the right of the Martial Law Command to dismiss or to transfer any government employees deemed a danger to security or public law and order, as well as anyone whose work is not needed in the martial law area. The amendment adds that the government offices that receive the Martial Law Command's directives are trusted with immediately complying with these orders.

The Martial Law Command also decided to expel from Ankara 29 students studying in 2 universities, an academy and various high schools for being involved in illegal acts. Thirteen of these students have also been expelled from their schools. These students were studying in the Middle East Technical University, in the Hacettepe University, in the Ankara State Academy of Architecture and Engineering and in various high schools.

DUNYA COMMENTS ON STATEMENT BY GREEK DEFENSE MINISTER

NC211132 Istanbul DUNYA in Turkish 19 Nov 80 p 2

[Unattributed commentary: "Averof's Statement"]

[Excerpts] Yesterday, MILLIYET carried an exclusive statement by Greek Defense Minister Averof to our colleague Mehmet Ali Birand.

This statement contained elements which could make bilateral talks on the Aegean issue very difficult right from the start. But it also contains points which could contribute to the preparation of the necessary atmosphere for a meaningful resumption of these talks.

Let us first dwell on the positive aspects of the statement. Honorable Averof says he identifies himself with the realistic approach of Ataturk and Venizelos to the Turkish-Greek relations. He stresses the need for the reestablishment of mutual confidence between Turkey and Greece. He also states that the grand idea (the megaloidea) is definitely a matter of the past, a concept never to be revived again. He further states that Greece will not veto Turkey's recourse to the EEC for membership. Referring to the Aegean Sea, Averof makes this disclosure: "The Aegean is not a Greek lake...it is a sea, an extensive part of which constitutes international waters.."

We deem these statements by the Greek defense minister as proof. We are of the opinion that a few gestures by the Greek Government in this direction will contribute to the creation of a more positive atmosphere toward the resumption of bilateral talks. For example, passages concerning the Turkish animosity and the "grand idea" preached in school textbooks in Greece could be changed in accordance with Honorable Averof's views or they could be dropped altogether.

In view of the fact that an extensive portion of the Aegean Sea is admittedly international waters, Greece can stop acting in violation of international law and against the rules of the international civil aviation organization on air space control above these waters. [paragraph continues]

It could drop its claim of 10-mile air space control over its territorial waters, which is 4 miles in excess, and also its claim of 3 thousand square miles air space control over Limni Island. This and similar good will gestures by Greece will match the good will gestures we have shown in lifting NOTAM 714 and in consenting to Greece's reintegration into the military wing of NATO. It is now Greece's turn to make good will gestures.

The Greek defense minister's statement also contained points which are neither correct nor justified. For example, Honorable Averof claims that he is not aware of the Armenian monument erected and the Armenian exhibitions held in Greece in recent years. Nor does he seem to be aware of the activities of the association for the liberation of peoples of anterior Asia. He pretends ignorance of the fact that if Greece extends its territorial waters to 12 miles, this will change the balance established in the Aegean, the Black Sea and in the Balkans in accordance with the Lausanne and Montreux treaties.

This and similar approaches show that the Turkish-Greek talks, which are due to begin in December, will be hard going. It is an undeniable fact that it would be in the interest of both Turkey and Greece if they managed to overcome the psychological impediments in the Aegean and find a solution, which would establish a balance of mutual rights and interests. An atmosphere of mutual confidence and cooperation instead of friction and clashes should be established between Turkey and Greece in the Aegean. The establishment of mutual confidence and cooperation between the two countries and the settlement of the Aegean issue is bound to contribute to the solution of the Cyprus dispute also.

TURKMEN SAYS STRONG NATO NOT INCOMPATIBLE WITH DETENTE

TA211636 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 21 Nov 80

[Text] Foreign Minister Ilter Turkemn has said that relations among the Middle East countries should be normalized in order to achieve stability and security in the region. In a statement to the ANKARA NEWS AGENCY [ANKA], Turkmen said that Turkey wants to develop its relations with the Middle East countries. Noting that the Palestinian issue is the basis of the Middle East problem, Turkmen added that Israel should withdraw from the territories it occupied in 1967. Turkmen recalled that Turkey recognizes the Palestinian right to form a state.

Noting that Turkey was one of the countries most affected by the war between Iran and Iraq because of the interruption in the transport of oil, Turkmen added that contacts with oil producing countries are continuing in order to close the gap in the oil supply caused by the war. He added that an agreement has been reached with Saudi Arabia on the issue. Expressing his views on international detente and the strengthening of NATO, Turkmen said: The strengthening of NATO is not incompatible with detente because for detente to exist, world peace has to be based on strong guarantees. Given current international conditions, military balance is the strongest guarantee for peace; therefore, we do not agree that the strengthening of NATO and detente are two incompatible facts.

CUMHURIYET EDITORIAL EXPLAINS 'TEMPORARY CLOSURE'

NC241045 Istanbul CUMHURIYET in Turkish 22 Nov 80 p 1

[Editorial by Nadir Nadi: "Appearing Again"]

[Text] It is our fate that whenever the Turkish Republic goes through a critical period, our paper CUMHURIYET also suffers a mishap--that is, it is suspended for some time. The same thing happened at the beginning of World War II, on the eve of the 27 May revolution, and after the 12 March memorandum.

The temporary closure of CUMHURIYET by the Istanbul Martial Law Command, 1 day short of 2 months after the 12 September operation, once again accentuates the similarity between the regime's crisis and our paper's fate.

We are not going to disucss the decision taken by the command; we have no way of doing this. Such action was deemed necessary and thus was taken. We have also deemed it our unavoidable duty right from the beginning to extend all possible assistance to this new, unusual administration in its efforts to surmount the extremely difficult economic and social problems it is facing and to fulfill the task it has undertaken to steer our country and regime to safety.

However, our sense of duty is not to applaud whatever those in power choose to do, but to write the truth to the best of our ability and try and save them from committing blunders. This was our policy until yesterday, and we are determined to continue in this way as long as we last.

But we cannot help touching on one point: The statement issued by the Martial Law Command citing the reasons for our suspension maintained that we had presumptuously criticized Ataturk. As it would be disrespectful to Ataturk to keep silent in the face of this charge, we beg the honorable commander to pardon us [for defending ourselves]. Far from criticizing Ataturk in the manner alleged, we have never published a single line since the paper first appeared that might be construed as showing the slightest disrespect for Ataturk's memory.

The Martial Law Command is vested with extensive powers. We are prepared to show understanding even toward mistakes that may be made in practice, but we must state that we are deeply hurt by the honorable commander's thinking that we could have possibly criticized Ataturk.

What can we say? Let not just one but even a thousand CUMHURIYETS be sacrificed for the sake of happy tomorrows for Ataturk's republic.

HURRIYET: BULGARIA INVOLVED IN ARMS SMUGGLING OPERATIONS

NC241008 Istanbul HURRIYET in Turkish 19 Nov 80 pp 1, 11

[Report by Saygi Ozturk]

[Excerpts] Ankara (HURRIYET)--A report prepared by the Turkish security organization says that Bulgaria has set up a firm to engage in arms smuggling to Turkey, a firm run by the Bulgarian secret service."

According to information given in this report, the Bulgarians present this firm as "engaged in organizing imports and exports," but in reality, it is engaged in arms smuggling. Through this firm, the Bulgarians also secure intelligence about Turkey from Turkish arms smugglers, so they are involved in arms smuggling as well as espionage.

The report, which has been submitted to the government, is titled: "Bulgaria's Activities in Arms Smuggling." According to this report, this arms smuggling firm is called "Kintex" and is housed in a big building on Anton Ivanov Avenue in Sofia.

Regarding the supply of arms and ammunition the report says "Kintex itself supplies arms and ammunition, but no difficulty is encountered in purchasing Hungarian and Czechoslovak arms. Arms manufactured in Belgium, France, Italy and Spain are obtained through European merchants who possess the required licenses."

The report also provides information regarding both land and aerial smuggling.

KYODO REPORTS ON TOUGHER EC STAND ON JAPANESE TRADE

OW130415 Tokyo KYODO in English 0404 GMT 13 Nov 80

[Test] Brussels Nov 12 KYODO--The European Community (EC) Commission has compiled a revised proposal with stronger demands and less concessions on trade with Japan than the original plan outlined last July, EC diplomatic sources said Wednesday.

The new proposal, to be presented before a two-day EC ministerial conference beginning November 24, asks Japan to use moderation in exports to EC sectors facing difficulties, the sources said.

It also calls for opening the Japanese market to EC exports like processed farm products and manufactured goods and to stop policies aimed at keeping the yen exchange rate low.

It further asks for greater opportunities for the EC to invest in and to conduct banking operations in Japan, according to the sources.

As for removing import restrictions now being maintained against Japan by some Common Market countries, the revised proposal only makes an abstract remark that each side should endeavour to liberalize trade, the sources said.

The initial proposal had pledged removal of the import restraints under the condition that Japan would impose voluntary export controls for two to four years for products involving EC industries which are in difficulties.

EC foreign ministers put off any decision on the initial proposal.

The sources said that proposal was revised because it was not in line with mounting emotional reaction within the Community against surging Japanese exports, especially those of television sets and autos, which have considerably widened the EC's trade deficit with Japan.

EC SPOKESMAN ON RECENT EC-JAPAN AUTO TALKS

OW220238 Tokyo KYODO in English 0141 GMT 22 Nov 80

[Text] Brussels Nov 21 KYODO--The European Community Commission regards as significant the talks between Japanese and European Common Market automobiles industry leaders held in Tokyo earlier this week, a Commission spokesman said Friday.

The spokesman made the statement after Umberto Agnelli, chairman of Italy's Fiat Motor Co., reported on the results of the talks to EC Commission Vice President Wilhelm Haferkamp and Commissioner Etienne Davigon.

Agnelli attended the talks between the Committee of Common Market Motor Manufacturers (CCMC) and the Japan Automobile Manufacturers Association (JAMA) held in Tokyo Tuesday and Wednesday.

The talks were significant in that Japanese automakers now regard the nine Common Market nations as a single market, the spokesman said.

At the talks, he said, the European automakers did not seek Japan's voluntary controls on its surging car exports to the Common Market.

KREISKY VIEWS MIDEAST ISSUES, FUTURE U.S. POLICY

LD211413 London AL-HAWADITH in Arabic 21 Nov 80 p 35

[Interview granted to Majid Ni'mah by Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky in Vienna--date not given]

[Excerpt] AL-HAWADITH: Is there a new initiative by you on the horizon to establish peace in the Middle East?

Kreisky: Since the last Vienna meeting between PLO Chairman Yasir 'Arafat and Socialist International Chairman Willy Brandt, I have not taken any initiative in this direction. Unless new developments occur that change the situation in the Middle East, I do not intend to take any political initiative.

AL-HAWADITH: Are we to understand from this that the advent in power of the Israeli Labor Party, which is a member of the Socialist International, would be an indication that a change has occurred in the problem?

Kreisky: That could contribute to changing the situation. However, the most important factor in this is the development of the European stand regarding the Arab-Israeli conflict In my opinion, the Venice summit statement constitutes a very important step toward resolving the Palestinian issue. Europe has for the first time adopted a clear and advanced stand offering acceptable solutions that would bring the conflict out of its narrow and vicious circle. I advise all those who are following the Middle East problem to reread the statement and ponder its clauses well, for it could also have a great impact on U.S. policy.

AL-HAWADITH: But do you not believe that the reverse is what will happen, namely, the United States under Ronald Reagan will pressure the European states to make them adopt stands that are less advanced and more biased toward Israel?

Kreisky: No. No. The time of pressure and subservience has gone. We are now living in a period in which blocs have foundered. We are living in a world with many axes and centers. Europe has begun to assert its independence and it will be in a position to influence even the United States itself.

AL-HAWADITH: While we are talking about the United States, does Your Excellency feel pessimistic about the Reagan administration's stand regarding the Middle East issues, particularly regarding the Palestinians?

Kreisky: I am not pessimistic about the developments of the American policy regarding the Middle East and the Palestinians under Reagan's leadership. President Reagan has surrounded himself with competent advisers who are well acquainted with the facts of the conflict and its background. It is necessary here to distinguish and draw a line between campaign statements and actual policy, which could be dictated by acquaintance with the facts. Therefore, there is no cause for excessive pessimism. Pessimism, in my opinion, derives not so much from the U.S. policy regarding the Middle East as from the danger that is threatening the world as a result of the increasing tension among the big states.

AL-HAWADITH: In light of this, what is the future of Camp David? Will the new administration try to continue the process of establishing peace through these agreements?

Kreisky: It is wrong to say that the Camp David agreements aim at establishing peace in the Middle East. It is more correct to say that it is a separate peace agreement between Egypt and Israel.

The Palestinian people, who are the crux of the conflict and without whom there can be no peace, have rejected these agreements, which disregard their basic rights. For this reason, whether the Camp David negotiations continue or not, they will neither add to nor detract from the peace operation so long as the Palestinians continue to be excluded from them. The Palestinian people have suffered and continue to suffer a great deal because of the current situation in the Middle East. Unless a radical solution is found to their national problem through the establishment of their own state within the context of respect for the security and safety of all the states in the area, including Israel, there can be no peace in this part of the world.

AUSTRIA NOT SATISFIED WITH SOUTH TIROL TALKS

[Summary] After their 4-hour talk in Vienna on 21 November, South Tirolean Governor Silvius Magnago, North Tirolean Governor Eduard Wallnoefer and Austrian Foreign Minister Pahr declared that there have recently been unfavorable developments in the South Tirol problem. Since the last South Tirol meeting, Italy has not only failed to implement any of the still unfulfilled stipulations of the South Tirol "package" agreement with Austria, but there has even been a setback, since the new Italian Government decree on salaries and promotions of civil servants has undermined and even virtually rendered invalid the agreed-on special regulations for the province regarding a proportional distribution of civil service jobs among Italian and German-speaking ethnic groups. Should a talk between Magnago and Italian Prime Minister Forlani scheduled for 4 December fail to bring concrete Italian commitments regarding an early settlement of the still pending problems, Austria will take appropriate steps in Rome in its capacity as South Tirol's protecting power and as party to the Paris agreement.

Magnago told journalists that he attempted in the talks to analyze for his interlocutors the current dynamiting wave in South Tirol. He stressed that he is sure that there is no group within the South Tirolean People's Party that actively participated in such forcible actions, or even supported such actions. "Foreign Minister Pahr stressed that the South Tirol problem is a constant task for Austria. As in the past, Austria continues to regard itself as South Tirol's protecting power and, irrespective of how this may be judged by Italy, it will keep an eye on the implementation of the Paris agreement, he said."

SCHMIDT GIVES GOVERNMENT STATEMENT 24 NOV

DW241231 Cologne Westdeutscher Rundfunk Network in German 0958 GMT 24 Nov 80

[Government Statement Delivered by FRG Chancellor Helmut Schmidt to the Bundestag in Bonn--live]

[Text] Mr President, ladies and gentlemen: The Social Democratic Party of Germany and the Free Democratic Party on 5 October received the mandate once again from the majority of the citizens in our country to continue the Social-Liberal coalition and its political course [applause], the course of peace, security and good-neighborliness outside and inside our country. The Federal Government, like the previous one, is the government of all citizens. The election campaign is over and I welcome the appeals by the old president and the Bundestag president as the first steps in the direction of normal parliamentary work. [applause]

Our neighbors and friends throughout the world have welcomed the continuity of our policy. President Giscard d'Estaing has said: I attach the utmost importance to the continuation of German-French cooperation which we have developed with the federal chancellor for 6 years; this cooperation is an irreplaceable contribution to progress and stability in Europe. With this statement President Giscard d'Estaing hit the nail on the head for millions of Germans and Frenchmen.

The two [Bundestag] groups and parties jointly advocate freedom and social justice. The years to come will be difficult both for world politics and for the world economy which means that things will be difficult in our country as well. What is important is an insight into the manifold complex implications of our world and resolute common action which must be focused on the important tasks. We are not the object of history, we are able to act and we are willing to act.

Depending on what decisions we make politically, our country may look very different in 10 or 20 years. We will tackle our tasks with courage. Our confidence about the future is justified, because we can count on the diligence, the intelligence and the responsibility of the Germans who built this country after 1945 with their work and indeed with their own hands. [applause] The confidence is justified because we know from experience what we achieved in the seventies economically and socially despite the two oil price explosions and a world recession. We can trust in our flexibility and our will to work and to produce. Our confidence is justified because over the decades we have set up an exemplary social welfare state, social peace in our country is consolidated. Finally, our confidence is justified because we have experienced what partnership means and know that we can rely on our friends in the world. [applause]

Our youth wants to commit itself for a better future. We are happy to see that a great many young people, those who cast their ballots for the first time, voted for the social-liberal coalition in the Bundestag election. I consider this a commitment. This, too, is part of the basis of our confidence about the future. [applause]

Ladies and gentlemen, a government statement cannot describe all the problems and their prospective solutions; it can only give the outlines. The accords reached between the two coalition parties are to an extent more detailed. What is especially important is the fact that in recent years we have further developed our ability to work jointly. With our foreign policy we want to make our contribution toward safeguarding peace in the world. We must live up to our increased responsibility. But we also do not want to stress, or have our German role in the world stressed too much, in order to prevent expectations from being aroused that we are unable to meet.

Our foreign policy is clear and predictable; we have won confidence with it. In the eighties the security and prosperity of our country will depend on this policy as well as on our efficiency in representing our interests. The basic lines of our foreign policy are: First, without a balance there is no reliable peace in the world. We can feel safe because the Atlantic alliance preserves the balance to which we have contributed our full political and military weight to the scales of the West.

Second, though the balance is a necessary condition of peace, it is not a sufficient condition. Therefore peace also must be safeguarded by a policy of arms limitation and cooperation. Military security and detente policy--I quote the Harmel report of 1967--for more than a decade have been the two centerpieces of the alliance's security concept. We will continue our policy of cooperation with our Eastern neighbors in the interest of a peaceful development in Europe and the future of all of the German people.

Third, the European Community remains for us an indispensable basis of peace, freedom, social and economic progress. It, too, serves the balance.

And fourth, with our policy of equal partnership we will help safeguard in the long run the political, economic, and cultural independence of the Third World countries.

Ladies and gentlemen, it is only in the Atlantic alliance that the FRG finds its security. It is this security which enables us, in cooperation with our partners, to pursue a successful policy of detente, arms limitation and cooperation with states with other social systems. The centerpiece of the Atlantic alliance remains the partnership with the United States, which is in accordance with common vital interests. This partnership is also based on common value concepts which were developed for the first time by the French, formulated more than 200 years ago by the founding fathers of the United States and have belonged to German social democracy since 1848 at least. [applause]

In constant and fruitful contacts between Germans and Americans a friendship has developed in the past 35 years which now is deeply rooted. This has also been fully confirmed by the talks Federal Minister Genscher and I held in Washington last week with President Carter and with President-elect Reagan. Our visit took place at the right time in the transition period. On the basis of detailed talks with President Giscard d'Estaing and Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, I was in a position to meet the future president and his advisers, being fully informed also about the views of our most important European partners. We met many old acquaintances and some old friends. We were impressed by the friendly reception, and I am grateful for having had an opportunity to exchange views with the new president and his aides. [applause]

Jointly with our partners in the alliance we are working toward achieving in arms control negotiations with the East a stable military balance on as low a level as possible, so that the arms race will be decelerated and the burden of arms costs will be reduced. Mankind might well arm itself to death if it is impossible to halt the arms race. This is why the negotiations of the great powers on the limitation of strategic weapons are of central importance.

We advocate with emphasis the continuation of the SALT process. I am happy to report to the Bundestag from my dialogue with Governor Reagan that his considerations point in the same direction.

We welcome the fact that on 17 October this year talks were opened between the United States and the Soviet Union on nuclear medium-range weapons. Our alliance's two-part decision of December last year created the prerequisites for these talks. We adhere to both parts of this dual decision. The West must modernize and strengthen its own potential in Europe in view of the dangerously increasing Soviet superiority in the field of Eurostrategic weapons, yet just as important is that we want mutual limitations in this field.

In the Vienna negotiations on mutual and balanced troop reduction in Central Europe we, along with our alliance partners, pursue an early interim agreement. We adhere to the process which has been initiated by the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe and through the adoption of the Helsinki Act.

At the current followup conference in Madrid the federal minister of foreign affairs has made it clear that the Final Act in all its parts must be the guiding line for the action of all participating states, especially in difficult times. This is the basis on which we want to do our building. Detente cannot be a one-way street. As far as we Germans are concerned, the observance of the declaration of principles and humanitarian alleviations for the people are of equal importance.

We support the French proposal for a conference on disarmament in Europe which should agree on confidence-building measures for the entire European continent. We would also like to see a European energy conference take place.

A word concerning the Bundeswehr, which can be strengthened considerably in case of tension thanks to our conscription and thanks to well-trained reservists. In this way we make our contribution toward the common defense. Our volunteers, conscripts, and professional soldiers mark our defense contribution by their attitude toward our democratic state of justice and by their readiness to serve. Through their military service they contribute to the balance and thus contribute to peace, making sacrifices for the sake of the community. [applause]

In 25 years the Bundeswehr has found its firm place in our community, just as it has found recognition. Therefore many soldiers fail to understand why, and deem it alarming--and I am very shocked too--that they are burdened in their compliance with duty through attacks and through their oath being ridiculed. [applause] The Bundeswehr is marked by a democratic tradition and not by a militaristic tradition. [applause] Tradition must not be at odds with the fundamental values of our society, nor is this the case. [applause]

But it is desirable that tradition ally the Bundeswehr and the people. Forms of expressing traditions are ties to periods of time, and for this reason we are prepared to debate the forms. [applause] But the debate must not be misused as a vehicle for attacks on the Bundeswehr and the alliance. [applause]

We take care of our soldiers and their social welfare. We wish to strengthen the position of the elected shop stewards in the rank and file. We intend to increase the pay of the soldiers. We are aware of the problems of the age structure of the professional soldiers and the backlog in promotion slots.

A thorough modernization in the past 10 years has strengthened the efficiency of the Bundeswehr. What we have now are modernly equipped, well-trained armed forces with a high level of action readiness, armed forces which are considered exemplary in NATO.

Our defense expenditures contain an especially high investment share because we have an army of conscripts. Our defense expenditures during the past 10 years increased by just about a real 3 percent a year on the average. We undertook to endeavor for an identical increase in the future as well. We will live up to our commitment.

Civil defense is part of the overall defense. Many thousands of voluntary helpers are doing an important service.

Security and stability in Europe, ladies and gentlemen, are being increasingly affected by crises in the Third World. Thus it is all the more important that we in the alliance coordinate our activities and contribute toward the full application of the instruments of crisis management of the United Nations.

The preservation and enhancement of the European Community remains a central task of our policy which does not lose sight of the goal of European integration.

During the past 4 years we elected the Parliament directly for the first time, we created the European currency system, we solved the internal crisis over the British budget contribution, we counteracted tendencies toward protectionism, we have enhanced the external relations of the Community considerably, especially in the North-South relationship, we negotiated Greece's accession and finally we got negotiations with Spain and Portugal going.

The balance sheet of accomplishments by the European Community also includes political, that is foreign policy cooperation. In that respect the governments can proceed from 10 years of experience in intensive coordination and joint diplomacy in making a growing contribution to world political crisis management. On the whole the European Community has made good headway. On the other hand, it also has considerable problems.

In European agricultural policy the Federal Government, in view of the growing structural surpluses, will expressly advocate the implementation of principles of market economy more strongly than heretofore. [applause] This means a careful price policy which primarily must be aimed at the restoration of the market balance. It means that surplus production must be reduced through producers sharing in financing the surpluses, and it means that the intervention mechanisms must be relaxed. The Federal Government considers intensified import impediments or aggressive export promotions unsuitable solutions to European Community problems of surpluses. [applause]

Now a few words about financing: No more than 1 percent of the basis of assessment should be passed on to the Community in value-added taxes. [applause] Every member state agreed on that. The French president and the British prime minister recently confirmed it expressly. Therefore in the future the increase in agricultural expenditures must clearly be less than the increase in the Community's income.

Ladies and gentlemen, when 11 years ago the social-liberal coalition initiated its policy of the two German states living side by side based on agreements, nobody had any doubts that we would have to face setbacks, difficulties and burdens on this path. The Federal Government has not been irritated by that at any time. We have stuck doggedly and persistently to our aims in difficult times, too.

Our long-term efforts aimed at improving the situation of Germans suffering from the partition have produced quite a lot. Millions of people have travelled, relatives call each other on the phone, families have come together again, roads are being built to Berlin, trade has developed strongly--these are just some of the results. As a whole we were able to hinder an estrangement between Germans. [applause]

This policy is and remains imbedded in the general policy of balance between West and East. We regret that just a few weeks prior to the Madrid CSCE meeting the GDR took such measures as, for example, the increase in the minimum exchange amount, thus curtailing what had been achieved with regard to improvements for the people. That is a grave setback for all Germans. [applause]

The Federal Government will not accept this. It stands by its aim to improve the situation of the Germans by improving our relations with the GDR. In fact there is no other way. We offer, also with a view to the future, cooperation and development in relations with the GDR. We do not plan to respond to delimitation acts with delimitation acts on our part [applause] because this would just deepen the trenches between Germans and Germans. [applause]

We counterpose our will for cooperation against delimitation. I appeal to all Germans to have the patience and perseverance we need to overcome that present part of the path which is particularly difficult.

Both German states have common responsibilities and tasks. The GDR leadership cannot evade them.

State Council Chairman Erich Honecker and I were able to speak on behalf of all Germans in saying that never again should war emanate from German territory. The normalization of cooperation and the active safeguarding of peace in Europe must include both German states. [applause]

We know the basic differences in the political aims of both states. We want to work toward peace in Europe where the German people will be able to freely decide themselves. The GDR leadership has another aim. We want to keep the awareness of the unity of the German nation alive. The GDR leadership does not. We know that the existing political and ideological antagonisms cannot be overcome through practical cooperation alone, and they must not be obscured. These antagonisms necessarily lead to different legal attitudes on basic problems which, as on the occasion of the conclusion of the Basic Treaty, cannot be solved today. We do not accept mines and automatic firing installations at the border. [applause]

But the significant progress achieved in past years has also shown that these antagonisms must not hinder practical cooperation to the advantage of both sides. I welcome the fact that inter-German trade in the past 4 years has increased 50 percent to about 11 billion. The continued development of the trade and transport relations we want to achieve must naturally be in accord with the development of overall relations.

We are in favor of an intensification of cultural relations with the GDR. The GDR leadership ought to realize that it hurts not just us but also itself by prohibiting its artists from coming to us for a performance. Talks on individual problems must develop into practical negotiations.

The work of our journalists in the GDR has again been subjected to restrictions. I regret such relapses. Factual reports from the GDR serve the interests of both sides. The prerequisite is, however, that the work possibilities of our journalists must not be curtailed but much rather improved.

The Federal Government, here in the Bundestag and in its committees, will continue to be interested in a careful discussion of its German policy. It is prepared to accept suggestions. There are no doubts, however, on the basic direction of its policy.

Ladies and gentlemen, we all have in mind the fate of all Germans, and we are interested in what the Germans think in the GDR. We do not want to tutor the GDR. As before we want to have talks with the leadership of the German Democratic Republic. In view of the situation that has come about, we will have to take into consideration the overall context of our relations. Our political, human and economic involvement is directed at the city of Berlin and its citizens. Thanks to the efforts of the Senat, the businessmen and the workers and employees as well as the Bundestag and the Federal Government, Berlin is fully associated with our economic development. The realization of its own strength and efficiency has clearly gained ground in Berlin vis-a-vis demands for external help. The last economic report by the Senat demonstrates this.

I am impressed by the strength and the variety in the spiritual life of the city, in theaters, concerts, literature and museums. We will continue to cooperate on Berlin with the three powers who grant the security and freedom of the city on the basis of their rights and responsibilities. The Federal Government assumes that the Quadripartite Agreement will be strictly adhered to and fully applied. This serves the interests of all involved, particularly if the world political situation is difficult. [applause] We will also continue to promote the zonal border area.

The social-liberal coalition's Ostpolitik has become a significant element of West-East relations in Europe as a whole. We want to not merely fill the framework of the treaties and agreements, we want to develop them even further.

Readiness for long-term cooperation characterizes our relations with the Soviet Union. I remind you of the statements issued on the occasion of my meeting with General Secretary Brezhnev here in Bonn 2 years ago and this summer in Moscow. These statements also express the interest of the Soviets in cooperation between both German states. The Federal Government wants particularly in difficult times to keep the thread of talks with the Soviet Union from being disrupted.

But we also find that as a result of the events in Afghanistan detente has become more difficult and less secure. These were the words of the German-French statement of February this year. It is also said there, and I quote, that detente could no longer withstand another blow of the same kind. For this reason, with the overwhelming majority of the community of states, we condemn the continued armed intervention of the Soviet Union in Afghanistan, and we demand the complete, unconditional withdrawal of foreign troops from Afghanistan. [applause]

On the basis of our treaties we plan to continue on the road of cooperation with Poland. As before, the humanitarian questions ought to lend themselves to solution. We are watching developments in Poland with attention and sympathy. We do not intervene, but if we endeavor to extend assistance to the Polish leadership, at its own bidding, in overcoming the current economic crisis, we will not allow anyone to denounce this as intervention on our part. [applause]

The Federal Government is seeking cooperation in partnership with the countries of the Third World on the basis of equal rights. We reject any quest for hegemony in the Third World. We recommend the buildup of regional stability and structures of cooperation.

We welcome the opening of China to peaceful international cooperation. We intend to enhance our relations with the People's Republic of China. We will make our contribution to the North-South dialogue for which the so-called Brandt Commission has provided important suggestions.

In the past 2 years we nearly doubled our development aid. In all probability it will increase at double the pace of the increase in the overall budget. Along with France we are currently the foremost donor countries in the world, second only to the United States. What we intend to do in particular is to promote the development of new energy sources, contribute toward the establishment of an independent agricultural base in the developing countries, and we plan to keep our market open for products from the developing countries with which a quarter of our entire foreign trade is done. It is my plan to participate in the conference of heads of governments on North-South issues scheduled for June 1981 in Mexico, and while there I will advocate particularly the view that two challenges must be met which otherwise may well entail human and political catastrophe. They are:

First, today more than 4 billion people live in this world. The number grows by another 60 to 80 million each year, that is to say, by as many people as live in Germany. They will number 6 billion people 20 years from now, and perhaps 10 billion some 30 more years later. It is hard to imagine how 10 billion people can find adequate nourishment, housing, work and a life worthy of a human being. It is necessary to draw conclusions from this finding--today and not just 10 or 20 years from now when it could be too late. [applause]

Second, the oil price explosion has driven the oil bill of the developing countries, which amounted to $8 billion in 1973 to nearly $70 billion in 1980. Some countries, for instance Turkey, in our part of the world, must spend more than half their export proceeds for urgent oil imports. All the development aid given by all Western industrial countries this year is not enough to cover even the increase in the oil bill of the developing countries from 1979 to 1980. Just visualize this order of magnitude.

It is necessary for all countries to help here, the communist industrial countries as well, but above all the OPEC states, notably with direct investments and with subsidies. [applause]

The most important forum for the dialogue between North and South is the United Nations. To this end, too, the United Nations becomes more and more important as the field of work for our foreign policy. Just the other day in a valuable exchange of views with Secretary General Waldheim I had a chance to confirm this--and on that occasion I found out how greatly our contributions toward cooperation in the world organization are appreciated.

We do participate in the efforts for the peaceful solution of conflicts. In the Middle East we propose, jointly with our European Community partners on the basis of the Venice statement, to help in the search for a comprehensive, just and lasting peace solution.

We support the demand for the release of the U.S. hostages in Tehran. In the war between Iran and Iraq we support the endeavors of the Islamic states and of the United Nations for a cease-fire. We reject the racial policy of the South African Republic. [applause] We promote peaceful change and seek dialogue with all political forces in the south of the African continent including the liberation movements. [applause] Jointly with them we energetically continue our efforts to lead Namibia to internationally recognized independence in a peaceful way. [applause]

At this point I would like to appeal once again to the Government of the Republic of Korea to give freedom to the democratic politician Kim Tae-chung. [applause]

It was we, ladies and gentlemen, who in the United Nations and in the European Council took the initiative for a worldwide abolition of the death penalty. [applause] And we took the initiative in the United Nations for international cooperation in preventing new flows of refugees.

What we are seeking is a worldwide agreement on the renunciation of force as an instrument for ensuring peace. We advocate in the United Nations the disclosure of arms deliveries and concretely propose that two registration files be set up with the United Nations: One for the registration of per capita expenditures of states for armament and for development aid and, on the other hand, for registering worldwide arms exports and imports. [applause]

Ladies and gentlemen, I shall now proceed to the tasks in our own country. Compared with the hunger, the acts of violence, the misery in many regions of the world the problems we are facing in our own country appear to be relatively negligible. Out there it is a matter of life or death; here it is a matter of income and of getting ahead. [applause]

But our country demands creative strength in this respect. In order to preserve what we have achieved in the way of welfare, social balance and freedom, one must have the courage to make corrections and gradual improvements. Moreover there must be reforms and changes--modernization.

I will discuss the most important individual problems. First, I will talk about oil.

To become more independent of oil is a decisive economic and technical task we are facing. Without a secure energy supply there will be no economic and social stability, no growth, no domestic or foreign production capacity. [applause]

The second oil price explosion since 1978 has created marks on our national economy which one cannot ignore--increasing costs and increasing prices, foreign trade balance deficit, increasing unemployment.

The higher oil bill deprives the people of a real income of about DM30 billion annually. This deprival of purchasing power cannot be offset with domestic economies.

The war in the Gulf region has drastically demonstrated to us the worldwide energy supply risks. We have full tanks for the coming winter and we have numerous supply sources, but crude oil and natural gas prices as well as supply risks caused by world politics will characterize the entire eighties.

Since 1973 our Federal Governments have dealt persistently with this situation. The aims of our policy are: away from oil; limited development of nuclear energy; development and introduction of renewable energies. This policy is showing its effect. Our supply has always been sufficient. The share of oil in 1973 energy consumption was still 55 percent; this year it will drop below 50 percent. For the first time only 7 percent of our electricity comes from oil-fired powerplants. This is a success for our power generation policy. We will suggest a legal regulation to the Bundestag to eliminate oil completely from power plants. In the long run we also aim for a decrease in gas consumption by powerplants. [applause]

The Federal Government will continue its energy policy based as much as possible on market principles. In the coming year the third implementation phase of the energy program will be presented. The correctness of our coal policy, ladies and gentlemen, the policy we have pursued for the last years and 1 1/2 decades, is obvious today, even to those who did not agree with it at the time. The financial assistance of the Federal Government and of mining laender as well as the power generation regulations have considerably improved the making of our electricity supply more secure. [applause]

But even subsidies for coal meet with financial limits. Steel and coal firms must realize that coke cannot be subsidized in the future as much as it is now. Early this year the Federal Government adopted a coal processing program. The large-scale technical processes call for considerable research and development efforts to achieve profitability and bring the resulting environmental problems, which are considerable, under control. The economy and the state will face great financial tasks.

Broad agreement exists internationally on the necessity for the peaceful use of nuclear energy. The Federal Government believes that the further development of nuclear energy is acceptable with regard to technical safety. Within a foreseeable future--that is at least for the coming decades--it is necessary for our energy policy. The government is, therefore, for a limited development of nuclear energy--naturally with priority being given to safety. A prerequisite is the guaranteeing of waste disposal. The unchanged basis for this is the decision of the government chiefs of the Federal Government and the laender of September 1979--involving the waste deposits of nuclear powerplants--and the new formulations of the principles of protective waste disposal of February 1980.

The Federal Government will examine together with the laender how licensing procedures for nuclear powerplants can be sped up without permitting safety hazards. The Federal Republic refuses to develop nuclear energy blindly. Nuclear energy must not be thrust on the people; its development calls for a broad democratic consensus. The Federal Government believes that the report by the Bundestag committee of inquiry has made important contributions to a more objective public discussion. [applause]

The Federal Government expects further contributions with regard to more gentle energy sources, if I may put it that way, from solar installations, heat pumps and new inventions as a whole. We will continue to promote such developments. We also count on the cooperation of industry, energy supply enterprises of the laender and communities so as to better exploit waste heat [applause], so that we will not have to consider introducing a waste heat fee and heat conducted over longer distances will be better used. We will examine further possibilities for economizing with an eye on electricity rates.

Ladies and gentlemen, despite world economic difficulties, the number of employed persons in the Federal Republic has increased by 900,000 since 1977, some 900,000 additional jobs. The demand for jobs will increase up to the mid-eighties.

Businessmen, both wage negotiating partners, the governments and legislative authorities in the Federal Government and the laender as well as the Federal Bank will continue to bear joint responsibility for a high degree of employment. We must continue to strive for full employment. There will be not intrusion into the tested wage autonomy. The trade unions have demonstrated that they act with responsibility to achieve full employment. Thanks to all the factors just mentioned, we all are better off than the citizens in most other industrial states. [applause]

Konrad Adenauer and Hans Boeckler knew in 1951 that coresponsibility can be expected only if codetermination has been granted. [applause]

We did well with this awareness. I recall the long crisis in coal mining in the sixties and the fact that we coped with it. I recall the experiences we have had in the steel sector. At no time have codetermination rights resulted in the workers and their trade unions hindering economically necessary reorganization measures. The present concern about the coal-and-steel pool codetermination rights was triggered unnecessarily by one single enterprise.

For solving these problems of the enterprises which fall under the 1951 and 1956 codetermination laws, the social-liberal coalition has agreed on a settlement. It will introduce a bill in due time which envisages the following elements: First, if in an enterprise the conditions for coal-and-steel pool codetermination rights cease to be applicable, the coal-and-steel pool codetermination settlement which to that date was applicable to the enterprise will continue to be effective for 6 years. Second, the trade union representatives on the boards of directors of the enterprises according to the 1951 and 1956 coal-and-steel pool codetermination laws are proposed by the trade unions and are elected in accordance with the procedure applicable to labor representatives who are staff members of an enterprise. [applause]

At this point I will allow myself a personal remark. Despite differing starting positions and targets, the SPD and FDP in the past agreed on solutions leading to the expansion of the codetermination rights of workers. Let me mention the 1972 industrial management law [betriebsverfassungsgesetz] and the 1976 codetermination law. This experience has contributed greatly to the confidence of workers and their trade unions in the social-liberal coalition and the Federal Government. I, too, consider the coal-and-steel pool codetermination rights--and I am talking on my own behalf--as a decisive factor in the extraordinary economic success of our coal, iron and steel industries. Naturally the settlement I announced will also leave wishes unresolved on all sides, but it will have an effect reaching far into the next legislative period and thereby will provide room for further thought. [applause]

Let me also make a personal remark on the postal strike. The Federal Government is a wage partner in the strike of workers and employees of the Bundespost. I will therefore be very brief and welcome the fact that a basis of understanding for ending the strike has been found through tough negotiations.

Ladies and gentlemen, we cannot escape the drain caused by the international economic recession. For us this means a temporary decline of production, possibly a slight increase in unemployment, but also a further decrease in price hikes. Therefore the 1981-82 tax relief law will become effective on 1 January next year. We foresaw it in time and it will become effective at the economically right time. It is also correct that there is hardly a country in the world with unemployment figures and price rises that are as low and real wages and pensions as high as in our country. [applause]

The German oil bill, too, doubled within the past 24 months. It is the main cause of our balance of payments deficit. It is not a serious problem in the short run, because we have high currency reserves and we can also finance the balance on the international capital markets. But because of the deficit the Federal Bank cannot exploit the economic leeway for lowering interest rates. In most of our partner countries prices rise much more rapidly than in the FRG. As a result the interest rates in those countries had to be raised substantially in order to strengthen their currencies; but the high interest rates abroad have also hurt us, given the floating exchange rates. If we reduce our balance of payments deficit the stability lead of the Deutsche mark will fully prevail again as in the past.

We have no reason to be pessimistic. Our economy is healthy and our international competitiveness is intact. This will remain so if we work on the necessary structural changes, on the modernization of our economy. Innovation and structural changes, investments and competition are our big opportunity in this decade. This requires great flexibility on the part of our enterprise managements. The workers must not primarily consider it as a threat but much rather as a chance for the future. Protectionism would be no alternative. This is what we also tell all the others. [applause]

In order to strengthen our innovation potential and our competitiveness, the Federal Government must continue to attach special importance to the furthering of research and development. This holds true above all for fields of particular general economic importance or fields where especially high risks are involved. Based on an efficient science, the innovation potential not only of big enterprises but also of medium and small enterprises must be strengthened and fully utilized. But applied sciences and development are impossible without basic research. The Federal Government affirms the autonomy and self-management of science, but these rights also entail duties on the part of scientists toward the general public. They also have to consider the possible consequences of their work. We want to use new technologies for man, not against him. What the Pole Stanislaw (Letz) meant satirically must not turn into reality. I quote him: He said that technology was about to reach such perfection that man could get along without himself. Scientists must try to find ways and means to make their knowledge clear for society. This is a debt they have to discharge at the creditor's domicile. They have to answer for the quality of their research work and also for the quality of the training of young scientists.

The aviation and space industry, for instance, owes its development in large part to state subsidies. However, the tax payers will not be able to bear this burden forever. Therefore, industry will have to exploit all possibilities for rationalization and more rational organization. [applause]

The federal railroad, too, must exploit all options for rationalization. The payments to the railroad from the federal budget amount to roughly DM14 billion. This is why the profitableness of the railroad must be improved. To this end it will need the cooperation of the transport institutions, especially in the combination of rail and road. Commuter transportation must be further improved. [applause]

I could well visualize that rail transport on the whole will undergo an upward surge because it derives its energy from coal and not from oil. [Schmidt answers an interjection by an unidentifiable deputy: "Why don't you check on what I am saying?"]

I welcome the fact that the number of self-employed has increased again. This shows courage for the future. But middle-class businessmen and professional people must not be driven mad by bureaucratic obstacles. [applause] If impediments and obstacles cannot be eliminated altogether every authority should at least try to make some of the requirements less steep. [applause]

The structural change, ladies and gentlemen, also demands skilled training of the girls and boys who will be working in our economy tomorrow. I expressly thank the managers of the companies, the heads of the training departments, the instructors, and especially the master artisans for having given vocational training to an additional 300,000 young people. [applause] I call on them to make enough training positions available in the next few years as well for the age groups where there was a high birth rate. This is in the economy's own interest lest there be a lack of skilled personnel later.

And I emphasize: Training positions for girls also. [applause] In doing so I particularly address myself to the parents. A girl aged 15 or 16 who is refused vocational training or who is made to believe that this is unimportant for her as a rule cannot ever make up for this disadvantage she has suffered. This is one of the main reasons why actual equal rights for women still lag behind the legally prescribed equal rights. [applause] Equal participation in the world of work and in professional life is and remains a basis for equal rights for women.

On the labor market, and far beyond the labor market, the seriously handicapped require our special attention above all. [applause] State aid cannot replace active solidarity in that respect. This is why I ask company managements and enterprise councils once again to create jobs for the seriously handicapped tailored to their abilities. [applause] You will have heard that 1981 is the international year of the handicapped. The Federal Republic has illustrated its objectives with the program of action entitled Rehabilitation in the Eighties. It will appoint a commissioner responsible for the concerns of the handicapped.

The Federal Government will intensify its efforts to curb illegal hiring and labor. It will continue its efforts toward humanizing jobs, efforts which have been successful up to now. We will implement a standard law on job protection and, in doing so, we will examine whether the legal protection against job termination requires any rewriting.

Pension benefits, ladies and gentlemen, are balanced at the moment thanks to the measures of consolidation. Pension benefits over the past few years have been higher than ever before in Germany. From 1969 to the present pensions increased by a real 45 percent while the net income of active earners increased by a mere real 32 percent, and what I mean by real is after deducting all price increases.

The high level of our old-age benefits is expressed by the high pension level achieved: After a full life's work, after 45 years of insurance, pensions today are well over 71 percent of the comparable net income of active colleagues. Well over 71 percent of the comparable net income of active colleagues, mind you.

In 1981 the increase in the contribution rate by one-half contribution point effective 1 January 1981 remains unchanged, meaning one-fourth percentage point of the gross wages for both employee and employer. The federal subsidy to the pension insurance will be cut by DM3.5 billion. Annuity sharing in the overall benefits is intended as a model for the new regulation of survivor benefits effective 1 January 1985. The minimum shall be the individual's own pension. Furthermore, an additional year spent in raising children will be recognized.

Because matters are still uncertain with regard to data on the costs of the upcoming reforms, quantifying these principles cannot be done before the fall of next year. After 1984, in the adaptation process, equal development of the increase in the expendable income of the wage and salary earners and pensioners will be taken into consideration in line with the financial stability of the pension insurance within the framework of overall economic development.

In the event this objective is to be achieved in such a way that the pensioners, effective 1985, are gradually made to share in financing their health insurance up to 50 percent, based on their pensions--like wage and salary earners--then this health insurance fee shall be collected from all pensioners at an identical rate. The system of pensions in accordance with minimum incomes will be continued beyond 1972 [as heard] excluding part-time work.

Pensioners' health insurance will come under new regulations effective 1 January 1983 in keeping with the provisions of the 21st pension adaptation law. The main orientation points of the new regulations are the following: First, stipulation of the contribution rates for pension incomes from the legal pension insurance in keeping with the provisions of the law just cited, with other comparable annuities in the amount of 50 percent of the contribution rate to pension incomes from the legal pension insurance; second, conversion of the pension increase envisaged under the 21st adaptation law for the purpose of guaranteeing equitable burden sharing into a corresponding pension subsidy.

Ladies and gentlemen, I have just discussed at some length and probably not in a comprehensible way for many of you, details on financial security for the elderly, and I would like to add that I am just as perfectly aware that as far as old people are concerned politics should not be restricted solely to material well-being. [applause] Financial security is indispensable, but by the same token society must be aware that nobody can buy himself out of his commitments toward older fellow citizens with money. The elderly are members of our families, members of our society, they belong in the midst of our society. [applause] For this reason we welcome every effort and endeavor aimed at allowing an individual to have ties with other generations, to make it possible for them to lead a sensible and active life.

I very much welcome that the coalition factions intend to immediately introduce a bill on social insurance for independent artists and writers, introduce it unchanged, so that it will finally come into force. [applause]

The Federal Government will reintroduce the hospital financing bill with a concentration on curtailing costs. I hope for the cooperation of the federal laender. Dental prosthetics as well as medication are to be incorporated in the cost decreases concept.

A word about environmental protection: Insight into ecological relationships and the decision to upset these relationships as little as possible leads in environmental protection from the elimination of damage to the avoidance of damage. The principle remains valid that those who cause damage must eliminate it. The preservation principle, however, will gain significance--damage must not be done at all.

Great damage has been healed in the seventies, damage done to the landscape, to rivers and the air. In the past 10 years 40,000 illegal garbage dumps have been eliminated on the basis of our bill, my dear colleagues. In the past 5 years the lead air contamination in our cities has been cut by about 50 percent on the basis of our legislation. Ecologists and economists should jointly agree on aims, the aims namely of production processes handling raw materials and energy in an economic way, polluting the environment as little as possible.

We need new jobs and the protection of our natural environment simultaneously, we need both things sumultaneously. Man can live only with nature and not as its enemy. We are, therefore, in favor of limiting encroachments on the countryside and for the protection of plant and animal species. I would like to add here that I used the term nature in a generous way, because actually we do not live in natural landscapes but in cultural landscapes, with the exception of the high mountain area and the north German plains, ladies and gentlemen. [applause] A part of the variety of our species was achieved thanks to the cultural landscape, I know that very well.

As regards the protection of nature, the agricultural clause is to be revised and associations' law suits will be introduced as long as they are recognized associations. [shouts, applause]

Protection against poisonous material will be improved with the help of the chemicals bill. In the field of agriculture and food processing, sharper controls will be introduced. A cancer register will also be introduced.

The limits on harmful emissions from vehicles and for noise pollution will be increased. We will again introduce a new traffic noise bill. [applause]

In many cities and communities the successes of our construction policy are seen in many ways such as in the careful preservation of old parts of cities, the preservation of old frame houses and farm houses. The valuable past will be preserved for future generations. We must continue our general efforts aimed at improving living conditions in rural areas.

We must also build more new apartments. Cities and villages must remain comfortable. Children need places where they can play. Bicycle paths are necessary, and not only for children. Kurt Tucholsky once described when dealing with the fact that it is hard to find an ideal apartment what the ideal Berlin apartment should be like: The Baltic Sea in the back and Friedrichstrasse in front. [laughter] That can certainly not be achieved everywhere.

The great majority of our people have more living space and much better equipped living space today than in the early seventies. But one must not be too pretentious either. In cities and densely populated areas single persons, families with many children and foreign workers have great difficulty in finding an apartment. Apartment building policy must be concentrated on these bottlenecks. We want the laender to take over the problem of housing for students.

In order to encourage apartment construction, the Federal Government will improve the procedure for privately financing apartment construction, such as through a simplification of apartment rent comparisons and approval for increasing rents in order to raise the willingness of private investors to invest, such as life insurance companies in particular.

Protection against eviction remains untouched. The tenants' protection against being evicted because of expensive modernization or the turning of rental properties into privately owned condominiums will be improved. The tenants should have the opportunity to modernize their own apartments with the help of their own building loan agreements. [applause]

The Federal Government will gradually introduce more market economy elements into social sector housing construction, so that more apartments can be built despite increased costs. The apartment rent subsidies will remain as a social security issue and they will be increased on 1 January 1981.

We would like to place the direct promotion of social housing construction under the sole responsibility of the laender. That will be negotiated with the laender governments. It will also serve the interests of communities which occasionally have complained--and very rightly--about bureaucratic tutoring by various higher levels.

The promotion of privately owned apartments is an important part of our housing policy. Paragraph 7B of the income tax bill which has a particularly strong effect on construction work in villages and small towns will remain in force--I say this with regard to public discussions. [applause]

We will examine whether we can better help families with children, or how we might make the tax aspects of privately owned dwellings more effective, such as the elimination of negative effects in connection with the promotion of so-called false two-family houses inhabited only by the owner.

A word about increases in the price of land complicating the consturction of new apartments. The instruments of the federal construction bill are to be increased so as to improve the amount of land available for construction and to keep price increases down. We will examine whether and how an increase of the area tax for land ready for construction can improve its availability.

The European Council has a campaign going under the motto "Towns to live in." This means not merely the procurement of apartments, it also includes theaters, concert halls, museums, libraries and universities. Without the towns, art and culture would be in poor shape. In this respect--I appeal to you individually, ladies and gentlemen--the federal capital Bonn, is worthy of the special attention of the whole Bundestag.

The integration of foreigners: Integration means that the foreigners living and working here must be given a status which enables them to feel part of society and to feel at home. This is a very difficult task. Let us show them that we can and want to be good neighbors. [applause] We have 4.5 million foreigners today, with the percentage of workers having declined and the percentage of family members rising. More than 1 million are children under 16 years; over 1 million foreign children are under 16 years old. Every second child was born here. Half of all foreigners have lived here for more than 8 years.

These few figures show that primarily we are dealing with people who want to become acclimated here over an extended period, and many of them forever. We will maintain our freeze on recruitment, and we will see to it that only those who are really persecuted are granted asylum. But to integrate 4.5 million foreigners we need to have apartments worthy of human beings, jobs, better naturalization opportunities and above all concrete aid for the children. If they are left alone, if they grow up in double homelessness, being neither at home where their parents come from nor at home here, if they do not finish school, if two thirds of the young foreigners have to work as unskilled laborers, then all this might result in serious harm, if things were to continue like that. [applause]

We need to have in all the parliaments, including the communal parliaments, the cooperation of all, including all the parties, to counteract any possible animosity toward foreigners. [applause] I want to thank expressly and cordially all those who in the past years have seen to it, mostly in a quiet and patient way, that foreigners have become fellow citizens and friends, in particular the social workers, teachers, fellow workers, shop stewards, clergymen and neighbors. [applause] I thank the incumbent commissioner for the integration of foreigners for his work and his report. The Federal Government will retain this institution becuase it is necessary.

A little story. A teacher in Saarbruecken recently asked her 13-year-old pupils to write down what they would do if they were federal chancellor, and a little Turkish girl wrote--I will read it to you, her spelling is very poor--If I were federal chancellor I would not require dictation exercises for foreign children. Foreign children have many difficulties with the German language.

Naturally we cannot abolish dictation exercises in schools, not even for foreign children, but I think we should thank the teacher for her understanding, because she gave the little Turkish girl a 'B' grade for her essay despite her poor spelling, adding that perhaps she might become federal chancellor, because her spelling in fact was improving all the time. [laughter, applause]

The children of foreigners need much affection in many places and in many schools. It does not make sense to bring only foreign children together in a class where they speak only their own language. [applause]

A word on the Federal Government and the laender: The Federal Government affirms naturally and expressly the structure of three levels as laid down in the Basic Law. Regrettably this structure has been somewhat blurred over the decades. We have reason to doubt whether the present practice of common tasks and other mixed financing, which was introduced in 1969, is sensible and expedient in every respect. At the time, we had a big backlog in hospital beds and new universities, for instance. In practice there is a lot of ineffective double work today, a blurring and mixing of responsiblities regarding tasks and financing, and too much bureaucracy.

Therefore, the Federal Government is striving to reduce the so-called classic common tasks by 20 percent with the aim of limiting them to the necessary core and to disengage them in administrative terms. This will initiate a very difficult process which cannot be terminated in the ninth legislative period alone, but we want to make a start. We intend to have open and constructive talks with the laender governments on a revision of the common tasks and other mixed financing. I am aware that some laender governments consider this disengagement necessary and that some other laender governments are hesitant--either attitude is independent of any partisan shadings.

Ladies and gentlemen, the Basic Law stipulated that necessary expenditures be covered equally by the Federal Government and the laender. In fact, however, the Federal Government is caught in the middle regarding its financial options. On the one hand, its international commitments have grown considerably. On the other hand, the percentage of overall tax revenues going to the Federal Government went down from 54.2 percent in 1970 to 48.5 percent by the end of the decade. The distribution of finances must be rebalanced, not in the interest of the Federal Government but much rather in the interest of the functioning of our state as a whole.

The political functioning of the state as a whole also depends decisively on the responsible cooperation of the highest federal bodies. In the legislative periods since 1969 the impression has frequently emerged that the opposition considered the Bundesrat a substitute for the majority it lacked in the Bundestag. The Bundesrat did not oppose this tendency which is clearly objectionable in terms of the constitution. The 5 October election result has yielded clear majorities for the social-liberal coalition in all the laender, except for the free state of Bavaria. This should give the laender with Christian Democratic governments cause for thought. [applause]

The Federal Government will present for 1981 a draft budget envisaging a roughly 4 percent increase in spending. Net borrowing, which will amount to some DM27 billion, will not be higher than in 1980.

In this way we adhere exactly to the line which we indicated prior to the elections and which the Finance Planning Council recommended on 4 July. Thus what we are doing today is what we announced in the summer. We expect the laender to likewise abide by the recommendations of the Finance Planning Council, recommendations which they themselves helped to adopt.

As far as the federal budget is concerned, this means that we must make considerable cuts and shifts on the payment side, that we must reduce subsidies and other privileges as well as mixed financing arrangements and that we must introduce and accentuate the tax hikes announced as early as in June of this year.

Ladies and gentlemen, anyone who wants to reduce subsidies will run up against the resistance of powerful pressure groups and their lobbies. It takes courage to face them lest the people as a whole suffer harm.

For instance, under the present conditions, subsidizing oil consumption is no longer justifiable anywhere. [applause]

The savings interest rate law will no longer apply to new savings agreements. Housing construction dividends will be cut to 14 percent and the investment period increased to 10 years. The dual promotion of savings deposits under the DM624 law is no longer justifiable and, therefore, will not be continued. We will also eliminate tax privileges for savings banks, public credit institutes, and credit granting cooperatives.

The Federal Government will also introduce bills having the following purpose.

First, increasing the oil tax for gasoline by 7 pfennigs, and for diesel fuel by 3 pfennigs [per liter] not later than on 1 April 1981. This is also necessary in order to discourage oil consumption and oil imports and to ease the burden on the balance of payments.

Second, increasing by the same date the spirits tax by DM3 per liter of pure alcohol.

If I compute these tax hikes for 1 year they amount to DM3.7 billion but are, on the other hand, offset by relief for the taxpayer through the tax package of 1981-82 and through the increase in the children's bonus and the housing allowance in the amount of DM16.4 billion. That is, there are tax hikes in the amount of DM3.7 billion as against tax relief in the amount of DM16.4 billion.

Tax simplification and reduction in red tape remain important goals of tax policy. In this respect the Federal Govenrment counts on the support of the laender, for example, with respect to the so-called tax office solution in the case of the children's bonus. [applause] What I stated here in the Bundestag on 5 July 1979 was this, and I quote. At the beginning of the next legislative period the Federal Government will introduce a bill which provides for the abolition of the motor vehicle tax and a corresponding increase in the oil tax. It will take into account particularly the special problems of the seriously handicapped and of the commuters. It must, however, ensure that it does not lead to another shift of funds from the Federal Government to the laender.

The Federal Government, ladies and gentlemen, insists on this and asks the laender to grant their approval. I am aware that so far they do not intend to grant this approval.

A word concerning the borrowing of public bodies which interested parties during the Bundestag election campaign made to appear like a dangerous state indebtedness. [commotion]

First, the Federal Government is accountable for only half of the borrowing. The borrowing by the laender has been increasing at the same pace for many years.

Second, in an international comparison with comparable industrial states the Federal Republic has nothing to be ashamed of.

Third, from late 1969 to late 1979 the Federal Government borrowed a net total of DM148 billion. Yet during the same period it spent DM230 billion on investments, and it transferred besides more than DM140 billion in investment and budget aid to the laender. [applause]

Fourth, the liabilities of the Federal Government are the result of borrowing due to its responsiblity for the functioning of our economy, employment, and improving the opportunities for future generations. In an identical economic situation the Federal Government would again act just as it acted after 1973. [applause]

Fifth, the siutation today, however, is different from the one following 1973, and it requires different concepts. For this reason the Federal Government has envisaged savings outlays for 1981. Whoever demands a decrease in public indebtedness beyond that will deserve attention only if and when he says just as plainly where else, savings are to be achieved and at whose expense. [applause]

Let me turn to another field, ladies and gentlemen. Our coalition has emphasized vocational training. The reforms and the enhancement of the education sector have been worth while: Never before have we had as many well-trained citizens as we have today. Many children of laborers and others who were formerly underprivileged have been able to utilize openings in higher education which we brought about and overcome the barriers between social strata.

We object to the demands for more state guidance and state selection. We prefer to put our trust in the individual to make a responsible decision. This demands equal chances also for people with low incomes. For this reason we will continue to promote education at a time when expenditures for more than 800,000 pupils and students have increased considerably and limit our financial leeway.

The social-liberal coalition has broken the nationwide barrier of the numerus clausus [selection process for university admittance by high school graduation marks]. It now only applies to a few subjects--but even there it must be abolished as soon as possible. [applause] Even though the number of students doubled during the past 10 years, the further restruction of the numerus clausus would surely have become possible if and when the academic institutions were better and more constantly used, over the whole day--and this day also has an evening--and over the entire year. [applause]

We are all for a competition of the laender in the education sector, but not for a relapse into educational provincialism. [applause] If the ideological dispute of the laender over the recognition of transcripts is at the expense of young people, if a high school graduatefrom Lower Saxony is not allowed to study in Bavaria, then the bounds of commonsense have been exceeded. Grade school [gesamtschule] has proved to be efficient.

Many parents want an integrated school for their children. Parents' wishes must be respected everywhere. [laughter, applause]; everywhere--you failed to applaud, Mr Kohl. We do not want an ideological war in matters of education, but we want plurality, cultural variety, and tolerance also in educational matters, please. [shouts, applause]

There is at present a contradictory discussion surrounding marriage and the family. Some people spread the impression that a sound world exists in the protected happy family. Others pretend that families are dissolving everywhere. This black and white depiction is not in line with our reality.

Our family policy is based on the significance attributed by the Basic Law and the people to the family, namely as the social and cultural center of life. The state must not tutor the the family, but it must protect it. [shouts, applause] Much has been done materially for families in the past years: subsidies for children, increases in these subsidies, bonuses for taking care of children, vacations for mothers and so on. Next year there will again be more money for children and improvements with regard to taxes.

In many spheres equal rights for women are just something that has been put down in print. We will do what we can to really implement these rights, but most of the work must be done by society itself. Work performed by women in the family must be assessed equally highly as their professional work. [shouts, applause] The reverse must also be true: Professional work must be respected as much as in the family. [applause] Women need better opportunities in professional life, they need opportunities to get ahead in firms and institutions, political parties [shouts] and associations. Women disrupting their professional career for family reasons need offers for further education. We will examine whether the situation of women can be improved by an antidiscrimination bill. [applause]

A word about the youth, who are receiving a lot of blame but who I believe must also be recognized and praised. [applause] Those who see only the phenomena of youthful fashions fail to gain a real image of youth, fail to see the variety of character.

The young are not a homogenous group or clique. Maybe a common basic approach can be seen inasfar as one can speak of a certain skepticism vis-a-vis politics. But to the youth and maybe their common basic approach today also belongs the fact that many deal with each other in a more humane way and with more solidarity than many older people believe who do not know. [applause]

Maybe this also includes the willingness to look after the welfare of others. We have seen at Lutheran Church meetings and Catholic Church meetings how many young people have engaged themselves in this work. We know that many young people work hard in youth and social institutions, in homes for the mentally ill and in homes for retarded children. Among them are also many conscientious objectors. [applause] I want to add here that we will continue to pursue a new regulation on the rights of conscientious objection and civil service within the constitutional framework. [applause]

I find it good that many young people are against attributing too much importance to material values. I also find it good that young people look for new and alternative forms of life. I must say, however, that turning one's back totally on society and total withdrawal is most dubious, particularly if one wants to have an unrestricted share in the achievements of society where this is profitable. [applause]

The social-liberal coalition as before will continue to act for the private law character of the press and the public law character of the electronic media, of radio and television. This historically developed media balance once belonged to the basic consensus of all the democratic parties in the Federal Republic. It would be good if the parties of the Bundestag returned to that consensus. [applause]

The future of our media system must certainly be discussed most throughly. The minister-presidents of the laender recently decided to use 20 pfennings of the future increase in radio fees for the financing of cable television pilot projects. Gentlemen, one must clearly realize that the cable system cannot be financed with these contributions. So the question remains who should pay for the cable system you desire. The answer to that question also belongs to the discussion on cable television. [applause]

On this occasion I would again like to add a most personal remark, namely my considerable personal skepticism with regard to the increasing amount of television young people watch and the curtailment of family life by the electronic media, my personal skepticism which I do not want to hide from you. I was happy about the broad agreement I received in this respect from both churches, but I will freely admit that everybody must make his own decision in this respect.

A word about athletics, something which belongs to the most important social forces in this country. There are 17 million members in the 55,000 sports and gymnastics associations of the German Sports Association, with 7 million young people among them. In other words, the German Sports Association is the largest German youth organization. Sports and politics means partnership, it means recognition of the independent position of sports.

The promotion of general sports and particularly of sports for the handicapped remains a high priority task for us. The Federal Government adheres to its promises that no financial disadvantages for major sports will result from the fact that there was no participation in the summer Olympic games.

Let me touch on another issue. Legal policy has brought about important changes. We want as before more justice and freedom for the individual in society. We want to develop our constitutional state and to preserve its liberality. I think we are all convinced that the Basic Law has stood its test. Broad agreement exists among the people on its basic elements.

The Federal Government will examine whether more detailed aims of the state or more legal tasks must be incorporated in the Basic Law.

Wherever the principles of a social state and a constitutional state demand it, we will as before strengthen the position of the weak. In doing this the formal equality under the law will be developed to a meaningful equality--of opportunity, for example, such as the improvement of consumer protection. We adhere to a reform of state liability. We want to better safeguard the rights of authors, artists and photographers.

In criminal matters we will have to find new answers to new forms of crime. We will add to the list of offenses in the field of white-collar crime. Victims of crimes will also in the future be granted our concern and assistance. On the other hand, we will continue our efforts to reintegrate offenders into society. We will introduce the possibilities of release on probation in the case of life imprisonment and expand them for other prison sentences. When it comes to punishments for juvenile delinquency, the educational aspect must be stressed more. Society and the state will have to intensify efforts to save above all young people from drug addiction and to help addicts give up drugs. We will introduce an amendment to the law on narcotics. The liberal nature of our body politic will also have to prove its worth in the law on criminal procedures. We want to revise, among other things, the law on criminal procedures. We will also improve data protection.

We do not want to have extremists in public service, but we also do not want to have opportunists and conformists. We will try to find possibilities, in checking the loyalty of officials to the constitution, to make the principle of proportionality prevail by differentiating the demands according to the different functions. [applause]

As before we will perserve our internal security with a sense of proportion but also with determination. We will resolutely countereact violent extremism and terrorism, no matter whether it comes from the right or the left. We are clearly against any dangerous revival of neonazism in our country. Legislative gaps which have come to light in the prosecution of neonazi activities will have to be closed. [applause]

Foreigners bringing their bloody feuds with them to our country must reckon with our resolute resistance. [applause] We will review at adequate intervals the regulations on fighting terrorism for their efficiency and necessity. Regarding the law on banning contacts, we want to find an arrangement which safeguards the guarantees of criminal procedure in this field to an even larger extent, without diminishing the protection of the person who is threatened by terrorist activities. At this point I want to express our gratitude to the officials of the security authorities of the Federal Republic and the laender. I have confidence in them. [applause]

Ladies and gentlemen, in our pluralist society faithful Christians of different confessions, Jews, Muslims and people who have lost faith and nonreligious people live together. We respect the religious and ideological convictions of every individual as a part of what cannot be voted on, which means as a part of the sphere that the state must not control, not even by majority decisions.

The churches and religious communities have important tasks. As before, the Federal Government is prepared to cooperate and is prepared to hola d dialogue in particular on those points on which opinions differ. In this respect I refer to my 1976 government statement. Such a dialogue, however, must be based on mutual respect and on respect for the partner's independence. [applause]

In the land where the reformation originated the relationship between the Christian denominations is of special importance. Therefore, I welcome the talks between Pope John Paul II and the representatives of the Evangelical Church of Germany. I appreciate that the pope during his visit directed people's attention to essential things, that he encouraged many. For this he must be thanked; he must be thanked also by those who do not accept his views on every point.

Ladies and gentlemen, the eighties began with many crises in world politics. We feel that peace is fragile. We also feel that people are afraid and insecure. The world has become more complicated than some realized. This is also the reason why there can be no easy or even final answers in politics, nor must politics consider only quantitative success important, neither regarding individuals, nor groups, nor all the people.

Politics must strive for the qualitative implementation of basic rights for every individual for spiritual, human and moral progress. But this cannot be assessed by quantitative standards.

What also must matter is the fact that most people need recognition of what they do with responsibility and solidarity. And difficult times require more solidarity, as you all know. Many solutions of yesterday are no longer suitable today. We need, therefore, to have courage for a renewal. But we also have reason to be optimistic and courageous.

If I may add a personal remark and, as the federal chancellor of a coalition, add a clear work as a Social Democrat, let me say this: The fact that my Social Democratic Party now enters the 15th year of its government activities, that it will work with full responsibility for another 4 years to introduce step by step its specific historical experiences, its basic ideas, its spiritual and social interests gives strength to many of us, to me as well. [applause]

We can all derive pride and confidence from the overall development and all-round consolidation of our democracy. The state and social institutions have proved their worth. They are affirmed by the citizens, which is not the case everywhere in the world, not in all states. The youth look for human values, a large majority of the youth is prepared to commit itself. It is also willing to accept duties, if it recognizes and understands them. We must help the youth understand them. I appeal to young people: Criticize our state, but show your loyalty and your solidarity as well, because this is your state, this is your country and this is your future. [applause]

Ladies and gentlemen, starting from very different points and positions, if in difficult times we are all open to new ideas, if we look for just solutions, if we act in solidarity, if we do everything in our power for peace, then each of us can look forward to the future with courage. [applause]

DEFENSE MINISTRY CONSIDERING ARMS PROGRAM CUTS

DW241127 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 22 Nov 80 pp 1, 2

[Article signed Fy.: "Bonn Is About To Make Deep Incisions in the Arms Program"]

[Text] Bonn, 21 Nov--The Defense Ministry is preparing deep incisions into the arms program of the Bundeswehr. It was still impossible Friday to learn the exact dimension and the concrete details, but what is shaping up now is that equipping the air force and the navy with the "Tornado" combat plane, jointly developed by the Federal Republic, Great Britain and Italy, is no longer possible as planned. At least considerable delays seem to be inevitable if the coalition decision is upheld that the promise to increase the defense expenditures by a real 3 percent each year is not to be fulfilled.

The Defense Ministry announced Friday that no final decisions were made at the closed meeting at which Defense Minister Apel met with his ministry's state secretaries and the department heads for budget and arms on Wednesday and Thursday. At the very time Apel and his aides were conferring the chancellor conducted talks in Washington during which a correction to Bonn's attitude to date seemed possible. Thus the participants in the restricted meeting confined themselves to listing and establishing the financial magnitudes of the individual austerity options.

It is now planned to make the decision on the cuts for next year on 10 December. The intention is to establish in Frebruary 1981 what cuts will be necessary in the years to follow. On the question of austerity measures the Defense Ministry confined itself on Friday to examples. Thus the curtailment of the air transport standby unit is under consideration. This standby unit is part of the transport wing and is available to the armed forces, but also to politicians for special flights.

Other considerations include the deactivation of some of the "DO-28" transport planes and a reduction in the number of army bands, of which there are 22 today. People do not deny that the cuts deemed necessary will not be accomplished by means of such rather symbolic measures. Incisions in the arms program are indispensable to achieve this end. The basis of the austerity surveys was the coalition agreement under which the Defense Ministry is to be allotted next year a mere DM620 million more than its allotment this year under the defense budget and the supplementary budget. The actual extent of the 1981 defense budget thus would be DM39.75 billion. This is about 1.8 percent more than in 1980. This growth, however, exists only nominally, because with an inflation rate expected to be 4 percent this would not amount to any real growth but a real shrinkage by about 2.8 percent. To achieve a growth rate of a real 3 percent--with an inflation rate of 4 percent as expected by the experts in the Federal Government--the defense minister would have to have an additional amount of well over DM2.5 billion instead of a sum of DM620 million.

If the amount is DM39.75 billion, not merely a real growth of 3 percent promised to NATO will be ignored, but also the still valid medium-range financial planning envisaging a real 2.1 percent increase. Due to this reduced budget, the Defense Ministry will have a gap of about DM1 billion when it comes to paying for orders and commitments already undertaken. In order to eliminate the gap, so to speak, all individual categories of next year's defense budget will be combed through. Funds for individual areas will be even shorter than heretofore. This pertains to the fields of infrastructure and research and development, which will be cut considerably, as well as to operational costs which are said to be limited "to the absolutely necessary." The ministry spokesman said that under such prerequisites the procurement of large arms systems can be continued, but he expressly limited these statements to the coming year, which suggests that this will no longer be the case in 1982.

The statement by the defense minister indicated that the procurement of the new fighter plane "Tornado" will create the greatest difficulties. It was frankly admitted that the procurement of this plane, which is supposed to be the backbone of the air force in the eighties and nineties, can no longer be financed. An attempt will be made to have the partners, Italy and Great Britain, as well as the producing firms change the contractual agreements. As far as one could gather from the statements of the Defense Ministry on Friday, it is not in a position to finance commitments resulting from valid contracts with the funds in the new and reduced budget.

According to the Defense Ministry statements, the following "special problems" will come about with regard to the "Tornado": In the preparatory talks held by the defense minister with the participants of the closed session on Wednesday and Thursday and talks he had on 9 October and 27 October, it was revealed that production progress of the "Tornado" has been "unexpectedly good." In other words, the planes will be produced and supplied to the Bundeswehr faster than the Defense Ministry thought. But we have been assured that clarity has been achieved this week with regard to the additional amount beyond this year's envisaged "Tornado" budget means of DM1.2 billion. It is clear that an additional DM533 million will be needed this year to pay for the "Tornado" bills. It is also known that in addition to the DM1.75 billion made available by the budget for next year, another DM800 million will be necessary. But these funds do not exist.

In addition, there is a desire to renegotiate the conditions for the production of the fourth batch of "Tornados," orders for which have not yet been placed. The attempt will be made to try to "make changes or an extension" in order to adapt the payments due to the available finances of the Defense Ministry. The ministry realizes that this will make the matter even more expensive. The ministry formulated these facts by saying that it is still unclear whether this extension would lead to more expenditures in the 1981 fiscal year.

The Defense Ministry considers as urgent an agreement with the partners on an "extension" or delay of the "Tornado program." The present ideas, as indicated by the ministry, aim for a prolongation of the production time for 1 1/2 years. It is unknown so far what will be done if the partner countries are not prepared to change the current contracts.

GOVERNMENT EXPRESSES 'SERIOUS WORRIES' OVER CHAD

NC241300 Paris AFP in English 1248 GMT 24 Nov 80

[Excerpt] Paris, 24 Nov (AFP)--The French Government today expressed "serious worries" at the intervention of "important armed elements from abroad" in Chad and said it was in touch with African governments over the war in its former colony.

The arrival in Chad of these foreign elements "brings a new dimension" to the war, a Foreign Ministry statement said. This new dimension, it said, "entails increased risks in Chad, is causing numerous victims among its population and threatens the stability of the region."

"France is in touch over this matter with African states which are, like itself, worried by the worsening of the situation. It will take particular account of their reactions," the statement said.

The statement was seen as a clear reference to the presence of 3,000 to 4,000 Libyan troops in Chad reported on Thursday by an American military source in Washington.

CABINET COMMUNIQUE ON BARRE YUGOSLAVIA VISIT

LD240933 Paris LE MONDE in French 21 Nov 80 p 12

[Excerpts] The cabinet met on Wednesday, 19 November 1980, at the Elysee under Mr Giscard d'Estaing's chairmanship. At the end of the meeting the following communique was issued:

Mr Barre in Yugoslavia

The premier reported on the official visit he made to Yugoslavia from 12 to 14 November. During this visit he had talks with the authorities of that country.

These talks revealed the broad convergence of views which exists between Yugoslavia and France on major international issues of common interest to the two countries, whether it be East-West relations, the conflicts in the Near East and Middle East or the dialogue between developed and developing countries. The two prime ministers agreed in particular to step up contacts between the two countries with a view to the resumption of North-South dialogue.

The prospects for extending bilateral economic cooperation were also examined in detail by the two government chiefs and by the two foreign trade ministers. The premier announced that France's support for the Yugoslav stabilization plan would take the form of a $150-million loan granted by three French banks. This support will continue to be given in future in forms yet to be decided.

Interesting prospects were brought to light for a contribution by French enterprises to Yugoslavia's economic development in many sectors such as energy, transport, and the food industry.

Federal Executive Council President Djuranovic accepted an invitation to make an official visit to France.

TRUDEAU, LEADERS CONFER; STATEMENT ON QUEBEC ISSUE

LD251040 Paris Domestic Service in French 0700 GMT 25 Nov 80

[Text] Pierre-Elliott Trudeau has ended his visit to France. The Canadian prime minister had meetings yesterday with Valery Giscard d'Estaing and Raymond Barre, and they mainly discussed the major international problems.

The question of Quebec was dealt with for 5 minutes only. As you know, Canada is shortly due to attend the Francophone conference in Dakar, and there is disagreement between the Canadian federal authorities and the government of Quebec, which wants to be represented independently. There is no question of this, Pierre-Elliott Trudeau said: [Begin recording] If you are asking will Quebec be present at Dakar, yes, Quebec will be present. It will be present through its authorized government, in other words, the national government, the Canadian Government. The Canadian Government which I am heading holds a majority in Quebec, if I am right, at any rate up to half. The government I am heading has obtained 67.8 [percent] of the votes in the national elections in Quebec, which is much more than Mr Levesque or any provincial leader in Quebec. This is what I have obtained, if I remember correctly. So what is Quebec? Quebec, in international questions, is my government, and you ask me if it will be present at Dakar. Yes, if we are at Dakar, Quebec will be present, because we are there, we, the Canadian Government. Canada is a bilingual country. Who will be the members of the delegation? That is for us, the Canadian Government, to say. [end recording]

LE MONDE ON POSSIBLE NEW EAST-WEST STRATEGIC BALANCE

LD241131 Paris LE MONDE in French 21 Nov 80 pp 1, 5

[Michel Tatu article: "6 Percent, 3 Percent or Less?"]

[Text] One swallow does not make a summer, but official circles in France are wasting an opportunity to crow. France is the only country in the Atlantic alliance which is not part of the integrated defense system and therefore does not feel bound by the promise made by all the other allies in 1978 to increase their defense budgets by 3 percent per year in real terms, but it is also the only country which is keeping that promise, except for the United States, Canada and ...Luxembourg. France's defense budget is up 18 percent for 1981 which, even taking into account the expected inflation rate of at least 12 percent, is well above the fateful 3 percent threshold. The other allies, however, are now irritating Washington by what is seen on the other side of the Atlantic as a new and serious evasion of responsibility after the stalling over the Olympic games and sanctions against Iran and the USSR.

The pressures brought to bear by the Americans over the past few days have probably had some effect. The Germans have promised to increase their budget (the original draft made provision for almost no real increase next year, which, moreover, is in keeping with the zero growth in gross domestic product); the British maintain that, after having attained the 3 percent increase in 1980, they will "not be far off" in 1981. The Italians have also promised to do their best, but nobody seriously expects them to attain the 3 percent mark in view of their high inflation rate. The Dutch, Belgians and Danes, however, simply admit their inability to keep their promises. The Danes, who are calmly planning to freeze military funds at their present level until 1985, are the particular targets of the warning issued by one of the U.S. envoys to Brussels: In the event of aggression why should the United States help countries whose military effort is so weak that any reinforcements would arrive on the spot too late?

Economic difficulties, galloping energy costs and inflation rates are the arguments most frequently put forward to back up this evasion of responsibility but they do not explain everything. Either you admit that the Soviet defense effort justifies an additional sacrifice or you do not believe that argument. However, it must be admitted that those who choose the second alternative have lost a great deal of ground in the past few years. Pacifism does, of course, survive--in its isolationist and romantic form in Britain, as is shown by the gains made by the leftwing within the Labor Party, in its neo-Poujadist form [reference to rightwing movement among small storekeepers organized by Pierre Poujade in 1956] ("what is the use of defending ourselves?"), in the Netherlands and Denmark, and finally in a watered-down ideological form ("detente with the East must take priority, let's not provoke the Soviets") in the leftwing of the West German SPD.

However, aside from what one sarcastic observer described as this "European area of Finlandization" a consensus has been established almost everywhere on the reality of the threat: The U.S. figures on the constant increase in Soviet military spending (around 5 percent per year in real terms over the past 15 years) have been confirmed by the appearance of several generations of missiles, the SS-20 missile and the Backfire bomber in the Red Army, and by the addition over the past 12 years of 1 million men and 5,000 tanks to the Warsaw Pact forces, which were, moreover, already superior to NATO forces in all those categories.

Over this time, however, both before and after the USSR's invasion of Afghanistan, the United States has been forced to turn its eyes toward the Persian Gulf and to build up forces there, some of which have been taken from the U.S. forces in Europe. In keeping with the "division of labor" principle put forward by the Europeans themselves, the Europeans have been asked to "fill the gaps," particularly in the sphere of naval presence (a U.S. aircraft carrier has left the Mediterranean to take up a permanent position in the Gulf approaches) and in logistics. European civilian air companies, for instance, should be able to make up for the additional load placed on U.S. transport capabilities by the mobilization in Southwest Asia. However, as a U.S. official noted, "the matter is being discussed but little is being done."

This reveals an unexpected consequence of the quarrels between the French and their allies over "Atlanticism." Faced with the same danger, the country which has chosen to remain independent in security matters is making its own decision on what effort is necessary, knowing that it must assume its responsibilities alone in the event of conflict. The country which has chosen to take the alliance as its top priority, however, leaves it up to a country which is stronger than itself to take the essential steps. The model pupil of the Atlantic class has turned into a dunce--although he had never ceased to be a dunce; people had simply forgotten that it was not the U.S. teacher but the Soviet examiner who was setting the questions.

Nonetheless, the U.S. teacher himself is going to take a sterner line. "If Mr Reagan announces an increase in the defense budget of more than 6 percent in real terms and the Europeans decide on an increase of less than 3 percent," the same American remarked, "this will produce a very serious situation for the alliance." There is no longer any doubt that the Pentagon's funds, which are already up 5 percent in real terms according to President Carter's present plans, are going to be increased further. For the 1981 budget alone, which is already being implemented, Defense Secretary Brown is going to ask for an additional $1 billion. Mr Tower, the Republican senator who is going to head the Senate Armed Forces Committee (unless he becomes Pentagon chief, as is also possible), is talking of an additional $3 billion and a group of experts in Reagan's team is going so far as an additional $25 billion to $37 billion for 1981 alone. As for the 1982 budget, which will be presented by the Carter administration just before the transfer of power, it will very probably be over $200 million [as published] (the fact that the initial turning point of $100 billion was only passed in 1977 gives some idea of the speed of the increase).

If the Carter administration does not do that, Mr Reagan can be relied upon to give the necessary boost. The future president may well have promised to curb state spending, cut taxes and balance the budget but, according to Mr Tower, this last objective "is not priority number one." Among the programs which will certainly be reexamined by the Republicans, we should mention the construction of a penetration bomber based on the B-1 project abandoned by Mr Carter in 1977; speeding up deployment of the MX mobile intercontinental missile (so that 200 missiles are operational in 1986 and not in 1989, as previously planned); the deployment of the neutron bomb in Europe, which is now very probable; and, finally, stepping up research into laser weapons within the context of a new effort to set up an antimissile defense system. It should be recalled that the United States has never used the opportunity provided by the treaties to protect their offensive missiles by an ABM network.

The philosophy behind this new effort is already clear. The concepts of "parity," "sufficiency" or "overall equivalence" which were in force under past presidents will be replaced under Mr Reagan by the concept of a "safety margin." Although the future president has not been very explicit on this subject, one of his supporters, retired General Graham, who is joint chairman of the "Coalition for Peace Through Strength," expanded on it openly in a recent issue of the U.S. NEWS AND WORLD REPORT: Since the Soviets, by definition, have the military initiative, he explains, parity between the two superpowers' arsenals would mean superiority for them. "The United States must be able to absorb a first strike and remain capable of defending itself. That requires superiority."

This idea is not as incompatible with the arms limitation process and negotiations with Moscow as it might seem. The starting point for this argument is what could be called the idea of the Soviet "maximum effort" in the defense sphere: As Mr Voslenskiy explains, after many others, in his book "Nomenklatura," the Kremlin is bound to seek superiority over the capitalist world--even if it does not achieve it, that is its goal--and consequently to place everything which comes to hand at its army's service; it is already spending all it can and this effort will continue whatever the other countries do. Spending will not, therefore, be reduced as a result of possible arms limitation agreements but will not be increased, either, since the maximum burden at least in peacetime has already been imposed on an economy which, with the rigid structures of the present system, will continue to be weak.

The only result which we can hope for from the Soviets therefore is to prompt them, either by new arms programs or by limitation agreements in certain spheres, to divert from one sector of the military apparatus to another spending which cannot be reduced and is at the maximum level: for instance, from the offensive to the defensive sector, from the construction of new warheads to the construction of large numbers of silos and so forth--all of which will possibly be less "destabilizing" for the West. The Kremlin is already using the SALT negotiations to curb the U.S. programs which worry it most, and that is why there is reason to think it will finally agree to modify the SALT II treaty, if only to keep the process on course. Washington could do likewise but on the basis of energetic programs which will present its partner with faits accomplis, not by hoping that its partner will transfer the resources released to civilian spending, as it is saying it will in public.

Another factor is contributing to the rapid acceleration in the race. The idea of the "window of vulnerability" which will appear in the strategic balance, to the West's detriment, between now and 1986 is based on two observations: The U.S. Minutemen are vulnerable until they are replaced by the MX missiles, beginning in 1986 (according to Mr Carter's timetable), and the SS-20 missiles and Backfire bombers being deployed at a rate of more than 50 units per year for the former and 30 for the latter will only be countered by the U.S. medium-range weapons deployed in Europe as from 1984; the modernization of NATO's conventional forces will take several years to catch up with the similar effort which the Warsaw Pact has been making since at least 1968. However, all these Western programs will go further than their initial objective and will place the Soviets in a position of weakness toward the end of the decade: For instance, the MX missile will make all Soviet ground-based weapons vulnerable, and these now comprise three-fourths of Moscow's nuclear arsenal--in other words, a much higher proportion than the Minutemen in the U.S. defense system.

Will the Soviets not therefore be doubly tempted to use the "window of vulnerability" they now have to launch, if not an open aggression, at least an intimidation offensive enabling them to reap some political gains before the balance is tipped against them, toward the end of the decade? No responsible leader can take such a risk lightly and that explains the feverish nature of the present preparations. Nobody wants to see 1984 become as fateful a date in mankind's history as it has been in literature.

POLLS TAKEN ON PRESIDENTIAL RACE; RESULTS ANALYZED

LE FIGARO Findings

LD241013 Paris LE FIGARO in French 19 Nov 80 pp 1-2

[Charles Rebois report: "72 Percent of the French People Believe Giscard Will Win"]

[Text] Francois Mitterrand will have to overcome a big handicap before he can hope to cause anxiety to Valery Giscard d'Estaing in the second presidential election ballot. The announcement of his candidacy has not caused any upheaval among public opinion. In October it was believed that he would obtain 43 percent of the vote; in November, it is assumed that he would obtain only 41 percent compared with Valery Giscard d'Estaing's 59 percent. This is the main conclusion to be drawn from our [LE FIGARO-SOFRES] second opinion poll on the way the electorate intends to vote on 26 April and 1 May.

The inquiry, which was held from 6 through 13 November, took into account the latest events concerning the race for the Elysee: Michel Rocard's withdrawal and Marie-France Garaud's candidacy.

On the left, there is no longer any unknown quantity in the equation since the two main candidates have stated their intentions.

By indulging in a no-holds-barred duel, Francois Mitterrand and Georges Marchais have given an unexpected turn to the debate. However, is the question of the presidential election really what matters most in their confrontation? The Communists and the Socialists have been settling an old quarrel which goes back to the origin of Marxism, the very quarrel which existed between them as long ago as the 1920 congress in Tours.

The leadership of the left is their main--you could say, their only--objective. Consequently, in the sphere of electoral strategy no attention is being paid to the second ballot. Only the results to be achieved in the first ballot are deemed to be of any significance. Will Francois Mitterrand or Georges Marchais come first on 26 April? If he is candidate--and he undoubtedly will be--the outgoing president will represent only a secondary target since he will be out of reach.

However, 5 months before the election it seems that Francois Mitterrand will be handicapped even in the first ballot. According to our opinion poll, he would obtain only 10 percent of votes if the election took place now. In November [as published] he would have obtained 19 percent and Michel Rocard 24 percent. Obviously, public opinion has misunderstood what took place within the Socialist Party the other week.

As a result of losing one point Francois Mitterrand has been placed within Georges Marchais' reach, since the latter obtained 17 percent. This means that the Communists' claim that they could come second and compete with Valery Giscard d'Estaing in the second ballot is not completely gratuitous.

Let us consider it, however, as an unlikely hypothesis. One of its consequences would be that the president would be assured of a triumphal reelection. But democratic debate would gain nothing by this. In any case, Francois Mitterrand could improve his position once the wounds inflicted as a result of Michel Rocard's elimination have been healed.

As far as the immediate future is concerned, it is obvious that this elimination works to Valery Giscard d'Estaing's advantage. According to opinion polls, he will obtain 35 percent of the vote in the first ballot. If the deputy for Yvelines had maintained his candidacy, Giscard d'Estaing would have obtained only 32 percent.

Contrary to a very widely held opinion, Michel Debre's candidacy is more har ful to the outgoing president than to Jacques Chirac. If the deputy for Reunion were to withdraw his candidacy, Valery Giscard d'Estaing's score would reach 38 percent whereas the RPR chairman would gain only 2 points (obtaining 13 points instead of 11). However, as was already noted in October, the sphere of Gaullist influence gains ground whenever the number of Gaullist candidates increases.

Jacques Chirac's chances remain slight. They are even tending to diminish whereas those of Michel Debre are increasing. This probably results from the fact that Marie-France Garaud has become a candidate. President Pompidou's former adviser is starting the race with 2 percent. This is not a negligible score considering the small means at her disposal. It appears that her candidacy has caused no harm to Michel Debre. However, it could prove prejudicial to Jacques Chirac's interests.

All this information, however, may have to be revised. In fact, 35 percent of the people questioned have stated that they could still change their mind between now and the election. Even the undecided no longer belong to the same political group. The announcement of Francois Mitterrand's candidacy has given the Socialist Party a new impetus. On the other hand, the number of undecided people in the UDF and RPR has increased as a result of Michel Rocard's withdrawal. This seems to confirm the view that the deputy for Yvelines could have bitten into the majority electorate.

What does it all matter?--it will be asked--since 72 percent of the French people believe that Valery Giscard d'Estaing will succeed himself and since this forecast has been gathering strength month after month (it was 62 percent in October), especially within the RPR, where a legalist reflex has increasingly been prevailing, a reflex which anyway is being confirmed in all parties, including the Communist Party, to various degrees.

As far as preferences are concerned, they express much more nuanced feelings: 32 percent of the voters want Valery Giscard d'Estaing to win compared with 27 percent in October. Just a remark: This five-point increase has been achieved since Michel Rocard's withdrawal. Within the Socialist Party the proportion of Francois Mitterrand's supporters has increased from 25 percent to 63 percent without, however, his winning over all Socialist voters who formerly supported the deputy for Yvelines.

You will find it easier to understand the divergence between forecasts and preferences if you realize that a candidate's competence and experience are the qualities which count most in the French people's opinion. This criterion favors the outgoing president, irrespective of people's assessment of the results of his 7 years in office.

This picture of the electorate 5 months before the election will certainly have to be adjusted--43 percent of the people interviewed have not yet realized what will be at stake during the election. Many can see only its folkloric aspects. For instance, 62 percent believe that it is a good thing that there are many candidates. Such an attitude would be disconcerting if it were not inspired by a sound reflex. Democracy has its limitations, among which is the fact that everybody can express his opinion. However, the time for serious matters will come.

LE MONDE Report

LD241517 Paris LE MONDE in French 21 Nov 80 p 42

[Text] PARIS-MATCH has published the results of an opinion poll carried out by Public S.A. on 13 through 15 November among 1,000 people, asking--6 months before the presidential election--how they intend to vote. According to this inquiry, Mr Giscard d'Estaing would win in the second ballot by 57 percent (instead of 40 percent) for Mr Mitterrand. According to the various possibilities envisaged, in the first ballot Marchais could obtain 15-16 percent of votes, Chirac between 11 and 14 percent, Debre between 5 and 10 percent, Mrs Garaud between 4 and 6 and the ecology candidate 6 percent.

UK'S THATCHER MEETS PRESIDENT PERTINI, ENDS VISIT

AU241600 Rome ANSA in English 1545 GMT 24 Nov 80

[Text] Rome, 24 Nov (ANSA)--British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher met here today with Italian Head of State Pertini and later went to the Vatican City for a meeting with Pope John Paul II as she wound up a brief visit for talks concentrating on the upcoming summit of EEC leaders in Luxembourg.

At the meeting with Pertini, Mrs Thatcher was accompanied by her foreign secretary, Lord Carrington. Italian Premier Arnaldo Forlani was also present. Sources at the Vatican described her 45-minute session with the Pope as "of a private nature." Before the audience, she also met with Cardinal Secretary of State Agostino Casaroli.

As the British prime minister took her plane back to London, sources at Pertini's office said she had voiced her own and the British people's solidarity for the earthquake that hit southern Italy last night. The meeting with the Italian president was not attended by Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo as protocol usually requires because he has been in the earthquake zone since late yesterday evening.

DEATH TOLL FROM EARTHQUAKE EXCEEDS 1,000

LD242318 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 2200 GMT 24 Nov 80

[Summary] According to unofficial calculations on the basis of data collected by the general command of the carabinieri, the number of dead from the earthquake is over 1,000. This is over an area of over 20,000 square kilometers with a population of about 6 million. Figures change from hour to hour as rescuers dig in the rubble. There are many missing: entire families have left the disaster area in panic and despair. The number of homeless runs into tens of thousands.

A few figures give an idea of the extent of the disaster: 50 dead in Avellino and 30,000 homeless; (Casalza Irpina) is said to have 200 dead and 90 percent of the village has been destroyed; in Balvano, 199 bodies have so far been recovered. In Salerno Province 4 villages have been almost totally destroyed and over 2,000 people are missing; the provisional figure for the number of dead is 400.

The railroads in the earthquake area are not functioning, but the Rome-Naples-Battipaglia service has been restored.

POLICE BREAK ELECTRONICS ESPIONAGE RING

NC221540 Paris AFP in English 1423 GMT 22 Nov 80

[Text] Rome, 22 Nov (AFP)--Italian police today arrested nine electronics technicians on charges of espionage. The nine men, all employees of the Rome-based Selenia electronics and radar manufacturing firm, were caught red-handed by Italian secret service agents as they were preparing to sell blueprints of a new type of radar. It was not immediately known to whom the plans were to have been sold.

The investigation leading to the arrest of the nine was opened two weeks ago by Italian SISMI (military counter-espionage) operatives when the Selenia technicians made contact with a naval officer, the supposed go-between who was to offer their radar blueprints to any interested foreign nation. The officer, Lt Cdr Giorgio Balestieri, pretended to accept and informed Selenia security and the secret service of the scheme.

He then set a date to meet the technicians at a Rome hotel room, telling them to bring the blueprints and the names of their partners. When the nine showed up to clinch the deal, they were arrested.

The new radar system which the technicians had hoped to sell is currently in production at the Selenia factory. Negotiations toward selling the patent to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and the United States are now underway.

Upon searching the homes of the nine technicians, police uncovered portfolios filled with photocopies and sketches of other Selenia equipment. The nine face prison terms ranging from 15 years to life.

The Selenia company, a member of the state institute for industrial reconstruction, is the largest military electronics firm in Italy, with a turnover of 137 million dollars last year and a staff of 6,200. Selenia manufactures various types of electronics equipment, from radar to Aspide missiles and interception and jamming systems, from underwater detection systems to parts for satellites. The firm, which exports products to a dozen countries, has its main factories in the Rome and Naples regions.

PCI'S BOLDRINI DISCUSSES CONTROL OF NATO MISSILES

LD241121 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 16 Nov 80 pp 1, 18

[Vera Vegetti interview with PCI Directorate member and Senate Defense Committee member Arrigo Boldrini: "We Are the Land of a Thousand Nuclear Warheads"--date not given]

[Excerpt] Rome--[Question] Will the cruise missiles pose any particular problems from the civil defense angle?

[Answer] Any new weapons system requires highly specialized personnel, supplies systems, maintenance, and so forth. The particular problem in this instance is the following: Who will install and manage these services for the cruise missiles? We? The Americans? NATO? Obviously, depending on the answer to this question, new political, legal, security and other questions arise. But these are not the only problems....

[Question] What are the other problems?

[Answer] The very serious problem of the secret agreements that will have to govern the new bases. Like it or not, secret agreements have to be reached in military strategy and when these multiply, as in Italy's case, there is a trend toward a dangerous "philosophy" of secret agreements, which poses a threat to the country's democratic life, no less.

[Question] Could you cite an example of this?

[Answer] Certainly. The La Maddalena base for nuclear powered submarines in Sardinia is governed by secret agreements with the Americans. The bases established in the fifties in Puglia for the nuclear IRBMs are covered by agreements so secret that apparently not even the then president of the republic Giovanni Gronchi was informed of them. Some democratic supervision! Here is a real restruction of democracy, moreover in a field as delicate as that of peace or atomic war!

[Question] There was talk, in connection with the cruise missiles, of a "dual key", that is, of the Italian Government's direct participation in decisions regarding the possible future use of the new missiles. Do you believe that the Italian Government has pressed this demand? What is your opinion?

[Answer] Hitherto this too has remained an unanswered question. All that is certain is that (and I quote former Defense Minister Ruffini) "the cruise missiles belong to the United States" and that the Italian Government accepted NATO's decision blindly as far as everything affecting possible controls on the management of the bases is concerned. Someone wrote a few days ago that control of the launch bases will be in Italian hands and that Italy could have what is no better defined than a "right of veto" over the use of the new missiles. But how? Which institutional body would be responsible for this control? The Supreme Defense Council? The government? The prime minister? And how would Parliament be able to exercise its own right os supervision? These are questions which I have already put to the defense minister but which have remained unanswered. They represent unresolved uncertainties regarding the dangers facing the country following another stage in the arms race.

BERLINGUER CALLS FOR INTERNATIONAL INITIATIVES FROM EEC

LD241347 Milan L'UNITA in Italian 20 Nov 80 p 1, 18

[Arturo Barioli report on PCI Secretary General Enrico Berlinguer 19 November address to the European Parliament in Strasbourg: "Berlinguer Proposes New European Initiatives"]

[Excerpt] Strasbourg--The need for EEC Europe to assume a new role on the international scene and to promote initiatives that will help resolve the most tragic world problems was asserted yesterday by Comrade Enrico Berlinguer in the European Parliament. The PCI secretary general was speaking in the debate following the annual report on political cooperation delivered by Chairman of the Council of Ministers Thorn, of Luxembourg.

"This debate," Berlinguer began, "is taking place at a time in international life when there seems to be a more inalienable need than ever for Europe and more particularly our community to take on a new role. I do not believe this was reflected in Chairman Thorn's report--a diligent and deeply considered report, but one lacking pointers and proposals equal to the level of our responsibilities.

"Indeed, hitherto political cooperation among the EEC countries--that is, the efforts to bring about joint foreign policy stances and initiatives--has not been equal to the requirements imposed by the very gravity of the state of international relations and of the vast problems that the world now has to tackle. A few steps and a few attempts have been made recently, but we are still a long way from not only a joint foreign policy but also an effective coordination of initiatives.

"Without this there is little point in lamenting, as some do, the fact that this or that country is prompted to adopt its own initiatives. Indeed, we believe that some of these initiatives--especially in the situation that has come about following the Sovier intervention in Afghanistan and the policy of reprisals--have helped to keep open the paths to a resumption of East-West dialogue, which has had repercussions both in Europe itself (as we have been, for instance, in the prudent stance adopted by many governments and political forces with respect to the crisis that has come about in Poland) and in U.S.-USSR relations, at least regarding the opening of negotiations on medium-range missiles in Europe.

"But of course," Berlinguer continued, "These initiatives would have had much greater influence had they been the expression of a shared will on the part of the Nine. If, instead of looking at the past, we look at the present and the future, the need for such initiatives will become even more apparent to us.

"There is now a need for joint action and a joint initiative with respect to the regime established by the military in Turkey--a regime which is still characterized by the repression of democratic freedoms. We are entirely dissatisfied with Mr Thorn's vague remarks on this subject. We believe that the situation in Turkey is now such that the EEC must announce the suspension of relations of association with Turkey until a fully democratic order has been restored in that country. The entire communist group has presented a draft resolution to this effect.

"There is at present much speculation," the PCI secretary general continues, "about the possible nature of the Reagan presidency's stances. But can Europe passively await the inauguration of the new administration and the definition of its options, or should it not, in this situation of general uncertainty in international relations, clearly indicate its own inalienable options and take consistent initiatives? It is well known that we Italian Communists are not proposing an end to relations with the United States as defined by the Atlantic alliance. At the same time, we do not believe that the EC, if it wants a future, can regard itself as a kind of appendage of the Atlantic pact, as some political forces seem to believe. The Nine have their own role to assert and to perform, and it must not be limited solely to our own continent's problems.

"Of course, detente in Europe is our first objective. In this connection, I support what has been said over the past few days at the socialist international by some of its authoritative representatives who, addressing the new U.S. administration among others, have stressed that detente is an inalienable need for us Europeans. Hence the importance that the Nine undertake to ensure that the current CSCE conference in Madrid proceeds in a balanced way and reaches a positive conclusion with specific decisions including, first and foremost, the convening of an all-European disarmament conference."

Discussing this central issue, the PCI secretary general said:

"We live in a world which spends over $1 billion a day on the arms race--a race which is still inexorable and which can lead only to a general disaster. It is precisely from Europe, which has the greatest concentration of weapons of mass destruction, that the first steps toward halting and reversing this trend can and must originate. We in the European Parliament should appeal to all the governments represented in Madrid, to the United States, the USSR and the countries of the Warsaw and Atlantic pacts to undertake responsibly to recreate, in words and deeds, at least the minimum degree of mutual trust indispensable for seeking security on the road to balanced and controlled arms reduction. The European commitment to detente and disarmament is essential to prevent the two major powers from continuing to be dragged along by the very logic of their antagonism toward an exacerbation which would have disastrous repercussions throughout the world. But a European initiative is also essential to pose the problem of North-South relations in new terms so as to combat famine throughout the world, as our Parliament has undertaken to do. For this initiative to be more than an empty word, it demands both a reduction of arms spending and a start on building a new international order capable of making the development of the vast economically backward areas a basic element in a new kind of economic development.

"There are many signs", Berlinguer said, "in the developing countries that indicate a request that Europe adopt a bold economic and political initiative not tainted by neo-colonialist temptations and ambitions for power. A failure to take this opportunity or to respond to these expectations would imply dooming Europe to abandoning a new world role and thus to decline and an inexorable crisis. The demand for a European political initiative is now comimg particularly from the Middle East. We are being asked to act soon because the overall situation in the region is serious and threatens to explode again. Without a fair solution to the Arab-Israeli conflict there will never be peace in that highly crucial area, whose tensions extend into the Mediterranean and well beyond this sea. Whatever the verdict of the Nine's governments on Camp David, it is now clear that there must be a global peaceful solution based on the recognition of the right to existence and security of all the states of the region, including Israel, and on the assertion of the Palestinian people's right to create their own state. It is to be hoped that on this basis the European Council of the Nine due to meet in Luxembourg in early December will specifically promote, partly on the basis of the information gathered by Mr Thorn's mission, the political initiative merely envisaged at the Venice summit."

In conclusion Berlinguer said: "I have been talking about a European initiative for detente, disarmament and cooperation on our continent and throughout the world. This is a request addressed to the governments but also, as we are well aware, to the political and social forces, especially those that represent the workers movement and the working classes, with their ideals of peace, justice and solidarity. There is broad scope here within which the leftwing forces, irrespective of their diversity, are called on to seek convergences, agreements and even shared outlooks and proposals. We Italian Communists have been committed to this path for some time and will continue to commit ourselves to it with our own specific and autonomous outlook, which is always open to dialogue and exchanges with all the other peace-loving and progressive forces."

DEFENSE MINISTER ON ARMED FORCES' CURRENT ROLE

LD240917 Rome AVANTI in Italian 2-3 Nov 80 pp 1, 4

[Defense Minister Lelio Lagorio article: "More Modern and Efficient Armed Forces at the Country's Service"]

[Excerpts] Today is Armed Forces' Day. The army, navy and air force are commemorating 4 November 1918, anniversary of the Battle of Vittorio Veneto which marked the end of World War I, as far as we were concerned. The "Great War", in the intentions of the most enlightened spirits of what in 1914 was the democratic and progressive interventionist movement (the Trento Socialist Cesare Battisti symbolizes its most noble and ardent aspects), should have been not a military conflict between dominant castes but a people's war to complete the risorgimento, to finally achieve Italian unity and to build a new international order based on the recognition of all nations, equal status among all states, and control by a lofty world alliance (the League of Nations), so that disputes among peoples would never again be resolved through military force.

The history of the armed forces is an important reflection of the country's history. They have been what the country has been. Now, after 30 years of the republic, when the country is suffering an agitated existence but is striving to grow and to thoroughly regenerate its structures, its government methods, its social relations and its habits, the armed forces feel that they need a new blueprint and a new political will to support it; that is, they are aware of the need to progress rapidly toward the final attainment of a two fold and most important objective--to become an agile and modern body, and to base its own organization on the democratic spirit of the republic.

The preconditions for this exist. The officer corps no longer sees its role as that of "centurion". Rather--partly as a result of international experiences in recent years in contact with more efficient military societies with older democratic origins--it knows that the man in command must be capable of understanding, with an open mind, his own time, relations within the armed forces and the armed forces' connections with the most active sectors of the nation; must be capable of perceiving and comprehending the conduct and aspirations of the young people whom the nation puts under his command--in short, an officer-cum-manager; and must be an officer who provides exemplary conduct and character within the advancing democratic society.

At present our military instrument is still below the necessary level of efficiency and therefore credibility. It is an instrument that costs us a great deal but is nevertheless not yet in a position to "produce defense" to the standard of security that the country demands. Unless we transcend this critical point the resources which we devote to the military sector will prove futile. Indeed, efficiency is the prime aim and justification of the military system.

This is a central issue for today's armed forces. Fortunately it is not a matter of revolutionizing national expenditure. This is unnecessary. Indeed, there is already a program and financial base from which to proceed to carry out a more rapid process of armed forces modernization. It dates back to decisions taken in 1975 and 1978, that is, to a time of broad parliamentary understandings. This base need only be protected against severe inflationary erosion, which is something that has not been done in recent years and which must be guaranteed in the future.

With that aim, an efficient military organization, easily integrated with the allied forces, implies guaranteeing our national independence through adequate levels of deterrence; it implies helping to maintain peace and stability, particularly in geographical areas where we must set ourselves a special role to perform, starting with the Mediterranean ; and it implies making possible a more active foreign policy in which the nation's interests are attributed the importance that objectively derives from the level of economic development that Italy has achieved thanks to the efforts of an entire people over several decades. In short, we envision an instrument of security that will constitute a credible reality to support a foreign policy of tranquillity, multidirectional diplomatic initiatives, and solidarity and assistance toward peaceloving countries--a policy aimed increasingly at the quest for peaceful solutions to international conflicts and dangers which will always avert the prospect of entrusting the solution of interstate disputes to the use of weapons.

These are the reflections which the 4 November anniversary prompts among socialists. We are reformists even with regard to the armed forces. That is, we feel committed to observing and defending the most authentic values of our best military tradition. Proceeding from this, we are committed to ensure that the army, navy and air force will become increasingly modern and efficient, and will be the armed forces of the Italian people, of their institutional options and rights, and of their way of life.

PSOE LEADER GONZALEZ ON REAGAN POLICY, NATO

LD240935 Madrid ABC in Spanish 12 Nov 80 p 15

[EUROPA PRESS report: "'We Are Moving Toward an International Bipolarization,' Felipe Gonzalez Asserts"]

[Excerpts] Madrid--Asked about the possible repercussions of Reagan's election as U.S. president, EUROPA PRESS reports that Felipe Gonzalez, secretary general of the Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] and vice president of the Socialist International, declared during a press conference yesterday that, in his opinion, "there will be an attempt at bipolarization in international relations." In the same way the Socialist leader declared that "I have not the slightest doubt that an attempt will be made to divide the world into zones of influence." The development of Reagan's platform is toward a new "Yalta Conference," to divide up not Europe but the world. It does not seem, he added, that the start of this decade will be notable for disarmament.

With regard to the NATO issue, Felipe Gonzalez said that what most concerns him is the fact that the American administration is only working with a hypothesis: that of Spain's integration into NATO. For the Socialist leader his sole hypothesis is put forward because the Spanish Government constantly transmits the idea that the PSOE "still" does not support NATO membership. After referring to the recent declarations by a "Moncloa palace plumber" to the effect that it would suit the PSOE for the issue of NATO membership to be resolved by the Union of the Democratic Center, Felipe Gonzalez emphasized his party's position: "We are not opposed to NATO, but we advocate Spain's nonmembership in NATO and the maintenance of the present status quo." For Felipe Gonzalez our country is better suited to the maintenance of the present situation of a bilateral defense agreement with the United States because this gives it more room to maneuver in international relations.

'COLLEGIAL SECRETARIAT' ADVOCATED TO DEMOCRATIZE PCE

LD240945 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 8 Nov 80 p 13

[EUROPA PRESS report: "Now Is Not the Time for Favorites of Heirs"]

[Excerpt] Oviedo, 7 Nov--Ramon Tamames, Communist deputy and deputy mayor of Madrid, yesterday declared in Oviedo with regard to the latest PCE Central Committee plenum that "matters were discussed very frankly, and I believe that the PCE will emerge renewed from the 10th congress to assume its historic task as the revolutionary party of the masses, with answers to Spain's problems." Tamames was taking part in a debate on the function of financial intermediaries in autonomous communities and introducing his latest book "Introduction to the Spanish Constitution."

With regard to the position of Secretary General Santiago Carrillo in the PCE, Tamames said that "democratization must reach the furthest confines of the PCE. At the plenum," he added, "I put forward a proposal to create a collegial secretariat in opposition to the figure of deputy secretary general, which strikes me as a kind of 'favorite heir,' and now is not the time for either favorites or heirs. I also believe that the collegial secretariat would impart all its validity to the party. Each of its members would tackle a specific task, and there would be a secretary general who would be first among equals."

Ramon Tamames went on to criticize "antidemocratic positions" in the PCE. Asked whether Santiago Carrillo's theses would, "as always," triumph at the congress, he said that "the viewpoint which prevails will be the one that carries most weight at the congress." He added that "now is not the time for bureaucratic centralism or dogmatic hegemony." And he added: "And that does not apply to anyone in particular."

"When there has been such clear opposition to the secretary general's proposal," he continued, "on the part of Catalans, Galicians, Basques and a section of the people of Madrid, and the polemic is open, it is absurd and irrational to try to close it; equally it strikes me as inconsistent to reduce the aims of the PCE congress to a renewal within continuity. I am not at all convinced by change in continuity, as a slogan."

PCE 'Self-Criticism' Needed

LD250947 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 11 Nov 80 p 10

[EUROPA PRESS report: "There Are Flaws in Democratic Centralism"]

[Excerpt] Antoni Gutierrez Diaz, secretary general of the Unified Socialist Party of Catalonia [PSUC], has made some statements in which he takes the view that "what is needed is a full internal democratization of the PCE" and that "this involves self-criticism regarding the existence of flaws in the functioning of democratic centralism"; but he does not advocate its eradication. "Whether or not to appoint a secretary general of the PCE is a question which can only be contemplated within the more general needs of full democratic functioning, meaning both the strengthening of collegial work and the participation of all party organizations in the elaboration of our policy. Therefore, I consider the question of whether or not to have a deputy secretary a false dilemma," Antoni Gutierrez Diaz, secretary general of the PSUC and member of the PCE Central Committee, told EUROPA PRESS.

"The party's responsibilities and its organs," Gutierrez Diaz said, "must be discussed in the form of a style of work, and not vice versa, and that is why I have persistently said and will continue to maintain that the fundamental problem which Communists have posed today is that of guaranteeing the full functioning of our internal democracy. Problems of method are not routine but fundamental political problems."

As some new media have reported [PCE parliamentary deputy] Ramon Tamames has said that "now is not the time for democratic centralism or dogmatic hegemony," and he asked for collegial leadership. Regarding this stance, the PSUC secretary general told EUROPA PRESS: "I believe that the same anxieties that I was expressing are formulated in Tamames' request for collegial leadership. It is another matter that the way to achieve democratic functioning, and thus collective functioning, is through Tamames' proposal, which strikes me as being worthy of consideration provided that it is contemplated within the more general framework to which I referred with regard to the proposal for a deputy secretary."

Asked whether Carrillo finds himself in a difficult situation within the party, the PSUC secretary general declared: "I believe that Santiago Carrillo has played a fundamental role in the antidogmatic transformations of the PCE, but that precisely this very political will which he has mentioned on many occasions has opened up the dynamic of a need for democracy in the party, which must be met if we are to be consistent with our political plans and if we want to make it a great party of Spanish communists who, together with other progressive political and social forces, will succeed in making socialism a reality in democracy and freedom." With regard to the charges of "dirgism" leveled at the PCE leadership, the PSUC secretary general declared: "I believe that the need for the party's full democratization involves self-criticism--which also includes myself--regarding the fact that there are flaws in the functioning of democratic centralism. However, this must not be seen as a personal accusation but as a need for collective change with regard to situations for which we are responsible."

"I would not dogmatize at all with regard to the functioning of a democratic party, or with regard to the continuity of democratic centralism," the communist leader went on. "At the present time, however, it is the law which we have given ourselves, and therefore it must be respected."

ATAKOL CONDEMNS AGREEMENT BETWEEN GREEK CYPRIOTS, FRG

TA241943 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1730 GMT 24 Nov 80

[Text] The minister of foreign affairs and defense, Mr Atakol, said that reports about West Germany granting 10 million marks as credit to the Greek Cypriot administration as the Government of Cyprus has created indignation within the Turkish Cypriot community.

In a statement today, Mr Atakol said that legally and (?constitutionally) the Greek Cypriot community had no right to sign agreements with other governments and agencies binding the whole of Cyprus, and under the 1960 Constitution this agreement was not valid and binding on the Turkish Cypriot Community. Mr Atakol said that the agreement, which has no legal or constitutional basis, was part of the efforts of the Greek Cypriots to give life and legality to the status of the Government of Cyprus to which they were hopelessly adhering. [Text] Turkish-Soviet talks on capacity expansion of the Iskenderun iron and steel plant have begun in Ankara. Talks began on this subject at the Industry and Technology Ministry in Ankara. It has been announced that the Soviet delegation will also visit the Iskenderun iron and steel plant. Following the visit to the plant--constructed by the financial and technical assistance of our neighbor the Soviet Union and Turkey's third largest plant of this kind--the Soviet delegation will return to Ankara to resume talks and sign a new agreement with the officials of the Industry and Technology Ministry.

As will be recalled, in 1978 talks were held with the Soviet Union on the expansion of the Iskenderun plant, and our great neighbor offered all kinds of financial and technical assistance to this end. However, the Demirel government delayed the signing of this agreement for 20 months through all kinds of excuses.

ISRAELI KNESSET VICE PRESIDENT MEETS WITH KREISKY

AU251414 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1139 GMT 25 Nov 80

[Text] Moshe Meron, vice president of the Knesset, the Israeli parliament, has come to Vienna for a short visit. Meron is a prominent member of the Liberal Party, a coalition partner in the Begin government. He has come to Vienna primarily to negotiate here on establishing an Israeli-Austrian parliamentarian group. The only group of this type existing so far in Israel's parliament is the Israeli-German group, of which Meron is chairman. Yesterday the Israeli politician also met Chancellor Kreisky, the first time the chancellor had spoken with a representative of the Begin government in a long time. Although the initiative for the talk had reportedly come from Kreisky himself, the chancellor did not want to comment on it in view of the private nature of the talk. However, Harry Sichrowski talked with Israeli Knesset vice president Meron:

[Begin recording] [Question] Mr Vice President, what can you tell us about your talk with the chancellor?

[Answer] Well, we had a good 1-hour talk in which, however, the differences of opinion were stressed again and again. What I mean is, I could not convince the chancellor that Israel's position is the right one, nor--and this was also stated by the chancellor--did he expect to be able to convince me of the correctness of his opinion. Yet the talk was held in a very good and friendly climate, and we both agreed that there is nothing better than a talk, a dialogue, between people in politics who, even though they may hold different opinions, in the end--as I said to the chancellor--may build a bridge, and some day cross that bridge. Each of us in his own way is taking a very positive approach and each believes that he is building the best bridge.

[Question] Considering that the chancellor is one of the sharpest critics of the Begin government and has now had a talk with you, do you believe that this was a sort of conciliatory gesture on Kreisky's part?

[Answer] I do not know whether it was a conciliatory gesture. I have come to Vienna to inform my colleagues in parliament, in the Austrian parliament, as well as Chancellor Kreisky that in Israel we have founded an Israeli-Austrian parliamentarian group in order to develop friendship and good relations between the two countries, in order to exchange information between our two groups, and if that should lead to an improvement of the sometimes perhaps somewhat tense climate, then I believe that the trip to Vienna was certainly worthwhile.

[Question] But you do not expect it to result in any concrete possibilities of easing tensions, considering that on account of his support of the PLO the chancellor does not have a very good press, a very good public image in Israel?

[Answer] I will certainly take with me to Israel the contents of the talks I have had here and I hope that in spite of everything it will lead to an improvement of the climate between the two governments.

OFFICIALS DISCUSS DETENTE, GOVERNMENT STATEMENT

DW261131 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 2020 GMT 25 Nov 80

[Roundtable discussion with reporters Holtz and Eser and Prof Wolfgang Seiffert, CDU Bundestag Deputy Richard von Weizsaecker, FDP Bundestag Deputy Uwe Ronneburger and Hans-Juergen Wischnewski, SPD Bundestag deputy and deputy SPD chairman; place not given--recorded]

[Excerpts] [Holtz] Mr Wischnewski, I heard nothing concrete in the government statement on the German policy concept of the government coalition. What does it look like?

[Wischnewski] The Federal Government stated that we will not react with delimitation to delimitation. I think that is a definitive principle. We will continue to at least preserve what has been achieved so far, and we will try to develop matters; we realize that we are at present in a difficult situation with regard to this problem.

I agree with the thesis of Professor Seiffert, who said that the existing problems have not been created by the policy pursued between both German states, but that the entire international situation and developments in the neighboring country of the GDR have created the current situation.

Now it is important to use still existing contacts. One must primarily try not to cause any further damage and to proceed in line with the stipulations of the Basic Treaty aimed at the development of normal relations.

[Holtz] How does the Federal Government plan to handle the three concrete demands of the GDR: establishment of embassies, own state citizenship and the Elbe border line?

[Wischnewski] First of all, we must discuss all the problems of mutual interest. The most important existing problem is the special responsibility of both German states with regard to the preservation of peace. Prior to discussing the three points, I would like to state first that people sometimes pretend that these are completely new problems. I know from my own experience that these three points have not been mentioned for the first time, although there has been a longer pause in this respect.

As regards the first point, I regret that I do not agree with Professor Seiffert: This is not only a juridical problem, it is a problem of our Basic Law and thus it is a highly political matter for us.

As regards the second problem, the establishment of embassies, we have a respective contractual agreement with the GDR. This contractual agreement deals with the exchange of permanent missions. If changes should take place, one must discuss this problem in a sensible way. But trying to see the matter from the GDR's point of view, I do not think that it has suffered any damage from the fact that it has a permanent mission and not an embassy. I say that as the person who has tried for 3 years to be the permanent mission's discussion partner in the Federal Republic.

The Elbe border line is another problem. In the meantime we have agreed on all other matters. I see no reason why (?agreement) should be completely impossible. I share the thesis that one should be prepared for talks, but I clearly say where I see no leeway.

There are a number of other problems to be discussed out of mutual interest. An improvement of transport relations would not only serve the interests of the Federal Republic, but also those of the other German state. It would also serve the mutual interest to develop economic relations, which have developed quite well so far due to the mutual interest.

Press Review on Schmidt Speech

DW251322 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0605 GMT 25 Nov 80

[Press review on Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's government statement to the German Bundestag on 24 November]

[Text] The Kassel HESSISCHE NIEDERSAECHSISCHE ALLGEMEINE notes: Probably never before in postwar history has a German chancellor delivered such a lax government statement so listlessly. Helmut Schmidt complied with his duty, nothing more. The members of parliament even showed how bothersome this business was for them. They did not expect, nor learn, anything new; the critical points were contained in all the newspapers days before, and they had been informed on short notice about the coal and steel codetermination compromise. Since there was little to report, the chancellor could have let his thoughts take wing. But he lacked the imagination, he felt a tightness around his chest, just like poor Prince Henry who had been turned into a frog in Grimm's fairytale. The iron clamps of the imperatives simply shackled poor Helmut. How, then, could he be carried away by that spirit and gesture of adventure which makes a Willy Brandt unforgotten despite all later setbacks and defeats?

The editorial writer of the paper DIE WELT emphasizes this point: The opposition now has its chance. During the election campaign it predicted a big change. The lackluster government statement provides it with the unexpected opportunity to do on its part what the chancellor neglected to do: giving the people an orientation.

Reading FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE we find the following comment: What the chancellor presented to the Bundestag Monday was more of a work report, an interim balance sheet in an uncomfortable situation. Probably many people from his own ranks would have anticipated for a government statement something of a more programmatic nature pointing to the future. Helmut Schmidt, however, is dealing particularly carefully with such visions, and rightly so, for his sober look around reflects the course of the times: a peace that has become brittle, growing insecurity and the dangerous slackening of economic dynamics, a situation in which courage for the future is indeed called for. There was surely a touch of self-hypnosis in it.

NEUE RUHR-ZEITUNG, in contract, advocates the following view: Helmut Schmidt does not promise anything that cannot be had. There is no setting of sights for new shores and new horizons. What matters is to preserve what has been attained, here and now, today and tomorrow. Pessimism? Why? Even if the times are becoming more difficult, the prospects are not gloomy. What is striking, though, is that it is the intentions which dominate. There is a big question mark behind many of them. How else could it be? Finally, the laender of the Federal Republic will have a word to put in, and this automatically means a necessity for compromise.

STUTTGARTER ZEITUNG states: Whatever could have been anticipated from a government statement--a bit of zeal, a perspective which at least would force people to think if it fails to justify any hopes, a bit of rhetorical brilliance that would at least encourage his own comrades--all this was missing in rather embarrassing plainness, and not just because the political framework conditions predict a long march through the imperatives, but also because this coalition has obviously succeeded in coming to terms only on the smallest common denominator, and even this laboriously enough. Wherever compromise was achieved, such as in the coal and steel codetermination issue reached at the last minute, it did not represent a well-defined concept but an obvious blend of social-liberal coalition proportionality. In the case of the codetermination issue, by the way, nothing at all has been solved; the problem has been put off for the time being.

BREMER NACHRICHTEN stresses: In foreign policy, too, the chancellor tried to evade the crisis with general statements. Compared with his Ostpolitik and German policy theses, Richard von Weizsaecker's recent Berlin CDU speech, for example, was almost a revelation with regard to deep thought. Like Weizsaecker, Schmidt also carefully steered more toward things all the parties should have in common when it comes to German policy, but he failed to give answers regarding the reasons for the new hardening and delimitation. He did not deal with the thesis that not merely fear of the Polish virus has caused the setback, but Moscow's orders saying that detente and inter-German cooperation are admissible only inasfar as they serve the estrangement of the Germans from the Western alliance.

BERLINGER MORGENPOST criticizes: In Schmidt's government statement Berlin was again given the usual casual position. It sounded pleasant when the chancellor spoke about the cultural life of the city, the Quadripartite Agreement and the commendable tendency for Berlin to help itself. But again the incorporation of the city into a larger national concept is painfully missing. Berlin, as before, is for Schmidt not an issue for a great patriotic effort or special care, it is just a city like Hamburg, Bonn and others.

RHEINISCHE POST writes: After all, Federal Chancellor Schmidt unambiguously expressed himself in favor of a market economy, and he equally clearly spoke up for the Bundeswehr and its public taking of the oath. That must be pointed out, despite all the domestic political disappointment. It will make friends for the chancellor, not only in his own party.

RHEIN-ZEITUNG of Koblenz analyzes the government statement from the following angle: The chance was again not used for some honest stocktaking and some concerted action or for giving detailed information about changed facts. Belittling words such as "we are well off in an international comparison" covered up what is confronting us, and problems were hidden behind formulas. There was no need for Schmidt to be excused for the detailed statement on pensions; one would have liked to hear more about them as well as about the so-called "solution" of the codetermination problem, with which the Social Democrats and the trade union people will not be content. A strategy for difficult years, perspectives and priorities were hard to recognize. The slogan is probably: Carry on!

One more quotation on this issue from SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG: Governments actually can never achieve as much as some people demand from them. Much good will has been ground to powder by reality. The government is always just one of the factors in the reciprocal game of significant social forces. It cannot, therefore, withdraw into adding up individual actions and being willing to compromise. Political leadership is demonstrated by the ability to bring appeals and administration, aims and figures into a reasonable relationship. Individual inclinations toward a certain populism, a conjuring up of humanitarian and cultural images fitted almost like a foreign body into the government statement, like a promise of continuity given with a somewhat resigned pride. "As in the past" and "reintroduce" were oft-used terms in Schmidt's enumeration. If that is all there is, this government is not in the best shape, and not only the government, says SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG.

JAGUARS SENT TO GABON AS CONCERN OVER CHAD GROWS

AB251816 Paris AFP in English 1756 GMT 25 Nov 80

[Excerpts] Paris, 25 Nov (AFP)--French military sources said today that four combat aircraft had arrived in Gabon, and sources close to the Foreign Ministry said the planes had been sent to show that France was taking seriously the conflict in nearby Chad.

The report of the dispatch of the Jaguar jets came one day after Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet expressed concern over reports of the intervention of foreign elements coming from Libya in Chad, a former French colony in central Africa.

The reports to which Mr Francois-Poncet referred were apparently those from U.S. military sources last week that 3,000-4,000 Libyan troops were near Ndjamena, aiding the Goukouni forces. The Chad Government has denied that Libyan troops are fighting alongside its men, but has acknowledged receiving war material from the regime of Col Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi.

The French sources said the dispatch of the Jaguars also showed France's concern with the uneasiness of several unnamed African states over the events in Chad. Mr Francois-Poncet had said France was in close contact with these states--Senegal and Egypt appeared to be among them--and would pay close attention to what it was told in the consultations.

In Niamey, Niger, President Seyni Kountche also met French Ambassador Alain Pierret, who told him of France's concern over the Chad situation.

PCF RESOLUTIONS ON MARCHAIS CAMPAIGN, DISSIDENTS

LD251637 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 7 Nov 80 p 4

[Text] At the end of yesterday's meeting, the PCF Central Committee adopted the following two resolutions:

The Central Committee reviewed the implementation of the decisions of the 11-12 October national conference.

1. The attacking and conquering approach expressed by the Communist candidacy in the presidential election has been given concrete form by the scope and content of Georges Marchais' first initiatives.

By speaking with vigor and clarity on the crucial questions which working women and men encounter in their lives, the Communist candidate placed the political debate for change on its true ground, that of the great problems facing the people: employment; social justice; national development; independence and cooperation; France's security and its action in favor of detente, peace and disarmament; working class access to responsibility; and the construction of a new union for victory.

His remarks gained attention and their resonance shows the great potential of the movement being created around the Communist candidacy.

By all accounts this movement is worrying Giscard d'Estaing and big management. The total censorship of information on the content and success of the first demonstrations of Georges Marchais' campaign prove this, as does the redoubled anticommunist annoyance of the big property owners and their hired mouthpieces.

They are worried because the movement which has been created could thwart their fundamental plan for the presidential election: that of weakening the PCF so as finally to achieve, with PS cooperation, the consensus indispensable to them for their policy of national and social regression.

They are not managing to gain acceptance for this consensus, and this is fortunate for the working people and the country because the situation has become intolerable for millions of people. Powerful, diverse and combative struggles are developing at a higher level with the PCF's determined and total support.

A new idea has since been launched, and launched well: The idea that change depends on the PCF's place and importance in national life.

All those who refuse to submit and resign themselves to the crisis, all those who want change find the Communist candidate's proposed approach a solid point of support for immediate struggle and for a rally for change.

This is a new, daring, overt approach which depends on the intervention of the working people and youth to achieve as quickly as possible and to develop as far as possible those democratic changes which will advance our country along the path of French-style socialism.

This is an approach which takes account of all the experience gained and of all that change means in France with a worsening crisis and the profound democratic reforms which are indispensable for getting out of that crisis.

This is the approach of the 22nd and 23rd congresses. Georges Marchais' book "Hope for the Present" is popularizing that approach with a great strength of belief, which makes it of prime importance to read and distribute his book during the present battle.

This approach gives all those who want to act for change and union some historically unprecedented trump cards.

It is up to each cell and to each of the 700,000 Communist women and men to grasp these cards and, with their candidate Georges Marchais, to make themselves their bold and active bearers for progress and victory.

To this end the Central Committee defined the responsibilities and tasks of all the party's organizations in the coming weeks. It stressed the scope of the efforts required if we are indeed to keep in mind all that is at stake.

In this regard the Central Committee took stock of the campaigns undertaken to distribute "Hope for the Present," L'HUMANITE and REVOLUTION and for national subscription and recruitment. It insisted on the importance and urgency of the battle to induce working women and men and young people to register on the voting lists, which close on 31 December.

The Central Committee also proceeded to an exchange of views on the social, economic and political proposals which Georges Marchais will soon present to public opinion.

[Signed] The PCF Central Committee, Paris, 6 November

2. The Central Committee examined the decision of the Bouches-du-Rhone federation committee to expel Jean Kehayan from the PCF ranks after he adopted the positions of the PCF's direct opponents in essential political spheres and stated that he was setting himself the goal of weakening the party's positions in the presidential election. The Central Committee ratified the decision to expel Jean Kehayan. Furthermore, the Central Committee adopted the stances of the 12th Arrondissement Committee and of the Paris Federation Committee which stated that by making an increasing number of statements violently hostile to PCF policy and by finally deciding to become the paid assistant of Hersant's and Louis Pauwel's FIGARO-MAGAZINE, Jean Elleinstein has left the party, its organization and its policy.

MARCHAIS ON MITTERRAND 'ABANDONMENT' OF LEFT UNION

LD251547 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 6 Nov 80 p 4

[Excerpts] Commenting on one of the key passages in Francois Mitterrand's latest book during Tuesday evening's "Great Debate" program, Georges Marchais was able to affirm that the Socialist leader "now reveals in his book the essential reason for the abandonment of the Union of the Left policy and of the Joint Program: His refusal to work with the Communists on the country's affairs."

...When calling this affair to mind Georges Marchais affirmed on Tuesday during "The Great Debate": "The PS was even less entitled to abandon the Union of the Left policy insofar as the PCF had changed greatly and made a considerable effort to determine a democratic path toward socialism and to proceed toward a socialism which itself would be democratic. We affirmed loudly and clearly that the socialist societies--neither the Soviet, nor the Chinese nor indeed the Cuban--were no model for us. There is no model. There is the socialist experience and we want to build a French socialism which will take account of our traditions.

"This extraordinary step forward by the PCF on these essential problems could only have been conducive to maintaining the union between the Socialists and us, and this was the precise moment chosen by Francois Mitterrand to abandon it. This is no chance. The stakes were extraordinarily high in 1978; it was a question of changing the situation in France with a government including Communist ministers... which would not have been without repercussions in a Europe in crisis.

"This is the reason why the PS, which is not free, renounced the union by order of the Socialist International.

"At the same time the Socialist Soares in Portugal created the conditions for the right to return to power and at the same time the Socialist Craxi in Italy, despite all the PCI's advantages which you recognize, has entered into a government with the Italian right and not with the Communists.

"European social democracy does not want change; its objective is the loyal administration of capitalism."

And Georges Marchais concluded on this point, affirming that the Communists, for all that, had not renounced the union but, by drawing on the lessons of the past, were proposing a new path, breaking with leadership accords and founded on popular struggles, raising the working peoples' level of awareness and strengthening the PCF.

PCF TO WITHDRAW FROM SECOND ROUND BY-ELECTION

LD241446 Paris Domestic Service in French 1400 GMT 24 Nov 80

[Text] Didier Lecas has interviewed Andre Lajoinie, member of the PCF Politburo, on the results of the first round of yesterday's legislative by-elections, and learned that in the second round the Communist Party will withdraw in favor of the Socialist candidates who came in first yesterday. But what is true for these by-elections is not necessarily true for the forthcoming presidential elections: In 1981, the PCF will make a decision on its attitude to the second round on the evening following the first round.

TOLL FROM EARTHQUAKE EXCEEDS 2,000 DEAD

Outside Aid Organized

LD251656 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1600 GMT 25 Nov 80

[Summary] According to the latest data provided by prefectures, the number of dead exceeds 2,000 and over 2,000 are injured. Another 3 tremors were registered at 1059, 1228 and shortly after 1500. The intensity was of the fifth grade on the Mercalli scale, all having the same epicenter. Other buildings collapsed at Avellino and Salerno. At Avellino, the municipality and hospital collapsed and at Salerno the headquarters of the fire brigade, which was already damaged, was abandoned.

New reports are arriving on inhabitated centers which have been particularly hard hit by the earthquake. Another community which has been completely devasted is San Mango Sul Calore in Avellino Province. Some 800 houses collapsed here and so far 27 bodies have been found. It is expected that at least another 100 bodies are beneath the ruins.

The government is to meet tomorrow to undertake special measures to help the earthquake-stricken. In the meantime, aid is arriving from home and abroad. Austrian aid, with equipment to accommodate hundreds of people, has left Austria for Italy aboard 45 railway cars. The Yugoslav Red Cross has announced that an air bridge will be established to transport tents and food. West Germany is sending tents for 1,000 people, along with a field hospital, doctors and nurses. A French team specializing in rescue work is on the way. Britain is sending 200 tents, 5,000 blankets and 300 million lire.

More on Conditions

LD251714 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1630 GMT 25 Nov 80

[Summary] A meeting of the authorities has been held at Potenza to review the situation in the earthquake area. It is estimated that some 200,000 people are homeless. The main railway lines are in operation. Those still interrupted are: Beneventoa-Foggia, Benevento-Avellino-Sant'andrea-Mercato-San Severino and Battipaglia-Potenza. The motorway from Rome to Naples has been cleared of obstacles. Those who do not need travel by car should avoid the area altogether especially as bad weather has set in and there is a possibility of landslides.

The Southern Military Command has mobilized another 6,000 soldiers who will be sent to the earthquake area to help in the rescue operations. In Naples, there are long lines in front of shops, banks and gasoline stations. A demostration by the homeless was held in Naples this morning to protest the slowness of help. At Poggioreale jail an inmate was stabbed to death during an attempted rebellion after the tremor.

SA CARNEIRO ON GOVERNMENT'S 'POLITICAL STANCE'

LD260933 Lisbon DIARIO DE NOTICIAS in Portuguese 20 Nov 80 pp 3, 4

[Report on Portuguese Prime Minister Sa Carneiro's 19 November speech in the National Assembly: "Respect for Minorities and the Opposition's Rights"]

[Excerpt] "The government and its parliamentary majority regard respect for minorities and the opposition's rights as a fundamental aspect of their political philosophy," Prime Minister Sa Carneiro stated when speaking in parliament yesterday to seek from the plenum a vote of confidence for the period up to the formation of the new government, immediately after the taking of office by the president of the republic elected in December. And continuing, he emphasized that "without debasing the democratic power with which they have been invested by the people's votes, the government and its majority will always be open to dialogue with the democratic forces opposing them, with the social forces and with the mass of the public."

In his speech, the prime minister, after greeting "the elected deputies, who are as a whole the symbol of the nation's representation," began by stating that "a new legislative period is beginning, and the Assembly of the Republic has undergone a renewal through elections. The parliament before which the government presented itself last January was therefore different in its composition. And although the majority supporting the government now finds itself strengthened, the most elementary respect for this chamber would oblige the government to impose upon itself readiness to come here to be judged in its plans and its program."

"It could be theoretically accepted that this parliamentary judgment should be made on a government and a program formally emanating from a political procedure similar to that which in accordance with the constitution governs the formation of governments, with swearing in by the president of the republic and a subsequent parliamentary debate on the government's program. It would then be sufficient for the government, in order to find itself fully exercising its mandate, for that program not to be rejected by the Assembly of the Republic.

"This would undoubtedly have been the procedure followed but for the fact that we are just a few weeks away from the election for the presidency of the republic.

"According to the constitution, the prime minister is politically responsible to the president of the republic. For our part, we believe that that the elected president should have full scope to express unambiguously, within the constitutional limits, the political significance of his own election with respect to the government. The stance of a prime minister who did not take the initiative of tendering his resignation after the election of a president would certainly be one devaluing the president's role.

"This is what, together with the entire government, I propose to do as soon as the person whom the Portuguese people elect as president of the republic takes office before this chamber. The majority will then be in a position to express an opinion, as the other parties represented in the Assembly of the Republic will do, on the personality or personalities whom they suggest to the president-elect for the post of prime minister. And in addition, the president will be able, at the latter's proposal, to freely express an opinion on the composition of the government.

"We are thus seeking, within the principles laid down in the constitution, to fulfill two democratic imperatives of our legal system: that of parliamentary legitimation and that of political responsibility to the president of the republic.

"But if our decision respects principles, it also stems from a logic of political pragmatism and of better safeguarding the national interest.

"Political pragmatism, because in this way we avoid the superfluity of the same parliamentary majority creating within the brief space of 2 months two legally distinct governments for purely formalistic reasons. Better safeguarding the national interest, because in this way it becomes possible to proceed to prepare and submit to the relevant bodies the draft plan and budget for 1981, on whose importance for the country I will refrain at this moment from commenting.

"These are, in short, the reasons which have led the government to seek a vote of confidence from the Assembly of the republic under the present circumstances."

The prime minister then proceeded to examine what he termed "some aspects of the government's general political stance," beginning by asserting that "Portugal in 1980 reached a plateau of government stability, full of democratic prospects and constructive possibilities." And he continued:

"The results of the 5 October election confirm that this political situation is in keeping with an aspiration of an increasing number of Portuguese people. And so it is that the majority deputies now represent a number of voters exceeding those whose viewpoints are upheld by the political parties in opposition. And if I emphasize this fact, it is merely because a different situation was very recently the subject of persistent speculation by those parties. The political majority in this chamber is not only larger than before in terms of deputies but also corresponds to a broader social and political base than that represented by the numerical addition of the electorates of the parties seated on the opposition benches.

"It is therefore legitimate for us to assert that if the principle of democratic alternation represents a specific irreplaceable value of democracy already experienced by the Portuguese people, the need for government and political stability constitutes a strong and mobilizing motivation of the people in the present historical stage of our collective life.

"This is a fundamental fact of the present political situation. Important and increased responsibilities for a government supported by the majority--that is, for a Democratic Alliance government--result from it. The government is aware of this increase in responsibilities to the Portuguese people as a whole, as a national government, and in the balance among the institutions, as a democratic government.

"The government confidently expects from all Portuguese people a renewed commitment to the tasks of the nation's social, cultural and economic progress. As a country, we possess an important political base for enhancing our democratic way of life, for achieving full political democracy soon, for boldly laying the foundations of greater social justice, for expressing more vigorously the creativeness of civil society, for implementing the reforms and modernization and for carrying further the results and energies of freedom. However, we associate with the increased responsibilities to the Portuguese people as a whole those which the government fully accepts with respect to the other democratic institutions, respecting the principle of the separation of powers and the constitutional legitimacy of each state body.

"The government does not confuse political convergence or solidarity among state bodies emanating from the people and alleged dangers of a concentration of powers. There is no danger of a concentration of powers around the government or its majority of parliamentary support in Portugal. We sincerely espouse the principle of separation of powers. Would that all those who seem to be worrying about such dangers could have set the example which we have already set and are seeking to continue in this respect!

"But if by mentioning hypothetical dangers of a concentration of powers the aim is to build in Portugal a system of opposing powers in the fine revolutionary manner which we are well acquainted, then it is as well that we should assert quite clearly that the government and its majority regard such a plan as fundamentally antidemocratic, politically irresponsible and morally repugnant. And especially when these alleged dangers are being proclaimed by those who in the last election campaign filled the walls with the slogan: "One Government, One Majority, One President." I am not questioning the political perspicacity of the strategy, which we ourselves launched in 1979, but I am surprised that those who took it over should feel obliged now to warn us on their own or through intermediaries against the so-called dangers of the 'dictatorship of the majority.'

"The government, as the body responsible for the conduct of the country's overall policy, views itself as guarantor of citizens' rights and freedoms, and without prejudice to the judiciary's own role and the exercise of the Assembly of the Republic's proper supervisory activity, has no need of any forms of tutelage directly or indirectly aimed at calling into question its democratic probity."

After stating that "the government intends to soon submit to the National Planning Council and then to the Assembly of the Republic the draft medium-term planning options," Sa Carneiro asserted: "Without seeking to anticipate the debate on this important document, I can state, however, that we propose, despite the uncertainties looming over the international economic situation, to guarantee the conditions necessary for national wealth to be able to increase in real terms at an average rate exceeding 4 percent per year. Increased investment must constitute an important factor for that growth. We are convinced that, being able to benefit from a high level of political stability, the country will have optimum internal conditions for making significant investments in creating jobs, improving the balance of trade and in technological development."

"The struggle against the internal causes of inflation and the gradual reduction of its rate will represent an important aim of the plan. Our aim is that the inflation rate in Portugal in 1984 should not exceed the average rate of the European Community countries.

"The struggle against unemployment and the high cost of living represents an important manifestation of the way in which the government is seeking to subordinate its draft development strategy to imperatives of a social and humanitarian nature. This subordination will also be reflected overall in the constant concern to associate with the policy of progress and prosperity the requirements dictated by the aim of improving the Portuguese people's quality of life, protecting the environment and enhancing a realistic and harmonious cultural policy.

The medium-term plan will certainly constitute the map guiding our country's development within a perspective of modernization, correcting regional, personal and functional imbalances, exploiting our own resources and heading toward European integration.

"The country is beginning to understand that the option in favor of the EEC is, more than a challenge to our diplomatic ability, a real driving force for radical economic, social, cultural and legislative transformations in the domestic sphere. The structural adjustment of our economy and of society itself to the challenges posed for us by this fundamental choice of our foreign policy is a priority imperative of the next few years. The government wants this watchword--"heading toward Europe"--to become a powerful stimulus to our creative talent as a people. It contains the most important key to the process of change and modernization which we are seeking to promote in the name of the popular mandate with which we have been invested.

Henceforth, and at the same time as continuing our efforts to achieve externally the best possible conditions for Portugal's entry into Europe, we will have to accept all the consequences which these efforts require of the Portuguese people. It is a gigantic task which requires broad participation by all concerned. We cannot leave to the processes of improvisation the responsibility for carrying it out. It will be legitimate to seek from everybody--employers' associations, trade unions, political parties, autonomous regions, local authorities, public officials and the government--a useful contribution to the changing of outlooks and working habits which we will have to achieve, making in time the decisions necessary for everybody's cooperation to result in convergent, rational and significant action in favor of the reforms which we must introduce and of the rate of progress which we must promote.

"However, the Portuguese people and the Assembly of the Republic are aware that the European option does not exhaust on its own the whole of the fundamental priorities of our foreign policy."

The international situation and "the basic guidelines of the government's defense policy" were other highlights of Sa Carneiro's speech, it being asserted that "the present government will continue to contribute, as far as is possible within the country's means, to peace and security in the world, working in favor of the cohesion and solidarity of the Atlantic alliance and acting in international bodies in a manner consistent with that aim. We wish to see increasing social justice established in international relations, and we will not fail to consider, also within this perspective, the intensification of our relations with the peoples of the Portuguese-speaking African states."

"The basic guidelines of defense policy will not be changed and will be consistent with the analysis which we make of the international situation and the needs resulting from national dignity and independence. In this connection we will continue to work to prepare for the end of the period of constitutional transition in which we are living, contributing to the greater professional enhancement of the armed forces. We are aware that the factors of crisis in the international situation are continuing to intensify. The Soviet invasion of Afghanistan constitutes a harsh blow to the prospects offered by the strategy of detente. The war between Iraq and Iran has brought further difficulties into the already complex problem of oil supplies--difficulties which directly affect our country. Last, the democratic and humane hope with which we are following events in Poland does not prevent us from recalling time and again the cases of Czechoslovakia and Hungary.

"The international situation is therefore not of a nature to allow us to cherish excessive optimism or even confident certainties about its future evolution. However, the Portuguese people do not have sufficient grounds for harboring defeatism or morbid pessimism. For its part, the government will know how to maintain calm and coolness of judgment in order not to disregard realities and at each moment to take the decisions or the initiatives best in keeping with the national interest."

EANES SPEAKS AT CEREMONY MARKING 25 NOV ABORTIVE COUP

LD260124 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2035 GMT 25 Nov 80

[Excerpts] A military ceremony was held this morning at the No. 1 training airfield in Maceda, Ovar, to mark the fifth anniversary of the 25 November event [when Ramalho Eanes directed the suppression of an attempted leftwing military uprising]. The ceremony was attended by the president of the republic, Acting Chief of Staff of the Armed Forces Gen Lemos Ferreira, several high-ranking army, navy, air force, national republican guard and police officers, members of the Council of the Revolution and of the government, foreign military attaches, the defense minister, who represented the prime minister, the president of the Supreme Court and other military and civilian dignitaries.

Following an address by Gen Lemos Ferreira, Gen Ramalho Eanes, speaking as head of state and supreme commander of the armed forces, said in part:

[Begin recording] Five years have elapsed since liberty and democracy triumphed in our country. Five years have elapsed since we pledged to ensure a stable transition, without deviations, from the 25 April Military Movement to the complete and unconditional return of political power to the legitimate representatives of the Portuguese people, chosen in free elections. Perhaps they have been a difficult 5 years, (?but after all) they have been 5 years in which we showed ourselves capable of providing, with calm and determination, an answer to those who were proposing that the armed forces should serve cliquish and private interests. They have been 5 years in which the Portuguese armed forces have shown themselves capable of fulfilling the democratic responsibility of the man who staged the 25 April revolution. Today we can say with pride and confidence, with the same determination we have displayed in difficult situations, that we have fulfilled our mission and honored our pledge. Today, the tasks of recovery and normalization attained, respecting in all spheres the exigencies of a pluralist democracy and fully assuming the pledge dictated by the vote of the people, we can look with confidence to the future, to development and modernization work.

Not all believed that this would be possible. Not all understood that the armed forces are only worthy of the people they defend when they subordinate themselves, in all circumstances, to the democratic legitimacy which is defined in a free vote. These individuals have ceased to belong to the military institution. [sentence indistinct] But the lesson we have learned from the acts of those who detracted from their pledge to serve democracy will be a guideline for all members of the armed forces--that (?in Portugal they have) to serve democracy. The armed forces will continue to play their role within the (?democratically institutionalized framework) against any type of tatalitarian attacks, from whatever source or with whatever justifications. Subordinated to the political power, the armed forces (?will respect) the will of the people as expressed irrevocably at the polls. It is not up to the armed forces to interpret the will of the Portuguese people or to replace the free verdict of this will, which is affirmed through the ballot. It is incumbent on the armed forces to serve the will of the people, whatever that will is, as long as it is expressed democratically and pluralistically. Both the 25 April and the 25 November events were staged for this purpose. [end recording]

MADEIRA, AZORES COMMUNIQUE ON CONSTITUTIONAL REFORM

LD230844 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 0001 GMT 23 Nov 80

[Text] The regional governments of Madeira and Azores have decided to set up a joint committee to study the question of the revision of the constitution insofar as it will affect the two archipelagos. This was one of the results of the official 4-day visit to the Azores by the head of the Madeiran executive, Alberto Joao Jardim.

According to the final communique on the visit, released this evening in Ponta Delgada, the governments of the two autonomous regions take the view that the forthcoming revision of the constitution must include the enlargement of autonomous powers and must therefore specify the areas of legislative jurisdiction of the organs of sovereignty of the Madeira and Azores territories.

The communique, read by Alberto Joao Jardim, continues:

[Begin recording] The joint consideration of some of the problems currently confronting the governments of the two autonomous regions has led to the conclusion that the autonomy process must make new and urgent advances during the mandate of the regional institutions and organs of sovereignty that has just begun.

There is no justification for misunderstandings or procrastination of any kind after such a clear electoral mandate has been conferred upon us, bearing evidence to the fact that the process of autonomy for the two archipelagos has become an integral part of the national blueprint chosen by the Portuguese people, and to the national priority that must be given to their development in view of the particular significance acquired by Madeira and Azores in our country's new European context.

Furthermore, the governments of the two autonomous regions believe that this country's highest leaders cannot but be aware of both the role played by the Azores and Madeira in the defense and preservation of the true roots of the Portuguese people and in the positive confirmation of the viability of the Social-Democratic blueprint, but also of the qualitative importance of the two archipelagos to the international recognition of Portugal's relevant world role. [end recording]

Alberto Joao Jardim also reiterated the intention of the two autonomous regions to strengthen their ties of active solidarity which should in practice take the form of a resolute action against any possible attempt at restoring centralist practices.

DENKTAS NOT INFORMED ON WALDHEIM PROPOSAL FOR TALKS

TA251450 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1215 GMT 25 Nov 80

[Text] President Denktas said that he did not have any information about a minideal for the solution of part of the Cyprus problem proposed by the United Nations. He was commenting on press reports to the effect that the United Nations secretary general, Mr Waldheim, had proposed on 31 October both to the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus and to the Greek Cypriot side the reopening to civilian settlement of part of Varosha under United Nations auspices and taking of practical measures aimed at creating an atmosphere of mutual security between the two communities. President Denktas reiterated that he did not have any information on the Waldheim formula for the solution of the Cyprus problem.

O AGON Comments on Proposal

NC260754 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 26 Nov 80 p 2

Positions" column: "The Mini Agreement"]

[Text] We cannot confirm the accuracy of reports that Greece and Turkey agree or favor the idea of a miniagreement on the question of Famagusta and of the promotion of practical measures of confidence. However, bearing in mind that today's rumor is tomorrow's news, we wish to make clear our attitude on this question. Whether or not a miniagreement on these two issues would be a positive element is dependent on the contents of the agreement.

Thus, if this intermediate agreement does not forestall the final solution of the problem, we do not see anything negative in it. If this will be an agreement for the resettlement of the inhabitants of Famagusta under conditions of security and with a provision that in the future they will not become hostages or the object of blackmail, then the agreement is welcomed. Moreover, if the practical measures for the restoration of confidence will not make it diffucult to reach an honorable solution in the future, these are also welcomed.

It must also be stressed that the question of Famagusta and of the practical measures do not constitute the entire Cyprus problem. That is, the basic aim is to reach a total agreement. Thus, whatever intermediate agreement is found, it must not diminish our efforts for a final package solution. On the contrary, it must serve to intensify these efforts.

RAUF DENKTAS CRITICIZES CYPRUS' UN ABSTENTION VOTE

NC261141 Nicosia BOZKURT in Turkish 25 Nov p 1

[Text] Nicosia--TFSC President Rauf Denktas has stated that if the Greek Cypriots continue to use the title of "the Cyprus Government" against the Turkish Cypriot community, a title they have usurped through imposture and violence, they will be blocking the way to peace.

The full text of President Denktas' statement in this matter is as follows: "In the United Nations, 122 countries condemned the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan, 22 countries voted against and 12 countries abstained. The Greek Cypriot administration, which deceitfully claims to represent [the whole of] Cyprus in the United Nations, has chosen to be one of the abstainers. We deem it our duty to emphasize the fact that this vote does not, by any means, represent Cyprus as a whole. It represents only the Greek Cypriot community.

"The Greek Cypriot delegate who occupies the 'Cyprus' seat in the United Nations as a result of imposture and force of arms, has no right to talk or vote on behalf of the entire island. The situation being what it is, the letter which this imposter has sent to other countries explaining why it has abstained is nothing but a strong provocation as far as we are concerned. We strongly protest before the whole world this imposter and the Greek Cypriot leadership who present the Cyprus dispute as having begun after 1974, and who liken the legitimate intervention of the Turkish Army--which liberated the northern part of Cyprus from Greek occupation, which restored human rights and dignity and which brought peace to the island--to the occupation of Afghanistan by the Soviet Union which has destroyed human rights and enslaved an entire nation."

DENKTAS ADDRESSES TURKISH, GREEK CYPRIOT GROUPS IN KARPAS

TA251459 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1215 GMT 25 Nov 80

[Text] President Denktas has said that the Turkish Cypriot community wants a lasting and honorable peace which will prevent the repetition of the past and be completely closed to enosis. He was speaking to villagers yesterday during the tour of the Karpas villages and was asked about rumors of concessions and pressures. He said the principles of the Turkish Cypriot community are clear and the community is insisting on its founder partner rights and the rights to maintain its security in its own zone.

President Denktas said the aim of the exchange of population agreement reached in 1975 was not to give the Turkish Cypriots of the south a chance to visit the north for a short time. He stressed that the agreement was meant to accord safety to the Turkish Cypriots who had lived with fear of massacres for 11 years, and to lay the foundation of the bizonal federation.

He repeated that the Turkish Cypriots want a peace which will respect this agreement. He said negotiations on such a peace were continuing and there will be give-and-take for both sides. He stressed that an agreement on a false federation where the Greek Cypriot side could establish its majority rule would not be accepted. He stated that the Cyprus intercommunal talks were continuing in a good atmosphere, but a stage where results could be obtained had not yet been reached.

During his tour of the Karpas villages, President Denktas also visited the Greek Cypriots living in the area. When the Greek Cypriots complained that the Greek Cypriot administration is preventing their children, who are attending schools in the south, from coming to visit them during their holidays, President Denktas said that this was no fault of the Federated State Government. He said the Greek Cypriot administration prevents these children from signing their entry papers to the north for the purpose of exploiting the situation in their propaganda campaign. He stated that thousands of people entered and left the Federated State every year and all signed such papers in accordance with the laws enacted by the state. He stressed that these laws could not be set aside.

President Denktas assured the Greek Cypriot families that their problem would be brought to the attention of the United Nations officials and that the Federated State officials would work to overcome the difficulties being created by the Greek Cypriot administration to prevent these children from visiting their families during their holidays.

I KATHIMERINI INTERVIEWS PERTINI ON RESULTS OF TALKS

AT251535 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 25 Nov 80 p 7

["Exclusive interview" with Italian President Alessandro Pertini by I KATHIMERINI editor Nikos Simos--date, place not given]

[Excerpt] I KATHIMERINI: Mr President, how do you assess the results of the talks and contacts you had in Athens? What is your general conclusion about these contacts?

Pertini: My talks first with President Karamanlis and then with the foreign minister were very good. I had two meetings with Karamanlis and I can say that they were very useful for consolidating closer Greek-Italian relations. I found Karamanlis to be a very sincere, honest man, a splendid man, well prepared and with great political experience. I think that with his prestige and his past, your president, aided by Greece's current position--which is a very strategic position--will be able to do much for peace because he is a politician who desires peace as I do. He works for peace as I do. We agree totally on this point. We also spoke about the Cyprus problem and it seems to me that his manner of approaching it is very reasonable. In my opinion, he is right in this because he wants, like me, to strengthen European unity.

Greece will become a full member of the Community and you know that it is especially we Italians who have supported Greece's request to accede to the European Community. We now also desire the accession of Portugal and Spain.

I KATHIMERINI: During the negotiations for Greece's accession to the Community, a possible competition between Greek and Italian agricultural produce was mentioned. How do you now judge the coexistence of these products in the same market?

Pertini: It is true that problems may arise between my country and Greece especially concerning agricultural production. Well, for the sake of European unification everybody must pay a price. After all, through the concluding agreements we shall find a way to surmount all obstacles encountered on our way. There will be no problems that will impede the cordial and honest cooperation of Italy and Greece. I leave Athens very satisfied with the talks I have had with the Greek leaders because I have recognized the understanding which the Greeks show toward us and their real desire to especially strengthen their bonds with Italy. After all, our viewponts coincide whether it is with regard to the alliance between Italy and Greece or European unification or the preservation of peace in the world.

I KATHIMERINI: In his address during the dinner he gave for you, President Karamanlis spoke about Europe's "dangerous dependence." Do you adopt this viewpoint and how do you think that European unification can be implemented so that our continent may not be crushed between the two superpowers?

Pertini: I spoke with Karamanlis about this problem and we share the same opinion. First of all, we must implement and perfect European unification which has not yet taken place because, while Greece will join the community on 1 January, Spain and Portugal are still outside. However, this European unity should be a truly solid unity whether at the political, economic or social level.

However, I want to make it clear that in this unified structure the members should participate with equal rights and obligations because we truly do not want a unified Europe to be guided or governed by directorates. All states in unified Europe should participate through their popular and economic power and all should be equal. For instance, with regard to population and I could say with regard to economic strength, Greece is weaker than Italy. Italy is weaker than Germany and in its turn Germany is stronger than the other European states. This, however, does not mean a thing. What counts is the presence of every state within the European union.

For this reason it is obvious that if we want to implement European unification we should work to strengthen it, devoting to it all of our strength and faith.

PASOK'S PAPANDREOU DEPARTS FOR OFFICIAL VISIT TO UK

AT241408 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1230 GMT 24 Nov 80

[Text] Leader of the official opposition, PASOK chairman Andreas Papandreou, departed this morning for London on a 5-day official visit. During his stay in London Papandreou will have talks with British Prime Minister Mrs Thatcher, Secretary of State for Foreign & Commonwealth Affairs Lord Carrington, new leader of the Labor Party Foot, Lord Privy Seal Gilmour and other personalities of the British political world.

In addition, Andreas Papandreou will speak at St. Anthony College of Oxford University on foreign policy issues. The leader of the official opposition is being accompanied by PASOK parliamentary representative Kharalambopoulos.

Statement Before Departure

AT251439 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1930 GMT 24 Nov 80

[Excerpts] Leader of the official opposition and PASOK Chairman Papandreou today began an official visit to Britain. Before departing for London, Papandreou made the following remarks concerning his trip:

I accepted the invition from the British Government with great pleasure and interest. During this trip we shall be given the opportunity to discuss with those in the highest ranks of British political life both bilateral issues which concern Britain and Greece and issues that concern European developments in general--EEC, detente, armament--upon which the prosperity of the people of Europe truly depends.

I am visiting Britain, Papandreou went on to say, during a really difficult period which is especially significant internationally. With Ronald Reagan's rise to power, serious questions have emerged concerning the course of detente and disarmament. It has now become somewhat vague as to whether we are heading toward a hardening, an intensification of the confrontation between the two superpowers, or whether there are indeed some prospects for peace in this area. Peace not only depends upon the development of these issues but also, I believe, on the internal, economic, social and political course of the West European countries.

Of course, Papandreou continued, in addition to these general issues we shall also discuss the Cyprus question because, as I recall, Britain is a guarantor power on the basis of the Zurich agreement as we also are, despite the fact that we have not utilized the rights that have been given to us in this agreement. Consequently I look forward, Papandreou concluded, to a very interesting and rich trip from the viewpoint of obtaining information and a deeper understanding of the period we are traversing.

In reply to a question regarding his future trips abroad Papandreou said that he has an invitation from Romanian President Ceausescu to which he will reply in December, before the debate on the budget in the Chamber of Deputies, and an invitation from Fidel Castro to visit Cuba early next year.

TRIAL OF ALPASLAN TURKES OPENS IN CIVILIAN COURT

TA251843 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 25 Nov 80

The indictment prepared by the Ankara public prosecutor's office was read during the hearing. The indictment claims that Turkes insulted and showed contempt for the moral entity of the government during news conference on 4 October 1978 in Ankara.

After the indictment was read, Turkes made a statement. In his statement, Turkes said that he did not insult the government during his news conference. The trial was then postponed to a later date to allow the prosecutor to express his views on the merits of the case.

Prosecutor Requests Turkes Sentence

NC251408 Paris AFP in Engish 1357 GMT 25 Nov 80

[Text] Ankara, 25 Nov (AFP)--A Turkish court prosecutor here today requested a 1 to 6 year prison sentence for Alpaslan Turkes, chairman of the extreme right wing Nationalist Action Party (NAP), for "insulting the government."

Mr Turkes, 63, a retired colonel arrested 2 days after the September 12 military coup, arrived for trial in an army jeep surrounded by police vehicles and an armoured troop transport. The prosecutor recalled that Mr Turkes said in a press conference in October 1978 that the government was "either incapable or is protecting anarchists and assassins." Mr Turkes replied that four members of his party had been killed the day before. The military regime has detained the heads of all four main parties for trial on charges of contributing the wave of violence in Turkey with irresponsible criticism of whatever government was in power. There were 20 political killings a day until the coup.

VOTCP Reviews Soviet Aid

TA251134 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 25 Nov 80

[Station commentary]

[Text] Dear listeners, as you have already heard in our news program, a Soviet delegation headed by deputy minister of the Ministry of Construction of Heavy Industry Enterprises has arrived in Ankara.

Talks on expanding the capacity of the Iskenderun iron and steel plant began at the Industry and Technology Ministry. Later the Soviet delegation will leave for Iskenderun to visit the plant and will return to Ankara to sign an agreement.

Dear listeners, this is not the first time that our neighbor, the Soviet Union, is granting financial and technological aid to Turkey. The Soviet Union, which offered its effective aid to Turkey during the national liberation war waged against the imperialist aggressors, continued to provide Turkey with extensive aid for establishing its national industry and for strengthening state enterprises. The Iskenderun iron and steel plant--which is currently the subject of expansion talks in Ankara--the Seydisehir aluminum plant, the Kayseri and Nazilli textile factories, the Aliaga oil refineries, the Arpacay dam and many other industrial enterprises are concrete monuments to the brotherly assistance extended by the Soviet Union for the economic development of our country and to Soviet friendship.

Industries are not the only field which benefit from Soviet assistance. In accordance with an economic cooperation protocol signed in 1978, the Soviet Union widely contributes to the development of natural gas and oil prospecting, the construction of nuclear power stations and the building of prefabricated housing. The protocol signed in 1978 also stipulates the supplying of oil and coal by the Soviet Union and the expansion of the trade volume between the two countries to $(?700) million.

Dear listeners, it is a well-known fact that the Soviet Union provides all this assistance to Turkey by buying our traditional agricultural products and by granting low interest and long-range loans with no political strings attached. However, the reactionary and monopolist press organs, from the past to the present, have exerted efforts to hide these facts from the public because they know that in the face of these facts their anti-Soviet campaign will lose its (?effect). These press organs can do this for a certain period and can conceal or minimize these facts, but they cannot completely hide the Soviet Union's aid to our people because this aid is based on a long history and deep traditions. Our people have seen and are continuing to observe the constructive effects of this aid.

Our people have also witnessed the so-called aid granted by imperialist states and their international finance pressure organizations such as the IMF, the World Bank, OECD and consortiums. Last week, for example, an IMF delegation visited our country. On the one hand, the delegation said: We are going to grant aid to Turkey and, on the other, it tried to dictate in which fields the loans should be used. The delegation said that it would provide the loans on condition that it would supervise everything. Behind all so-called loans granted by imperialists lies the interests of the monopolies and the strengthening of their positions and sovereignty in the national economy. There is no need, dear listeners, to remind you of the high interest rates charged for these loans.

Judging from what they see, our people appreciate more each day that the assistance provided by the Soviet Union is the internationalist assistance of socialism based on mutual interests, while the assistance of imperialism deteriorates into economic crisis and is aimed at exploiting the country. They are supporting the promotion of multilateral relations with the Soviet Union and the socialist countries.

The Turkish Communist Party as well as communists are convinced that the promotion of economic relations with the Soviet Union and the other socialist countries will constantly contribute in an effective way to the consolidation of regional peace and the easing of tensions.

EEC DELEGATION ARRIVES FOR TALKS TO EXPAND RELATIONS

TA251847 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 25 Nov 80

He said the possibility of cooperation in the energy and other fields will also be considered during the meetings. He concluded by saying that a report on the issue will be submitted to the Community's member countries after the meetings.

The official talks with the EEC delegation will begin tomorrow. At the talks the Turkish delegation will be headed by the economic affairs aide to the Foreign Ministry secretary general, Rahmi Gumrukcuoglu. CUMHURIYET EXAMINES WALDHEIM PROPOSAL ON CYPRUS TALKS

["The World Today" column by Ali Sirmen: "Cyprus Again"]

[Excerpts] A report by our colleague Sedat Ergin in yesterday's CUMHURIYET heralds, on the one hand, the possibility of favourable developments. On the other hand, it underlines certain dangers in Cyprus similar to those in the Aegean.

The report draws attention to the fact that the proposal put forward by UN Secretary General Kurt Waldheim, through Gobbi, his special envoy in Cyprus, is gradually securing positive reaction behind the diplomatic scenes in Ankara. As is known, the secretary general's proposal was hurriedly rejected by the Greek Cypriot side, but later the Kiprianou administration realized its blunder and changed its tune. Waldheim's proposal envisaged a mini agreement on "Varosha and confidence-building measures."

We hasten to add that we welcome any development that aims at easing the way to a settlement in the Cyprus dispute through the intercommunal talks, provided that such developments constitute a true foundation for a lasting and righteous solution and that such a compromise solution does not take the form of a one-sided concession. We fear that in view of the past record of the Greek Cypriot side, such a possibility is gaining ground.

It is said that Denktas' sudden visit to Istanbul was because he realized the possibility of such a development. Fearing that, far from offering a final solution, Waldheim's proposal was meant to impose a one-sided concession on the Turkish Cypriot side, Denktas fled to Istanbul to avoid shouldering the responsibility of such a development.

This much is apparent: The Turkish Cypriot side will open Varosha and consent to the return of the Greek Cypriots there. This means that the Turkish Cypriot side is making a concrete and irreversible concession. In response to this, the Greek Cypriot side will undertake to comply with certain measures which could always be reversed and the definition of which would always be disputable.

What will happen if the Greek Cypriots refuse to lift the economic embargo or decide to implement it in different ways, once the Turkish Cypriots concede Varosha? And, if the Greek Cypriots, once settled in Varosha, embark on an extensive campaign against the Turkish Cypriots, as they have done at international meetings and conferences, will the Greek Cypriots in Varosha be asked to leave? To put it briefly, while Waldheim's proposal requires one side to give up its strongest trump card by making a tangible and irreversible concession, it asks the other side to assume certain responsibilities which are not quite concrete and which can be reversed at any time. Consenting to such a solution by the foreign affairs circles in Ankara is causing anxiety.

The Waldheim proposal may respond to the expectations of the West, but it does not secure a lasting and just solution of the Cyprus issue because the proposal in question entails responsibilities which are not at all equal and comparable.

GENSCHER, FRENCH FOREIGN MINISTER HOLD TALKS

LD271215 Hamburg DPA in German 1105 GMT 27 Nov 80

[Text] Bonn, 27 Nov (DPA)--The main topic of the meeting in Bonn today between Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and his French counterpart Jean Francois-Poncet was the preparation of next weeks's Luxembourg summit. Other points include assessment of the future American foreign policy under President Reagan, the sources of conflict in the world and East-West detente. After a working lunch with Genscher, the French foreign minister is due to return to Paris in the early afternoon.

Discuss Poland

LD271644 Hamburg DPA in German 1608 GMT 27 Nov 80

[Excerpts] Bonn, 27 Nov (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Genscher and his French opposite number Francois-Poncet today affirmed in Bonn their common view that in connection with the situation in Poland due restraint should be observed by all sides. The two ministers emphasized that this was necessary in order to allow Poland to find its own solution to its problems. Francois-Poncet briefed Genscher on the recent visit to Paris by Polish Deputy Premier Jagielski. The French foreign minister flew back to Paris early this afternoon after political consultations with Genscher in Bonn lasting several hours. According to the Foreign Ministry in Bonn, the consultations have illustrated once again the great extent to which German and French views coincide on bilateral questions, EEC problems and current international issues.

COURT RULING INCLUDES GDR IN JURISDICTION

DW270913 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0605 GMT 27 Nov 80

[Press review on FRG penal code involving GDR citizens]

[Excerpts] The Federal Government's penal code protects GDR citizens, to the extent that they have been victims of criminal acts punishable under the law of the Federal Republic of Germany. The Federal Court came to that conclusion in a basic decision which was announced yesterday. NEUE OSNABRUECKER ZEITUNG writes: The Federal Court provided legal clarification of an important point in inter-German relations. In doing this, a legal gap was closed that had come about in connection with the 1969 change in the criminal code, representing a juridical factor of insecurity. The five judges did what the Bundestag, as the legislator, neglected to do. The Karlsruhe verdict is of considerable legal and political significance.

RUHR-NACHRICHTEN of Dortmund stresses: The basis of the decision can be clearly seen: the undivided German state citizenship that has not been split in two by the Basic treaty with the GDR. It is nothing but the juridical confirmation of a reality to which the Federal Republic has committed itself.

Government Rejects GDR Protest

LD272024 Hamburg DPA in German 1957 GMT 27 Nov 80

[Text] Bonn, 27 Nov (DPA)--The Federal Government today emphatically rejected a GDR protest against the verdict of the Federal Court of Justice concerning the validity of the protection of the criminal law for GDR citizens. A government spokesman said in Bonn tonight that the GDR assertion that the ruling of the Karlsruhe judges violated the Basic Treaty or even international law had been rejected. "Furthermore, attention was drawn to the independence of the courts of law in the Federal Republic."

SPANISH TREATMENT OF COMMANDO MEMBERS PROTESTED

LD262002 Paris Domestic Service in French 1900 GMT 26 Nov 80

[Text] I remind you that last Sunday two clients of a bar in Hendeye in the Pyrenees Atlantiques Department were killed and nine others were injured by an extreme right Spanish commando. Shortly afterwards the three members of the commando surrendered to the Spanish border authorities who released them after a mere identity check. The police officers in charge of the custom point were then suspended.

Christian Bonnet today insisted on stating clearly that Paris would not accept the attitude of the Spanish authorities. The Spanish ambassador to Paris is to be called tomorrow to the Quai d'Orsay. Christian Bonnet has already made it clear that it was a question of implementing the extradition convention between France and Spain.

Spanish Ambassador Summoned

LD272100 Paris Domestic Service in French 1900 GMT 27 Nov 80

[Text] Following the Hendeye attack, the Quai d'Orsay summoned the Spanish ambassador to France this afternoon to discuss the case. In diplomatic terms France has protested against the indulgent attitude taken by the Spanish border authorities. French authorities reproach Spain for not having arrested and extradited the three authors of the attack which resulted in two dead and nine injured. The French Government is all the more dissatisfied because an agreement of yet closer cooperation in the struggle against Spanish terrorism was concluded with Madrid only last week.

COOPERATION MINISTER ON CHAD SITUATION, UPPER VOLTA

LD262306 Paris Domestic Service in French 1810 GMT 26 Nov 80

["Facing the Public" program with Cooperation Minister Robert Galley, interviewed by Philippe Decraene of LE MONDE, Bernard Heluy of EST ECLAIR, Francois Orcival of VALEURS ACTUELLES, Alain Schmidt of FR-3 and Edouard Sablier of Radio France]

[Excerpts] [Unidentified questioner] Reproach is often leveled at France, Mr Galley, for an exaggeratedly interventionist African policy. Even in France itself the left strongly contested the nature of your mission in certain circumstances such as in the case of the Bokassa affair and its aftermath. The main point today, however, is not France's action in this or that country but the invasion of a country at one time so very close to France, Chad, by an expansionist neighbor, Libya--Mr al-Qadhdhafi's Libya which, according to Senegalese President Mr Senghor, is trying to destabilise a whole area of Saharan Africa with Chad being only one part of it. I would like, Mr Galley, to know your feelings on the situation in Chad, where we are no longer playing a role.

[Answer] I believe it is common to say that the situation is disastrous, and by this I mean disastrous for the population. This is a country which no longer exists, a country torn to pieces; there is no more state, no more civil servants, only people fighting a civil war which, as you know, has origins going back a long way, specifically to ethnic origins, ethnic battles. I think it is absolutely deplorable, and not only we but all the African countries deplore the situation and are astounded by what is happening, astounded in particular by the fact that most of the movements in Chad refuse to reach an understanding and let national interests prevail.

As you have noted, information from very varied sources claim to show that there is Libyan intervention accomplished in two ways: the recruitment of left, right and center, among workers in Libya of a sort of Islamic legion to be sent in frightening conditions to fight a civil war where they have no reason to be and, also, intervention by means of heavy materiel. My impressions and my feelings which seem to be the same as those of almost all the African heads of state whom I know is that this is a worrying situation, a situation which I might even say approaches destabilization, which could gain momentum. The African heads of state such as Togolese President General Eyadema are making desperate efforts to try to obtain first a cease-fire and then peace, and are making laudable efforts at the moment with a view to finding the means to stem this foreign intervention which solves nothing.

[Decraene] By officially announcing the dispatch of Jaguar aircraft to Libreville is this, in your view, a case of the government preparing French public opinion to accept the idea of another military intervention in Chad?

[Answer] I do not believe the phenomena ought to be connected. The presence of Jaguar aircraft in Libreville was not criticized throughout the past year while they were there. When the Jaguar aircraft go to Abijan on a maneuver no one sees in this an attempted action. I believe that the presence of French aircraft at bases which the governments have accepted to place provisionally and partially at our disposal is quite a classic phenomenon which has nothing to do with possible attempts at intimidation.

[Schmidt] These very worrying events which are taking place in Chad: Could they have wider implications? In your view, does Colonel al-Qadhdhafi have in mind greater destabilization in Africa, and what then would be the consequences?

[Answer] In this case we are forced to remain in the realm of hypotheses, but we are forced to note that there has been an attempt at destabilization by Libya: At one stage there were Libyan troops going to Uganda; there was even considerable aid given by Libya at the beginning of President Mengistu's revolution. I would say that there is a tendency today to see Colonel al-Qadhdhafi and his Libyans as an agent of destabilization. This is perhaps a little excessive.

What I firmly believe is that we should admit that when a country explodes and the ethnic factions are fighting each other, the situation is worrying because the African states are still very fragile, the cohesion of these countries is extremely recent and, consequently, it can be envisaged that destabilization caused by civil war in a country could gradually cause attempts at civil war and fighting between ethnic factions in a neighboring country.

[Unidentified questioner] How can France have a stable and consistent policy of cooperation with governments which are less stable?

[Answer] France cooperates for the sake of these countries' development. Revolutions and coups affect only a limited number of people. Take the case of Upper Volta--I would say that at the moment the situation in Ouagadougou is perfectly calm. As far as we know, the former leaders are under house arrest. Col Saye Zerbo and his men have assumed power, but all this does not affect the enormous effort of cooperation which we are continuing at Bobo Dioulasso in our fight against [word indistinct] and sleeping sickness. This by no means affects the enormous effort made by us toward the rural development of the northeast region.

BARRE, TRUDEAU DISCUSS FRENCH COMMONWEALTH PLAN

LD261125 Paris LE MONDE in French 25 Nov 80 p 4

[Text] The conference of French-speaking countries in Dakar on 8 and 9 December was to be the main subject of Canadian Prime Minister P.E. Trudeau's talks with his French counterpart Barre on Sunday, 23 November, and with President Giscard d'Estaing this Monday.

This conference, which has been masterminded by Senegalese President Senghor, aims to produce an "organic French-speaking community," which has also been called a "French commonwealth."

To date, however, this plan has been blocked by the question of Quebec, which Mr Trudeau is refusing autonomous representation. Speaking in Cairo on Saturday, the Canadian prime minister recalled that his government is prepared to include in its delegation "members from Quebec and from New Brunswick where there is a high proportion of French-speaking people."

According to Canadian sources, during the "private dinner" at the Hotel Matignon on Sunday which was cordial and "frank," Mr Barre stated that "in any case neither France nor any other country is in a position to give advice to Canada on a strictly domestic question."

Nonetheless, as Francois-Poncet pointed out to the National Assembly Foreign Affairs Committee on 10 October, "France thinks it necessary for Quebec to be represented at conferences...of French-speaking countries," without specifying the nature or level of that representation. The question which has still not been answered is what will happen if no inter-Canadian agreement is reached before 8 December. For his part, Mr Senghor (who met with Mr Trudeau in Cairo on Saturday) thinks that this is a "matter which concerns France and Canada, a matter concerning the big white countries."

Mr Trudeau also discussed with Mr Barre East-West relations, international economic problems, the revival of the North-South dialogue and preparations for the industrialized countries' summit in Ottowa.

Mr Trudeau arrived in Paris on Sunday from Bonn where he met with Chancellor Schmidt after a visit to the Near East. Mr Senghor, who was on an official visit to Cairo last week, stated--our correspondent tells us--that President as-Sadat is "prepared to give Egypt a role in the organic French-speaking community." A considerable proportion of the Egyptian elite speaks French. However, the presence in Dakar of other Arab countries (Lebanon and Tunisia) opposed to Egypt seems to have deterred Egypt from sending a representative.

LE MONDE ON DEVELOPMENT OF EC MIDEAST INITIATIVE

LD261325 Paris LE MONDE in French 23-24 Nov 80 pp 1,3

[Maurice Delarue article: "Paris Wants Europe To Revive Its Diplomatic Offensive"]

[Text] At their forthcoming meetings in Luxembourg the nine foreign ministers (Monday and Tuesday, 24-25 November) and the heads of state and of government (1 week later) will resume one of their most controversial exercises: Seeking a solution to the Israeli-Arab conflict. In addition to the Israeli reproaches which this enterprise is prompting, there is likely to be a revival of the internal EC quarrel.

The Israelis and many Americans denounce, with irony mixed with anger, the futility and the dangers of such an academic exercise. Why are the Europeans meddling? What can they achieve, aside from hindering the peace process laboriously set in motion at Camp David?

Israeli and European interests in the Near East are clearly not identical. The Israelis are fighting with their backs to the wall for their state's survival; does that mean, however, that European interests are necessarily negligible?

In strategic terms the Near East is now much nearer to Western Europe than the Balkans were in 1914 when they set the world on fire. Until oil has been replaced by nuclear and other new forms of energy, it is naive to think that the European policy can be discredited merely by describing it as "money-grubbing." As far as France is concerned, such a description is particularly unsuccessful.

Who imagined during the 6-day war in 1967, when France first took a hostile stance toward Israel, that the Israeli-Arab conflict would spark off the energy crisis 6 years later--a crisis whose effects we are still suffering? (Note: General de Gaulle was an exception. When he received Israeli Foreign Minister Eban on 29 May 1967 he mentioned problems in Western oil supplies as a foreseeable consequence of an Israeli attack.)

In any case, from the strategic or economic viewpoint the Near East is of much more vital importance to the Europeans than the Americans, and nobody is offended by the Americans' stating their view in this affair.

Is the exercise in which the Europeans are indulging as futile as it might seem? At the European Council meeting in Venice on 13 June the Nine announced that, in order to promote a "necessary" and "urgent" solution, they would take an "initiative" based on ideas already expressed many times and on "universally accepted principles." In what way was this different from the previous attempts?

First, it is not a question of making procedural proposals (mediation, good offices, conferences and so forth) as so often in the past, but of taking a stance in a relatively detailed way on what the Nine regard as a just settlement.

Second, the Nine's approach is intended to be "all-embracing." It will take account of all the elements in the problem. It differs in this from the "small steps" method so dear to the Americans--"small steps" which can moreover be big since they led to the Egyptian-Israeli peace. The Europeans--Paris definitely and London, Rome and Bonn to varying degrees--are nonetheless convinced that the path opened at Camp David can lead no further. Nobody denies that the Egyptian-Israeli treaty is important for Israel, since it puts the most powerful Arab army out of the game, but it has only solved the simplest part of the problem, since the Sinai border has never been disputed. The essential issue, in other words the Palestinian problem, remains untouched, despite what the Israeli "hawks" who deny its existence might think.

There is one indisputable fact: The peace momentum expected from the Camp David agreement and the Egyptian-Israeli treaty has not worked; it has failed to "thaw" the Jordanians and the West Bank inhabitants, not to mention the Lebanese, the Syrians and the Palestinians living in exile. It has not led to any overall settlement. The way in which Begin has interpreted the agreements signed with President as-Sadat probably made a major contribution to that failure, but the deadlock is a fact. The "small steps" will only break this deadlock if they are part of an "overall" framework, which alone can balance the advantages and risks of a settlement for all sides.

It is this framework which the Nine want to establish. The concern for balance is the basis of their effort. They expressed this in Venice when they included in one sentence the two principles which they regard as indissociable: "Israel's right to existence and security" (and the same right for the other states in the region) and "the Palestinian people's legitimate rights" including their "right to self-determination" (and not just the right to remain in refugee camps).

Having established those principles, the Nine defined four spheres of application in which they intend to specify their common stance:

1. Withdrawal from the occupied territories, on which France has made suggestions;

2. Guarantees of security for all, which should not only be legal but practical, with an international peace-keeping force sent to the region;

3. Self-determination, which will probably raise the most difficulties: It will be necessary to decide who will be able to claim Palestinian nationality--only those residing on the West Bank, or the various generations of refugees? It is true that the result of a people's ballot would not be noticeably affected by the definition;

4. Jerusalem, which will certainly require special provisions.

The Nine could deem several options to be possible on these different points.

Once they have agreed on a working document, what will they do? It is by no means certain that they will publish it immediately. They will first use the most secret diplomatic channels to inform the sides in conflict of their views. Their aim is to convince the adversaries that there is a solution other than the eternal use of force (destruction of Israel for one side, and permanent occupation of Arab land for the others) and that a peaceful solution based on the Israelis' two rights and the Palestinians' right to a homeland "with security" is reasonable, realistic and possible. Simultaneous realization of this fact by the Israelis and the Palestinians is, the Nine think, the psychological precondition for any settlement. It is to this realization that they wish to contribute.

There is every reason to think that such a initiative would, on the whole, not be badly received on the Arab side, although attitudes would differ widely.

As far as Cairo is concerned, the essential thing is that this initiative should not interfere in the process under way, in Sinai and, of course, that is the Nine's intention. Furthermore, whatever is said in Jerusalem and Cairo, nobody doubts that the Egyptian-Israeli peace will remain fragile until it is part of an overall settlement.

The Nine's plan is, in any case, greatly appreciated in the Arab country most painfully involved in the conflicts: Jordan. King Husayn has already spoken out in favor of simultaneous recognition of the Israeli and Palestinian rights to "a homeland" within "secure borders" in the communique issued during Giscard d'Estaing's visit to Amman on 12 March, in which Israel was only implicitly mentioned, and explicitly during his visit to Washington. Answering questions asked by National Press Club journalists on 19 June, the king said: "The Palestinians definitely ought to recognize Israel's right to existence....But should Israel not also recognize the Palestinians' rights over their land and in their homeland? Is this not what we should ask of both sides simultaneously? I hope that will be the case."

It might seem surprising that such a clear call for the recognition of Israel by the Arab head of state most deeply involved in the conflict did not hit the headlines. However, the Americans, then in the middle of the election campaign, only cherished the fond hope of drawing Husayn into the "Camp David path," which would have helped Mr Carter. Since the king bluntly ruled out that hypothesis, nobody reported what he added to his rejection.

The Lebanese, insofar as they are able to have a policy, are clearly in favor of anything which might end the tragedy with which they are stricken. The Syrians, however, who have fallen into the Soviet sphere of influence, do not seem very interested in the European initiative, any more than their Iraqi brother-enemies, who are fully absorbed in the war with Iran. Moreover, the Iraqis have no border dispute with Israel.

The Palestinians are the heart of the conflict. They cannot be expected--especially at a time when Arab divisions are weakening their cause--to take an objective stance on the European initiative before it has been properly drawn up. They cannot even be expected to show any sign of abandoning their famous charter and its avowed objective (establishing a "homeland" on the whole territory of what was once the British mandate) unless the Israelis recognize, at least simultaneously, their right to determine their own future. That will be the object of any negotiations.

On the Israeli side Mr Begin will, at best, shrug his shoulders. However, Israel, like any democratic state, is much more complex than its government. Although the Israeli holy alliance is formed instantaneously when the homeland is threatened with war, things are entirely different when it is, to quote Marc Hillel, "in danger of peace." What would happen in Israel if there were prospects other than the besieged fortress which is used merely to conquer a new buffer zone? What would happen if a credible plan for peaceful coexistence with the Palestinians and the Arab world were offered?

Clearly, although the Europeans can sound out the Arabs themselves (the new-style "Euro-Arab dialogue"--henceforth a political body at ministerial level in which the PLO is participating fully--might help), they cannot hope for any audience in Israel without active U.S. cooperation.

The arrival of the new White House inhabitant is upsetting their plans. They will first have to convince him. Not only did Mr Reagan outstrip Mr Carter in pro-Israeli statements during the election campaign, but his reputation as a tough guy is automatically prompting caution among Europeans. Will the Nine's fine unanimity shown in Venice when they braved a Carter with his back to the wall hold out? Will they have the courage, the elementary courage, to hold to a policy based on European interests and not on the fickleness of the voters on the other side of the Atlantic?

There is reason to doubt this. Aside from France, who in the European Nine does not aspire to docile realignment with an energetic U.S. "leadership?" Schmidt perhaps, but does his Foreign Minister Genscher, the main victor in the recent elections, share that feeling? According to U.S. journalist J. Fitchett, who discussed this subject with British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington, Britain will advocate postponing the European initiative "for a few months."

However, the worst should never be expected. Although there is reason to fear that the British, who are not fully in tune with the continent, could be seduced by the sirens of a new "special relationship" with Washington, the Conservative Party and the Foreign Office are traditionally attentive to the Arab cause. Moreover, Lord Carrington is justifying a postponement because of the current situation: The divisions in the Arab world, the weakening of Jordan and the PLO and the strengthening of Israel reduce the chances of a settlement in his view; however, the British minister above all wants to give the new president time to "abandon his election rhetoric," J. Fitchett reports, which should not "prevent Europe from continuing to formulate its own Near East policy in the hope of influencing the Reagan administration."

Of course, it is not unreasonable to think that, once election promises have faded, Mr Reagan will return to the usual Republican line, which is less unconditionally pro-Israeli than the Democrats'. It was Eisenhower, a Republican, who, in 1956 in the middle of a presidential election, most strongly opposed Israeli expansionism which was then supported by Paris and London.

There are dangers in delaying, however. This danger is the result of the U.S. constitutional system, which only really gives the president a free hand at the beginning of his term of office. Therefore, given the slow nature of their procedures, is it premature for the Nine to adopt a common stance in December which they hope Mr Reagan will share at the beginning of next year? Mr Giscard d'Estaing does not think so. He will urge his partners not to mark time at the Luxembourg meeting.

MARCHAIS ON DISSIDENTS, RELATIONS WITH CPSU, PS

LD261715 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 5 Nov 80 p 5

[Jacques de Bonis and Michel Naudy report: "The Old Reactionary Right Accused on Television"]

[Excerpts] Georges Marchais was yesterday evening's guest on French Television Channel TF-1's "The Great Debate" in which, apart from two journalists, the rightist deputies Barier (RPR) and Longuet (UDF), the Socialist Deputy Bapt, and Pierre Zarka, Communist deputy for Seine-Saint-Denis, were taking part.

Questioned first on "the expulsions from the PCF," Georges Marchais explained right away that our party's health was good. After noting that only "an extremely limited number of Communists were in disagreement with the party's orientation--a "normal" state of affairs in an organization with 700,000 members--Georges Marchais recalled that the PCF's Bouches-du-Rhone federation had expelled a Communist for indicating that he would not vote for the PCF candidate in the presidential election, indeed that he would even oppose him.

"From the moment that a majority decision is made," Georges Marchais added, "it is applicable by everyone. This is indeed democracy and the working peoples' guarantee that the PCF says what it does and does what it says." He remarked furthermore that the PCF leadership would have to ratify this decision, which did not contradict the development of debate, discussion or confrontation within the PCF as the methods which it had always supported.

UDF Deputy Longuet, who made his debut in the extreme rightist groups, then reproached Georges Marchais in a provocative manner which he maintained throughout the broadcast for having gone to Moscow, and went so far as to accuse him of being "the CPSU candidate in the next election." To demonstrate this he resorted moreover to a quote taken from Francois Mitterrand's latest work....

"You are behaving like an old reactionary reiterating what French citizens have been hearing for 60 years," Georges Marchais proclaimed, pointing out that the French working peoples' fate mattered little to the right. Then, coming to the socialist countries' problems, he explained that the 22d and 23d congresses had simultaneously assessed them as positive in terms of a worldwide balance and expressed disagreement with the CPSU on the problems of socialist democracy. "I declared then," he added, "that I would not go to Moscow until the CPSU agreed to recognize the existence of this profound discord between us. This took years during which we in the PCF did not yield an inch. And the January meeting was possible as soon as the CPSU leadership agreed to publicize, in a joint document, the existence of this profound divergence.... That is why I was able to go to Moscow."

Georges Marchais stressed that the recognition of such divergences in a document had we never taken place before between communist parties.

It was then the turn of the RPR deputy to ask the Communist candidate if he was a democrat. "I am infinitely more of a democrat than you, and my concept of freedom and democracy has nothing in common with yours," Georges Marchais answered him.

The right's concept in the matter, he pointed out, leads to firing the CGT official at Renault, to sending the navy against fishermen or to manipulating the radio and television.

Defenders of individual freedoms, the Communists also struggle for freedom to work, of which 1.9 million people are now deprived in France, for the freedom to live decently, for the ability to pay rent, and to be able to educate one's children, which millions of working people are unable to do.

While the management tells the working person "work and shut up," the Communists propose that he decide his fate himself. To end on this point, Georges Marchais sent the teachers back to think again, stressing that French law supported the executioners of the Kampuchean people by standing surety for the presence of the executioner Pol Pot's representative in the United Nations, as it once did in the Algerian people's war in the struggle for their independence.

Gerard Bapt next called to mind Francois Mitterrand's latest book. "This," Georges Marchais then said, "is a laborious argument attempting to justify Francois Mitterrand's personal action. Two things characterize this book: "storytelling and anticommunism."

With proof at hand, despite his interlocutor's attempts to divert him and the manifest annoyance of those conducting the show, Georges Marchais clarified a few historical points travestied or ignored by the PS first secretary. He cited several examples. First, it was not as the result of solitary reflection on his estate in the Landes but after Waldech Rochet's proposal to Guy Mollet that Mitterrand found himself nominated in 1965 as the left's candidate inthe presidential election.

Second, it is strange, Georges Marchais added, that Mitterrand forgot the year 1968 in his book. "There was then a great popular movement in this country, where it was possible to open up a leftist perspective. Mitterrand refused."

"He had a different strategy from yours, that was all," the Socialist deputy replied.

This interruption enabled Georges Marchais to recall the outlines of the said strategy. "Without consulting the PCF, he nominated himself presidential candidate, named Mendes-France prime minister and granted one sole ministerial seat to the Communists. He was thus in fact resolutely opposed to the left union."

Third, Georges Marchais replied to the thesis advanced by Francois Mitterrand in his book according to which in 1978 the PCF wanted to allocate all the power to itself and overturn the republic's rules. In reality, Georges Marchais replied, "within the joint working commission there were then discussions on the structures and modes of government action and each party's representation within the future government; discussions on the modes of application of the measures contained in the joint program. This discussion could not be concluded in a plenary session since Mitterrand had previously renounced the joint program himself."

In fact, the PCF secretary general pointed out, Francois Mitterrand is now revealing the essence of his opposition to the accord which foresaw the Communists' participation in conformity with their influence in the administration of joint affairs. "In his book he now reveals the essential reason for the abandonment of the policy of the Union of the Left and of the joint program: his refusal to work with the Communists in the country's affairs."

Georges Marchais stated, moreover, that on Thursday L'HUMANITE was going to publish this text, attached to the joint program updated on the broad lines agreed by the delegations led by Charles Fiterman for the PCF and Beregovoy for the PS.

Fourth, Georges Marchais recalled a final passage from Francois Mitterrand's book in which the latter, questioned on his reactions should the PCF outstrip the PS, replies essentially that he would then have failed totally and would thus abandon his posts. "This is the admission that for Francois Mitterrand the Union of the Left policy was never destined to beat the right and build a new society but constituted the means of realizing his personal ambitions," and also, Georges Marchais added, to try to weaken the PCF so as to get into power and carry out the right's policy.

INTERIOR MINISTER RESIGNS OVER QUAKE AID CRITICISM

AU271351 Rome ANSA in English 0805 GMT 27 Nov 80

[Text] Rome, 27 Nov (ANSA)--Italian Interior Minister Virginio Rognoni submitted his resignation here late yesterday evening in the wake of growing criticism of the way in which aid to the earthquake disaster region in southern Italy has been handled.

In his letter to Prime Minister Arnaldo Forlani, Rognoni said he had a "calm conscience", but was leaving the government in order to reduce tensions which would make its moves "difficult at a time when they are absolutely necessary".

News of the resignation filtered out at 2330 GMT and no official or unofficial reaction to the resignation letter was available. But immediate comment linked the decision to the speech delivered on television by head-of-state Sandro Pertini earlier in the evening.

Pertini voiced tough charges against delays and shortcomings in the aid effort and also urged that those responsible should be brought to account.

Another factor was thought to be a meeting of the steering committee of the Italian Socialist Party (PSI), a partner in the present government along with Forlani's Christian Democrats, the Social Democrats, and the Republicans.

PSI Secretary Bettino Craxi insisted on the "structural improvidence and lack of preparation" in sending aid to the quake zone.

But stronger words were used by local party representatives present at the meeting. It would issue a communique urging effective and efficient interventions in the short term, and a "serious, honest, and concrete commitment to the work of reconstruction".

Rognoni, who held down the Interior Ministry since June 13, 1978, was named to the post by former Premier Giulio Andreotti to replace Francesco Cossiga, who resigned over the Moro affair.

Rognoni was reconfirmed in the subsequent Andreotti government and the two governments then led by Cossiga, as well as in the Forlani government. 56 years old, Rognoni, who is a law professor, was deputy speaker of the Lower House when named as minister. Earlier, he was deputy Christian floor-leader in the lower house.

Forlani Refuses Rognoni Resignation

AU271530 Rome ANSA in English 1522 GMT 27 Nov 80

[Text] Rome, 27 Nov (ANSA)--Italian Prime Minister Arnaldo Forlani this morning rejected the letter of resignation submitted by Interior Minister Virginio Rognoni last night in the wake of growing criticism against mishandling of the relief effort to the earthquake survivors in southern Italy.

RAMALHO EANES DEFENDS PRESIDENTIAL RECORD

LD271617 DIARIO DE NOTCIAS in Portuguese 21 Nov 80 pp 9, 10

[Fernando Pires and Simoes Ilharco interview with Portuguese President Ramalho Eanes: "There Is No Institutional Guerrilla Warfare Nor Will There Be in Future"--date and place of interview not given]

[Excerpts] DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: Your insistence on a political blueprint embodied by the Socialist Party/Social Democratic Party [PS/PSD] central bloc is interpreted within the Democratic Alliance as being aimed at its breakup. Do you really wish to destroy the Democratic Alliance?

Ramalho Eanes: We might begin with what the president of the republic's powers are: Taking these powers into consideration, it is clear that the president of the republic does not interfere politically or institutionally in the lives of the parties and coalitions. The successes or failures which the parties may have in their activity directly concern themselves alone, being answerable to the electorate. If we dwell on these considerations, it becomes clear that I do not have the slightest intention of harming the Democratic Alliance and its functioning. I have a responsibility, however, which is that of keeping open the channels through which our democratic system functions, which means that I must act in such a way as to ensure that there are permanent conditions for alternation. And it is this obligation which leads me to acknowledge that if perhaps in the course of these 4 years the Democratic Alliance does not succeed in finding an answer to the country's major problems, it is possible that the electorate may want another political solution, just as it is also perfectly natural that, if the Democratic Alliance functions well and answers the problems which will confront the Portuguese people during the period concerned, the electorate should decide to keep it in power. In the case of the former hypothesis--that of the Democratic Alliance not functioning well--one of the possible solutions would be that of a possible agreement among forces possessing policies with some similarity and more easily combined.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: Would that agreement be between the PS and the PSD...?

Ramalho Eanes : Yes, between the PS and the PSD.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: You recently told the BBC that Dr Mario Soares and Dr Sa Carneiro are not far apart politically. Could you enlarge on this statement?

Ramalho Eanes: I was referring more specifically to the government programs which they put forward and which, particularly with respect to economic policies, contained no significant differences. I would even say that the economic policy laid down by the second constitutional government was continued by all the subsequent governments, specifically that headed by Dr Sa Carneiro. Moreover, this possible agreement, which is essential for democracy to be able to continue to function in an unobstructed manner, will certainly create a need in the revision of the constitution for even partial paths of consensus to be found.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: According to some observers, your reelection as president would constitute a factor of destabilization of democracy, since, according to those same observers, close cooperation between yourself and a Democratic Alliance government over 4 years will not be possible, and we will witness constant institutional guerrilla warfare. What is your opinion of these reflections?

Ramalho Eanes: I believe that they are injudicious reflections, and I believe that they are to be explained essentially by party strategies which, while not accepting them, I honestly understand. They have been repeated very persistently, but this repetition does not give them the status of truthfulness. In my opinion, there has been no institutional conflict or guerrilla warfare in the past, and I intend that there should be no guerrilla warfare of this kind in the future either.

However, it is common knowledge that the government has certain powers and the president of the republic has others. None of the state bodies at issue can relinquish full exercise of its powers, since it is this very full exercise which makes it possible for democracy to function in a stabilized manner. And when I talk about stabilization, I have in mind specifically respect for minorities and the elements not represented in the government. What all this implies is a real requirement of democratic legality. Provided that this requirement is perceived and fully met, the problems of so-called guerrilla warfare do not arise, because both the government and the president of the republic stem from the people's will to resolve the difficulties confronting the country. Surmounting these difficulties requires joint action by the government and the presidency of the republic, so that the democratic nature of these two bodies necessitates action aimed at cooperation and understanding between them, which should proceed in accordance with what I have termed institutional solidarity.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: So do you believe that institutional solidarity is possible with you as president and Sa Carneiro as prime minister?

Ramalho Eanes: I believe so. Democratically, moreover, there is no other solution. If the electorate has in fact chosen a parliamentary majority, which is the existing majority, and chooses me as president, the only democratic solution, the only democratic response to the two choices, the only way to respect the democratic commitment which is accepted when we present ourselves to the electorate is to find forms of cooperation which will make it possible to make an adequate response to our society's problem.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: Prominent among the many accusations leveled against you is that of practicing systematic obstruction of the Democratic Alliance government. What is your opinion about this accusation?

Ramalho Eanes: Throughout this entire period I have never waged guerrilla warfare or created obstacles for the government. It is also clear that I have never relinquished my democratic responsibilities. The government has a certain view of the problem, and this leads it to seek and propose certain solutions. In exercising my powers, whenever I agree with these solutions, I have no hesitation in approving them. However, if perhaps this agreement does not exist, I express it clearly and explain the reasons for it. So the government exercises its powers, and rightly, proposing the solutions which it deems appropriate, and I exercise my powers, accepting or otherwise these solutions. Moreover, the so-called institutional guerrilla warfare is not confirmed by the facts. The government has sought to implement its program through various measures,--legislative measures specifically. Over the last few months about 730 documents, if I am not mistaken, have come to the president of the republic. Of these, seven were vetoed politically by the president of the republic because, from my viewpoint, I believe that they were not in keeping with the national interest, three were held back, two of them connected with defense--a matter which the assembly will have to debate at an early opportunity, and, if possible, on the basis of consensus, so that the armed forces can be an institution which feels nationally supported by a solid majority, and another concerning problems connected with special antiterrorist groups. In my opinion, they should be examined at a time when parliament is functioning. So there has been no systematic obstruction on my part.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: How do you view the stances of Dr Sa Carneiro and Professor Freitas do Amaral with respect to not belonging to the government if you are reelected as president?

Ramalho Eanes: Dr Sa Carneiro and Professor Freitas do Amaral are two politicians who hold very prominent posts and who for that very reason have great responsibilities to the Portuguese people. It is for them alone to interpret those responsibilities as they see fit, and I do not wish to make value judgments on that interpretation. All that I can say is that I disagree with any forms of coercion--albeit only apparent--being brought to bear on the electorate.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: So are your relations with Dr Sa Carneiro so bad as to prevent the current prime minister remaining in office if you are reelected? Do you believe that Dr Sa Carneiro should remain prime minister in that event?

Ramalho Eanes: The second part of your question concerns the Democratic Alliance alone. The practice followed so far has been to accept the suggestion of the party or majority coalition which was victorious in the election, and this is the practice which will be followed. If the coalition were to designate Dr Sa Carneiro as prime minister, I obviously would not oppose that. With respect to the problem of good or bad relations, I believe that it is a mistake to view the issue in these terms. I do not believe that there are good or bad relations among political leaders with responsibilities resulting from election results. What can exist is incorrect or correct behavior or relations, and I believe that an appraisal will have to take into consideration what results from democracy itself and its requirements. I believe that I myself and Dr Sa Carneiro will be in agreement in this respect.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: In 1976 you were supported by the PSD, the PS and the Social Democratic Center Party [CDS], and did not have the PCP's votes. Some 4 years later, you are no longer supported by the PSD and the CDS, by the PS secretary general and by Socialist sectors supporting him, and some observers maintain that you will now receive the Communists' votes. To what do you attribute such an appreciable change in the bloc of support for your repeated candidacy?

Ramalho Eanes: As you know, the parties only really have votes in presidential elections when they field their own candidates, and even then experience has demonstrated that the votes for those candidates are often quite different from those which they received in the legislative elections. As far as I am concerned, now, as in 1976, I have made my candidacy dependent solely on the PS' support. I had occasion to explain this at the time. The reasons are the same. It is clear that the change which you mentioned has several different causes which have arisen over the last 4 years. The Democratic Alliance itself to some extent sought my cooperation when it was formed, but I believed that I should not give it, because I believe that the president of the republic should be a man endowed with great impartiality in order to find the most appropriate solutions in crisis situations. In fact he cannot ally himself with one side, because if he did he would necessarily end up by turning against the other. It was this stance of impartiality which, in my opinion, has caused a certain estrangement on the part of some parties which supported me in 1976.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: And what about the hypothesis of receiving the Communists' votes. Do you attribute any particular significance to it?

Ramalho Eanes: No. I attribute no special significance at all to it, because if that support materializes it will have nothing to do with my political conduct throughout this period. It will in no way influence my stances. It will not affect me, either, and will not alter my stances. If this support materializes, it means that the Communist Party has given that support, not because of myself but because of the other candidates. I practice a policy which certainly assures the PCP that the democratic rules are not broken, and this will enable the Communist Party to continue its normal activity in a democracy which is also normal. I believe that if that support materializes, it will be explained better by an analysis of this kind than by other, improper reflections.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: Still on the topic of the accusations leveled against you, there also stands out the one that you are noteworthy for ambiguity and that you change your conduct in accordance with circumstances. What do you have to say about this?

Ramalho Eanes: It seems to me that when accusations of this gravity are made there would be every advantage in substantiating and proving them. Moreover, the people who are leveling these accusations against me now were praising me not long ago.

They even recently proposed to me that in some way I should lead or support certain political movements which they were seeking to launch. All this is also due to political strategies, and I believe that it would be for journalists, specifically, to force substantiation of these accusations, because allegations are often made and proof of their accuracy is not demanded. I can say, in short, that I was not seduced when that praise was made, but neither am I concerned now about these accusations. There will be an election. The Portuguese electorate will have the opportunity to speak out and will certainly do so, taking into account my conduct throughout this 4-year term of office and not the accusations which are leveled against me and which remain to substantiated.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: Your 15 October press conference was regarded as disastrous in some sectors. Do you believe that you made unfortunate remarks?

Ramalho Eanes: I believe that there were no unfortunate remarks at that press conference. What happened afterward was a distorted interpretation of certain remarks--an interpretation which eventually caused the remarks which were made to disappear, as if, perhaps, they had not existed, while, on the other hand, the interpretations which I have mentioned have remained fully alive. What are, basically, the principal accusations leveled against me?

The first is that I sought to latch on to the Democratic Alliance. This is unfounded. I talked about a similar model of society, and it should be recalled here that some Democratic Alliance members have accused me of upholding Third-Worldist plans. When I touched on the model of society, I was referring, as is obvious, to the Western model of society which the Democratic Alliance parties, like the Republican and Socialist Front, claim to uphold. But I also happened to state that if there is some similarity in this respect there are certainly some disagreements with respect to political practice, because I believe that the latter should be consistent, and in a democracy there is only consistent political practice when the great values are upheld. One of the great values--if not the most important of all--is the guaranteeing of alternation, because in a democracy all power is temporary, and so there is a need for alternative forces which can replace that power when the people see fit through free elections.

I also referred to the freedom of the press, which must be viewed in overall terms, because it is that which makes it possible to form a responsible and aware public opinion. It is also the freedom of the press which enables voters to be sufficiently informed at the time of voting to choose in full awareness. I also happened to mention other aspects connected with the full operation of democracy.

So that being said, I do not believe that the press conference was disastrous, as some people say, since it merely made possible some--in my opinion--improper exploitation. Also with respect to the referendum, I said that it was a matter of great gravity which could not be explained in a simple answer to a simple question, and that I would have occasion to clarify my viewpoint subsequently, as I did, moreover, in the message which I sent to parliament at the time of the opening of the second legislative period.

DIARIO DE NOTCIAS: Since you advocate a PS/PSD solution, why did you not promote a government of this kind before the Democratic Alliance was formed and why did you only come forward and publicly advocate it after the agreement among the three parties comprising the Democratic Alliance was reached?

Ramalho Eanes: I believe that you are misinformed. As will be recalled, I took action as far back as 1977 with a view to reaching consensus at the parliamentary level between the PS and the PSD, for the approval of a number of laws deemed essential for the state's structure and consolidation, such as the law delimiting [the public and private] sectors and the agrarian reform law. Soon after the fall of the first government, I sought to achieve agreement between the PS and the PSD, and I must tell you even that the crisis was prolonged for several days to allow conditions for that possibility of agreement to be created within the PSD.

It was only when the PSD leaders told me that the situation of crisis within the party was such that this would not be feasible that another solution was decided on. That was in 1977. The same aim was maintained after the fall of the second government, since the governments formed at the president's initiative were the solution to which I had to resort to give the parties the necessary time for negotiation, without leaving the country in the absurd situation of having no government.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: There are those who say—and publicly--that Dr Mario Soares is deeply bent on your defeat and that he has already done more for the election of General Soares Carneiro than the Democratic Alliance candidate himself. Do you believe that the PS secretary general is in fact interested in candidate Ramalho Eanes' defeat?

Ramalho Eanes: That is a hypothesis which I do not accept in either political or personal terms. Dr Mario Soares has a past which is well known of a struggle for the establishment of democracy, and so that past leads me to believe that he is not in any way interested in the election of General Soares Carneiro, at least, this is my conviction.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: Do you believe that he will vote for you?

Ramalho Eanes: I believe that he will vote in a perfectly aware manner consistent with his past.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: Changing the subject a little, do you regard yourself as a candidate capable of embracing the entire social democratic electorate? In other words, are you or are you not a social democrat?

Ramalho Eanes: I believe that it is very easy to accept labels, just as it is also easy to reject them. But I do not accept labels peacefully. What I have advocated is that democracy, progress and justice should be constantly growing realities. I am not seeking to hide behind a label. What I am seeking is to ensure through political practice that democracy develops and is consolidated in our country. I advocate peaceful coexistence among all Portuguese people, irrespective of their political ideologies. Portugal is the entire country, from the extreme left to the extreme right.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: How would you comment on Professor Freitas do Amaral's assertion that your reelection would benefit only the PCP, creating a crisis within the three major democratic parties (the PS, the PSD and the CDS)?

Ramalho Eanes: I believe that this viewpoint also is particularly strange, all the more so since it is not accompanied by any explanation. Moreover, Professor Freitas do Amaral has already upheld with equal vehemence other viewpoints which have later been found not to have the slightest reality and been disproven.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: At any event, the fact that you exclude the CDS from your central bloc helps create a certain animosity on the part of the centrists toward you. The CDS must feel resentful toward you because you do not include it in your political solution.

Ramalho Eanes: I would say that there is no resentment on the part of the CDS as a political party but rather resentment on the part of some leaders of that party. In this particular instance, I believe that Professor Freitas do Amaral should prove his assertions: otherwise, it will have to be concluded that they were made for electioneering ends.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: But Professor Freitas do Amaral said specifically that if General Ramalho Eanes is reelected, the Democratic Alliance could break up, the PS would enter into a crisis, and only the PCP would benefit from your reelection.

Ramalho Eanes: I believe that, on the contrary, my reelection will help the democratic parties to have conditions of greater stability, since my activity will be characterized, as in the past, by balance, moderation and impartiality, which will cause the tensions which may perhaps arise to find--as, moreover, they did during my first term of office--balanced and compensatory solutions which cannot fail to help democracy. In helping democracy, it is clear that they also help all the democratic parties. I have no intention of acting against the coalition in power, seeking to break it up. It is perfectly legitimate and democratic, because it was elected by the people, and I always respect the people's will.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: However, the Democratic Alliance says that its blueprint can only be prolonged if there is harmony among the state bodies; if the president and the majority are in agreement--something which could not occur with your reelection....

Ramalho Eanes: We must consider this issue at two levels: the international and the domestic levels. Citing countries with a system like ours, under which the president does not belong to the majority from which the government emerged, we can see that great stability and democracy has evolved impressively, as in Austria and the FRG. With respect to the domestic aspect, we have been working together for several months, and I do not believe that the Democratic Alliance has not implemented its policy becasue the president of the republic is not a Democratic Alliance member. I also believe that democracy benefited from this balance, this real separation of powers. Too close a harmony between the majority and the president of the republic and a relationship not of interdependence but of dependence could possibly cause the situation to become blocked and the solutions disruptive at times of crisis. If the president of the republic is not independent from the majority, if he cannot in crisis situations make certain decisions which are his responsibility but with which the majority disagrees; if that did not happen, the system could in fact become imbalanced, and what occurred at the fall of the previous regime--which was a regime which was blocked because there was a concentration of powers--could happen to some extent.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: If the majority were Republican and Socialist Front, would you be a president independent from that majority?

Ramalho Eanes: I certainly would be, partly because this condition of independence is duly taken into account in the basis of agreement with the PS, which will be published.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: You have already stated that you rule out a referendum as a method for revising the constitution. However, do you accept that the institution of the referendum could be enshrined in this revision for other issues of national importance?

Ramalho Eanes: Indeed I do not accept that an attempt should be made to effect the current revision of the constitution by means of a referendum for obvious reasons of the defense of democratic legality, which does not mean that I am opposed under all circumstances to the possibility of this instrument being incorporated into our legislation. I even accept that the deputies, provided that they respect the constitutionally envisaged machinery, should be able to lay down that future revisions should be effected by referendum. That is to say, that it is for the deputies, respecting this constitution, to lay down the machinery for revising the constitution in the future. I will fully respect what the deputies decide, provided that they do not perpetrate violations of the present constitution. With respect to the referendum, as an institution devoted to other purposes, it could be an instrument which will enhance or consolidate democracy, provided that it is appropriately defined, because it will cause the population to be obliged to express an opinion on issues of importance concerning it. But what must be made clear is that it cannot be accepted that the coming revision of the constitution should be affected by referendum, breaking essential democratic rules.

DIARIO DE NOTICAS: In the event of losing the election, what are your plans for the future? Would you accept the post of chairman of the Supreme Military Court, as Soares Carneiro has suggested?

Ramalho Eanes: I am going to win the election. Since I do not accept the possibility of losing it, I have not yet made plans about my future, and so I cannot answer your question.

EXPRESSO EXAMINES PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION ISSUES

LD271715 Lisbon EXPRESSO in Portuguese 22 Nov 80 p 2

[Marcelo Rebelo de Sousa article: "From Mario Soares' Fifth Defeat to Sa Carneiro's 'Tour de Force'"]

[Excerpt] So the situation is clear now as never before during the last 6 months.

The presidential candidacies which are insignificant or unrepresentative in their national dimension, their bases of support and their public image have faded.

The camps have taken shape around two principal candidates.

On the one hand there is Ramalho Eanes, the candidate who has the advantage of being president for 4 years and of being able to use the post of president for campaign purposes, as manifested on radio and television.

He is supported and will be supported by a PS more resigned to this hypothesis (and in which Mario Soares succeeded in creating expectation and controversy but not the des-destruction of the support for Eanes), a militant and mobilizing PCP and Portuguese Democratic Movement/Democratic Electoral Commission leftwing and center fringes, grouped in parties or otherwise, but also that rightwing area which is reacting as a result of the force of inertia generated by the figure of the president, the 4-year term of office or the general and widespread conviction that Eanes' relection could be compatible, despite everything, with a Democratic Alliance government for a legislative term.

On the other hand there is Soares Carneiro, a candidate launched 6 months ago and who only began to have a public and positive impact in terms of mass demonstrations, radio and television a few weeks ago.

He is supported by the principal representatives of the majority which triumphed in October--the Social Democratic Party and the Social Democratic Center Party--and center, rightwing and center-left independents, in addition to the support expressed by the Popular Monarchist Party, which by definition is unable to support officially a candidate for the presidency of the republic.

Merely to set out the profiles and the support makes it possible to conclude that to defeat Ramalho Eanes Soares Carneiro needs to achieve an essential aim, which in practice would be sufficient in itself for this purpose: to secure the whole of the Democratic Alliance's vote in the last legislative elections.

Despite the fact that the Democratic Alliance did not secure 51 percent in terms of voters in those elections, an exact repetition of the vote which it received 5 October in the coming presidential election would be sufficient in principle to give Soares Carneiro a victory, since on the left it is more likely that abstention will occur in both the first and second rounds.

On the other hand, it is sufficient for Eanes to succeed in depriving the Democratic Alliance of 3 or 4 percent of the 5 October votes, adding them to those which the left will tend to cast for his candidacy.

That is, in a word, everything will be decided within the Democratic Alliance's electorate, in accordance with its greater or lesser voting discipline with respect to 1980's two successive elections.

It is within this context that Francisco Sa Carneiro's stance takes on a decisive role.

It is for him to make the final appeal to the Democratic Alliance's electorate to vote for Soares Carneiro now, just as it voted for the Democratic Alliance on 5 October.

To this end Sa Carneiro will have to reaffirm decisively and irreversibly that he does not agree to be prime minster with Eanes reelected, and also that Eanes' reelection will create a lasting institutional and political conflict with the government and the Parliamentary majority provoking a crisis with as yet unforseeable consequences.

This is what Sa Carneiro did on television yesterday, maintaining a silence which has been kept virtually since 5 October. [sentence as published]

From his words it is possible to deduce one certainty. That in fact Sa Carneriro and Freitas do Ameral will not remain in the government with Ramalho Eanes in Belem Palace.

It remains to be seen whether this is the decisive argument for securing the Democratic Allicance's full vote for Soares Carneiro and the latter's victory or whether there are still many Democratic Alliance voters who will opt for the pleasure of the experience of the situation, complex in itself, represented by the confrontation between the Democratic Alliance in the government and Ramalho Eanes as president of the republic.

Sa Carneiro's "tour de force" in this final stretch is necessary (even indispensable) for Soares Carneiro.

Will it be sufficient?

MADRID REPORTS ON ACTIVITIES AT CSCE TALKS

Problems Cited

LD252324 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1830 GMT 25 Nov 80

[Gloria del Campo dispatch]

[Text] Problems have once again arisen at the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe. In the First Commission--which is discussing general principles and security--there is still no agreement. There is still no agreement on the way in which the time between now and 12 February is to be divided during these weeks when this commission will study the review of the Helsinki Final Act on this point. [sentence as heard] At the moment, the Western bloc is meeting in a room at the Palace of Congresses to study the proposal made by the Soviet Union which refers to a division of the time in half: 50 percent to study the principles, and 50 percent to study the subject of security. At today's meeting of the commission, the United States delegate made a very tough speech attacking the Soviet Union for its invasion of Afghanistan and again asking for the withdrawal of Soviet troops from the country.

With regard to the Second Commission--on economic cooperation--most notable might be the socialist bloc's view that the economic crisis is provoked by the capitalist system of the Western countries and that the socialist bloc bear no blame for this economic crisis.

In the Third Commission--which is discussing human rights--there is [words indistinct] in which the Western countries report cases of violation of human rights in socialist countries, and the socialist countries insist they have advanced greatly on this point since the signing of the Helsinki Final Act.

Progress Reported

LD261446 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1300 GMT 26 Nov 80

[Jose Manuel Salgado report from Madrid's Palace of Congresses]

[Text] Events today at the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe have passed off under the sign of detente.

Outside the two committees on principles and security and economy and cooperation, the two prominent delegations at the conference, the United States and the USSR, have held a separate meeting which lasted about 3 hours. From this meeting viewpoints have begun to draw closer. Although the Americans are still pressing the subjects of Afghanistan and human rights and the Soviet side the question of disarmament in Europe, the tone was apparently calm, not to say almost friendly. I believe that if matters proceed as they did today the Madrid conference could be a success and that thanks for this would be due largely to the Spanish delegation; and that this might well give rise to a multinational, or rather, European, disarmament conference which would lead to agreements beneficial all around. All of this, naturally, is within the framework of this conference. Both the Soviet and American delegates looked not only relaxed but even happy when they came out of the meeting, and it might be expected that dialogue of this kind might be repeated in the months to come.

The work of the committees, especially the one dealing with human rights, which did not meet this morning, will continue this afternoon.

Spain's NATO Role Attacked

LD261322 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 0700 GMT 26 Nov 80

[Text] The day's events yesterday at Madrid's Palace of Congresses and Exhibitions, venue of the CSCE, highlighted once again the different readings given to the Helsinki Final Act by West and East.

Among the speeches made in the various committees, we can note the speech by the Soviet representative in the committee on principles and military confidence-building measures. This was a singularly hardline speech, marked throughout by the contention that the military alliances must not be enlarged by the inclusion of new members. The Soviet representative, who made a vehement condemnation of possible Spanish membership in NATO and the emplacement of Euromissiles on the European mainland, repeated his proposals for a conference on disarmament.

Human Rights Progress Asserted

LD270001 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2105 GMT 26 Nov 80

[Dispatch from Madrid Palace of Congresses on CSCE]

[Text] With regard to the Second Committee, which is discussing economic cooperation, the Western countries today expressed their relative satisfaction at the exchange with the countries of the East; but they said that recently imports in the Socialist countries have diminished with consequent loss in Western exports. Moreover, they said that the sanctions imposed upon the Soviet Union for its intervention in Afghanistan have also contributed to the reduction in trade. The United States referred to its efforts and those of the Soviet Union in the last few years to acquaint themselves with their respective economies, and expressed a desire for an improvement in relations following the freeze resulting from the Afghan issue. Finally, they also discussed the subject of the entry of new members into the EEC which, according to Hungary and Bulgaria, is prejudicial; but a reply by Luxembourg spoke of how favorable it has always been when a new country joins the EEC.

Two important pieces of news at the meeting of the Third Committee on Human Rights: First, the monolithic nature of the addresses by Socialist countries has finally been broken; to date they had done no more than praise their own achievements in the sphere of human rights and avoid debate on the matter. Second, the Soviet Union has agreed to reply tomorrow to a series of specific questions raised by the Western countries. The FRG this afternoon managed to force an opening by criticizing its neighbor, the GDR, in two ways: the emplacement of automatic arms on its border and the decision taken by the GDR to increase the rate of currency exchange is to prevent speculation--and it warned its neighbor that it will not tolerate another attack of that sort.

The second piece of news from the committee on human rights is maybe the more important because it underlines the positive turn which the Madrid conference seems to have taken since this morning's meeting between the Soviet and U.S. delegations. This is the goodwill of the Soviets who agreed to reply tomorrow, as we said, to a series of questions put by the Western delegates, among them why the Soviets have set conditions for the improvement of human contacts and the improvement of detente.

The numerous addresses by speakers--13 of them--and the length of the meeting--almost an hour longer than scheduled--complete the outstanding aspects of today's meeting of the Committee on Human Rights.

FOREIGN MINISTER SEES GAINS IN FRENCH COOPERATION ON ETA

LD261553 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 19 Nov 80 p 22

[Pedro S. Queirolo dispatch: "France Will Act More Vigorously Against ETA"]

[Excerpt] Paris, 18 November--Perez Llorca has been promised an intensification of cooperation to combat Basque homeland and liberty [ETA] terrorism by the French prime minister and foreign minister in Paris. Spanish Foreign Minister Jose Pedro Perez Llorca held 4 hours of talks before and during a lunch with his French counterpart Jean Francois-Poncet in Paris today. In the afternoon, Perez Llorca called on Prime Minister Raymond Barre at the Hotel Matignon and talked with him for a full hour. The Spanish minister discussed several bilateral issues with his interlocutors--whom he found "of course attentive, of course sensitive and of course understanding"--but especially the struggle against ETA terrorism. "The visit fulfilled the aims which had been set," Perez Llorca stated at a press conference held at the Spanish Embassy this afternoon. He said he spoke to Jean Francois-Poncet "clearly, sincerely and frankly," and that he realized "if in all the bilateral issues in general confronting us with France and all matters concerning our relations we adopt a certain stance, how counterproductive that stance could be for the results to be secured specifically from the French Government."

The Spanish minister added that French cooperation on this issue, which is making not spectacular but real progress, will continue and be intensified. Apart from this issue, which took up most of the time of the talks, other bilateral and multilateral issues were broached, including the need to renegotiate the social security agreements, the fisheries issues and, last, Spain's desire to be linked with the European gas pipeline network. The two ministers "determined viewpoints" on the CSCE conference which is being held in Madrid. Among the international political issues, they also discussed the situation in Poland and the Security Council's policy.

"Specifically with respect to the struggle against terrorism, I hope that cooperation will be intensified. This is an issue in which spectacular treatment is at variance with effectiveness and discretion," Perez Llorca said. "I believe that it is now on the right path--that of effectiveness."

When it was pointed out to the minister that his prodecessor Marcelino Oreja undertook a similar demarche almost 2 years ago and was made almost the same promises, whereas, as [Interior] Minister Roson has stated, the ETA terrorist leaders remain in France, he replied that "I would not like to enter into matters of detail, because they are not my responsibility, nor do I believe that at this precise moment, when I ascertain a desire for cooperation [words apparently dropped in newspaper]. I obviously explained what the government believes and supplied sufficient information."

The Spanish minister explained both to Raymond Barre and to Jean Francois-Poncet, who expressed great interest in the issue and seem concerned about a possible spread of Basque terrorism to their territory, that terrorism is an international phenomenon which should be combated everywhere, this being the stance which Sapin adopts in all forums. He did not go deeply into the issue of the enlargement of the EEC, because Mr Perez Llorca believes that there is a Spanish minister--Mr Punset--who specializes in the issue. Perez Llorca has the impression, he said, that the timetable announced by his colleague Punset is valid not only because it is realistic with respect to the timescale but also because the Community will have resolved the problems affecting Spain's entry within that period.

REPORTAGE ON SECOND MEETING OF INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS

Gobbi Denies 'Miniagreement' Reached

NC261724 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1600 GMT 26 Nov 80

[Text] The second meeting of the inter-Cypriot talks is being held at the Ledra Palace Hotel, where discussions continue on the issues of the initial practical measures by both sides to promote goodwill, mutual trust and the return to normal conditions, as provided in point 6 of the Kiprianou-Denktas agreement.

Gobbi, the UN secretary general's special representative on Cyprus, in a statement before the session denied press reports that any miniagreement on the talks had been reached. He also said that there was common ground on two points regarding practical measures, adding that these points concern health and social benefits. Gobbi said that there was a general conception that practical measures on these points would be implemented as soon as the agreement on health and social benefits was concluded.

In reply to a question on whether the withdrawal of the Turkish troops would constitute a good step toward promoting goodwill and mutual trust, Gobbi replied that this problem was more than one of practical measures, involving other issues such as security. I believe, he continued, that we will deal with this, but for the time being we have not handled it. In reply to a question on the missing persons, Gobbi said that very positive developments were achieved during the last few days. He added that it was very probable that the last meeting of the talks' third round would be held on 10 December, before the break for the Christmas holidays.

Ioannidhis, the Greek Cypriot representative to the talks, has confirmed that both sides have agreed on some points in the area of practical measures. In reply to a question on whether these measures would be implemented before Christmas, Ioannidhis replied in the affirmative. He said that practical measures were in the interest of both communities, as they were being faced with problems due to the existing situation. However, he added, a satisfactory solution of these problems will be found in a general solution of the Cypriot problem. Onan, the Turkish Cypriot representative to the talks, also confirmed the existence of common ground regarding the initial practical measures.

UN Statement on Session

[Text] A UN statement on today's session of the inter-Cypriot talks said that the meeting discussed the issue of the initial practical measures by both sides to promote goodwill, mutual trust and the return to normal conditions, as provided in point 6 of the Kiprianou-Denktas agreement. The statement further said that both sides continued their frank exchange of views. The next meeting was fixed for the afternoon of 3 December, when the discussion of the constitutional aspects of the Cypriot issue will be continued.

Bayrak Radio Report

TA261849 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1730 GMT 26 Nov 80

[Text] Another session in the current round of the Cyprus intercommunal talks was held at the Ledra Palace in Nicosia this afternoon. The negotiators discussed point six of the 19 May 1979 agreement, which calls on both sides to promote goodwill, mutual confidence and the return to normal conditions.

Speaking to reporters before the meeting, the Turkish Cypriot negotiator, Mr Onan, said he had put forward the Turkish Cypriot proposals on the matter in the last two sessions and now he hoped to hear the views of the Greek Cypriot side. In reply to a question, he said that there were certain common points on this issue. In reply to another question, he said he would be going to Geneva next month in connection with a meeting concerning the issue of missing persons.

The Greek Cypriot negotiator, Mr Ioannidhis, said today's topic on the agenda was of some concern for both sides because both communities face problems owing to the present situation, but he added that a satisfactory solution to these problems would be found in an overall settlement of the Cyprus problem.

The UN secretary general's special representative in Cyprus, Mr Gobbi, said in reply to a question that the withdrawal of all foreign troops from Cyprus involved other matters such as security. He said the issue was more than a problem of practical measures. Mr Gobbi also said that there was some common ground on the issue of practical measures and that they were proceeding on this issue, taking small points of agreement at the beginning in order to try to cover more ample area in the future. He added that some agreement had been reached on social benefits. He said he expected a recess after the end of the present round of the talks on 10 December.

A communique issued at the end of the session said the two sides had continued their frank exchange of views on the subject. It said the next meeting would take place on Wednesday, 5 December, and will deal with the constitutional aspects of the Cyprus problem.

[Text] The secretary general of the Turkish Foreign Ministry, Mr Gurun, left for Ankara today at the end of a 5-day official visit to the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus. Speaking before his departure, Mr Gurun said that the visit had been very beneficial for him and he had been able to tour the different parts of the Federated State. He stated that during his stay he had been received by President Denktas, the president of the legislative assembly, Mr Korhan, and the prime minister, Mr Cagatay. Asked whether there had been any meeting on the current Cyprus intercommunal talks, Mr Gurun said that there was no connection between his visit and the intercommunal talks but that the subject had also been discussed in his talks with Federated State government officials.

Asked about reports of a minideal for a solution of part of the Cyprus problem, he said that he had learned of such a proposal from the newspapers and that he had no other information apart from that.

FINANCE MINISTER'S STATEMENT UPON RETURN FROM EC CONFERENCE

AT252017 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1030 GMT 25 Nov 80

[Text] Greece's benefit during the first year of its accession to the EC will amount to 10 billion drachmas. This was stated by Minister of Finance Evert who returned late this evening from Brussels where he participated in the meeting of foreign ministers of the EC member states. Evert added that in 1981 the agricultural sector and our country's regional program will be subsidized with 22 billion drachmas. Finally, the minister of finance said that the size of Greece's contribution to the Community budget has not yet been determined but it is certain that our country will gain by an excess of 10 billion drachmas.

Mitsotakis' Comments on Meeting

AT271145 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1930 GMT 26 Nov 80

[Text] Foreign Minister Mitsotakis returned from Brussels this afternoon after representing Greece at the EEC foreign minister's conference which met 24 and 25 November. Referring to the percentage of EEC allocations to Greece from Community regional fund resources, he said the question was referred to the Council of the Permanent Representatives which will examine it and present it to the next foreign minister's conference to be held in Luxembourg 15 and 16 December. Mitsotakis said the compromise proposal of the Presidium of the EEC for 13 percent did not meet with Greek approval.

Mitsotakis stated that Greece will attend the European Council, made up of heads of state of member countries. due to meet in Luxembourg on the first two days of December. Greece will be represented by Prime Minister Rallis and Mitsotakis. A written invitation was already sent to the prime minister by the chairman of the Council.

STATE BUDGET FOR 1981 PRESENTED TO CHAMBER

AT271130 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1930 GMT 26 Nov 80

[Text] Finance Minister Evert this evening presented the 1981 state budget to the Chamber of Deputies. The government, Evert stated, proposes to the Chamber to hold the budget debate between 19 and 22 December. The bill on taxation easing measures will also be presented to the Chamber at this time. This bill, however, will be debated after the holiday recess.

In relation to previous budgets, the 1981 budget is the first, after accession to the EEC, to incorporate Greek payments and receipts to and from the Common Market. The clear Greek surplus for 1981 from transactions with the European Communities is estimated at 10.5 billion drachma.

The regular state budget is balanced in the amount of 357.3 billion drachma. This is 24.3 percent higher than the level of the 1981 budget.

The state investments budget presented to the Chamber this evening provides for projects in the total amount of 94 billion drachma, or 54.1 percent higher than in 1980. The revenue in the regular budget is estimated at 127.5 billion drachma from direct taxation and 280.7 billion from indirect taxation. The remaining revenue will be derived from other sources.

On the expense side, special emphasis is given to improved equipment for the armed forces and to satisfaction of basic social needs such as education, health and social insurance. Agrarian subsidies, the greatest proportion of which will be covered from Community sources, are considerably increased.

The main allocations of the state investments budget are earmarked for projects in the following sectors: 9.1 billion for communications; 8 billion for education; 8.6 billion for agriculture and land improvement projects; 4.9 billion for industry and energy; 10.9 billion for frontier and nomarchy projects; 2.5 billion for projects in Athens; 2 billion for Thesalloniki projects; and 400 million for aid to north Greece flood victims.

PAPANDREOU IN ROME INTERVIEWED ON ELECTIONS, NATO

AU262016 Rome ANSA in English 1945 GMT 26 Nov 80

[Text] Rome, 26 Nov (ANSA)--Andreas Papandreou, the leader of the Greek Panhellenic Socialist Movement, confidently predicted an overwhelming victory at the polls in the next autumn's general election for his alignment and spoke of Greek Socialists' opposition to NATO and the European Community in an interview published in today's edition of the Rome daily, "IL MESSAGGERO".

"In the coming elections," Papandreou affirmed, "the Socialists will not only come away with a relative majority but are likely to win an absolute majority. In that case, we will form a single party government."

The Socialist leader, whose party took 30 percent of the vote in the 1978 election, then declared that "the present government is in crisis and when things are going badly the forces in power begin to bicker among themselves, as is happening in Italy."

Addressing himself to the Socialists' stand against the entry of Greece into the European Community, an act slated to take place on January 1, Papandreou explained that his nation would enter into a special relationship with the European Nine, along the lines of ties between the EEC and Yugoslavia.

As regards relations with the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, Papandreou said that the Greek experience "is unique in Europe" for three reasons.

He identified these three reasons as: "the present partition of Cyprus is the work of NATO; the dictatorship which held sway in Greece for 7 years was the work of NATO" and the alliance's operations which consistently favor Turkey.

"The Greeks are tired of NATO," he said and added, "what has happened in Greece is unimaginable."

By way of explanation Papandreou declared that, "when we were a part of NATO we did not have the means to come to terms with possible situations like the Turkish occupation of Cyprus.

"In the 6 years since we left the organization, we have acquired the means for coping with these situations.

"Isn't all this an absurd paradox?" he concluded.

Delegations Reach Agreement

TA271823 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 27 Nov 80

[Text] It has been announced that an agreement has been reached on various subjects with the EEC delegation that is visiting Ankara. A statement by the Information Directorate General of the Foreign Ministry says that preliminary work has been completed on a 30 percent reduction on customs for Turkish agricultural products imported by the EEC countries beginning in January 1981. This will be the first phase in the gradual lifting by 1986 of all customs on Turkish agricultural products exported to EEC countries.

The legislative changes that EEC countries will have to make to grant social benefits to the Turkish workers employed in these countries were also discussed during the talks.

The issue of resuming economic and technical cooperation between Turkey and the EEC was also taken up during the talks. An agreement was reached for the activation of the $105 million special EEC cooperation fund to be extended to Turkey as a 2-year grant to be used primarily in energy projects.

During the talks it was also decided to speed up discussions on a $840 million EEC loan to Turkey for a period of 5 years beginning in 1981.

A statement issued at the conclusion of talks between the Turkish and EEC delegations said that the visa requirement imposed by certain EEC countries on Turkish citizens contradicted the spirit of partnership relations and the Community's final goals.

During the discussions which lasted 3 days, the EEC delegation has headed by Pierre Duchateau, the Community's director in charge of relations with Turkey, while the Turkish delegation was led by the economic affairs aide to the Foreign Ministry secretary general, Rahmi Gumrukcuoglu. During his stay in Ankara, Duchateau was received by State Minister and Deputy Prime Minister Turgut Ozal, Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen, Industry and Technology Minister Sahap Kocatopcu, Energy and Natural Resources Minister Serbulent Bingol, Foreign Ministry Secretary General Kamuran Gurun and Central Bank Director Ismail Hakki Aydinoglu.

MILLIYET EXAMINES TRADE REGULATIONS WITH USSR

[Editorial: "Turkey and the USSR"]

[Text] Turkey is one of the few countries which knows that opening up to the world does not mean cooperating merely with the West or with the East. The best proof of this is the friendship prevailing between Ankara and Moscow since the establishment of our republic or even since the beginning of our war of independence. So long as Turkey and the Soviet Union have refrained from getting involved in regime discussions, this friendship has developed and produced results. We deem it useful to recall certain landmark dates in Turkish-Soviet friendship and cooperation in the economic field.... For example, following the signing of the first trade agreement on 21 January, 1934, the first cotton weaving factory was established. Following agreements signed between 1967 and 1980, these projects materialized: iron and steel works in Iskenderun, fibre metal plate plant in Artvin, sulfuric acid factory in Bandirma, the aluminum factory in Seydisehir and the Aliaga refinery in Izmir.

Minister of Industry Sahap Kocatopcu, who took office after the 12 September operation, is one of the persons who can best evaluate Turkish-Soviet economic cooperation. The Turkish glass industry was the first product of the fine spring atmosphere which began between Ankara and Moscow in 1957. The window glass industry was established through investment credit obtained from the Soviet Union at 2.5 percent interest. This factory exported its first products to the United States.

The Turkish-Soviet economic agreement served as a safety valve in providing relief during the economic crisis we have experienced in recent years. Thanks to the aid received under this agreement, which introduced a system of clearing the purchases of Soviet petroleum products, we not only managed to reduce to some extent our energy crisis, but also found an opportunity to include among our exports items we had never dreamed of exporting before.... Naturally, foreign trade through free foreign exchange is more profitable. No one can deny the attractiveness of the opportunities which the barter system offers, had not buying and selling been compulsory. However, the mutual trade agreement with the Soviet Union was a safety valve in our difficult days, and it turned out to be to the advantage of both countries.

Now a high-level Soviet delegation is in Ankara to explore new fields of economic cooperation. Turkey has attached importance to friendship and cooperation with the Soviet Union in every period of its political life. The importance of Turkish-Soviet cooperation, both in international and regional affairs, has always been intelligently evaluated by the administration of both countries.

No one would be opposed to accelerating the Turkish-Soviet dialogue, particularly at this time when the economy is the most effective factor in preserving international peace. From this point of view, we wholeheartedly hope that the contacts of the Soviet delegation in Ankara will develop through reciprocal visits and that new concrete projects will be taken up.

The most realistic ideology of our times is the concept of friendship that is based on peace and prosperity. Ankara and Moscow must give priority to the implementation of this common ideology.

U.S., SAUDI LOANS WILL BE AVAILABLE IN DEC

SOMALI FOREIGN MINISTER ARRIVES FOR OFFICIAL VISIT

TA271814 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 27 Nov 80

[Text] Somali Foreign Minister Abdurahman Jama Barre arrived in Ankara today for an official visit. The visiting minister was received at Esenboga Airport by Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen. In a statement at the airport Turkmen said that friendship between the two countries was based on historic, cultural and spiritual ties. Turkmen added that this visit would mark a new stage in efforts to develop relations between the two countries.

In his statement, Barre said that relations between his country and Turkey, which have a long history, are based on Islamic and brotherly ties. Barre said that his talks in Turkey would be the start of a new era of cooperation between the two countries.

Official talks with the Somali delegation will begin in Ankara tomorrow. An agreement envisaging cultural, economic and technical cooperation between the two countries is expected to be signed at the end of the discussions. The visiting foreign minister will also visit Head of State Gen Kenan Evren.

VOTCP: CYPRUS SHOULD BE PURGED OF FOREIGN TROOPS

TA261159 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 26 Nov 80

[Station commentary: "Cyprus Should Be an Island of Peace"]

Text] The intercommunal talks aimed at solving the Cyprus problem are continuing in Cyprus under the auspices of the special UN representative. The peoples of the region, peace-loving forces and democratic public opinion view favorably the continuation of the intercommunal talks.

This is natural. The solution of the existing problems between the communities living on the island without any outside interference is in the interest of the two communities and would be an important contribution to activities aimed at strengthening peace and security in the region and in the world. Therefore, one should adopt a constructive attitude toward the talks aimed at solving the Cyprus problem and complement the decisions being made with concrete and practical steps. The preace-loving forces in the region and democratic public opinion want the intercommunal talks to develop in such a direction.

There is only one path for such a development. An end should be put to the political maneuvers and increasing pressure by NATO and imperialist circles regarding the Cyprus problem. One should oppose the pressure by NATO and imperialism on Turkey and Cyprus in the wake of the developments in Iran, and should oppose the modernization of the British bases on the island, the transformation of the island into a NATO outpost, the establishment of NATO and American bases in Cyprus and the solution of the Cyprus problem in the interests of American imperialism--as has been the case regarding the Aegean problem. The American president's statement that "we have solved the Aegean problem, now it is the turn for Cyprus" reveals the real aims of imperialism. These are the criteria for progress in the intercommunal talks and the just solution of the Cyprus problem. Since an attempt to solve the Cyprus problem within the framework of NATO is tantamount to increasing tension in the region and to undermining peace, the stand of regional countries regarding the solution of the Cyprus problem is very significant. However, the pro-NATO and pro-American military dictatorship that has been forced on our people, and Greece's return to the NATO military wing, are preventing the solution of the Cyprus problem in the interests of both communities. Imperialism and NATO have now secured new possibilities to solve the Cyprus problem in their interest. To oppose the political maneuvers and [word indistinct] of imperialists, NATOites and their collaborators in Ankara and Athens and to expose their real face is the duty of all forces, organizations and countries that favor the just solution of the Cyprus problem in the interests of both communities of the island.

The Turkish Communist Party [TCP] stand on the Cyprus issue is clear. The TCP supports the intercommunal talks and believes that the two communities should determine their domestic affairs through negotiations within the framework of the UN resolutions. The TCP is opposed to any form of division on the island. The TCP wants Cyprus to become an independent, sovereign and territorially integral island of peace purged from foreign troops and bases, and is categorically opposed to any outside interference in the island's domestic affairs.

BRIEFS

TRADE FIGURES--The Turkish trade deficit is expected to reach $3.5 billion by the end of 1980, Trade Ministry officials said today. At the beginning of September, overall imports stood at $4.4 billion and exports at $1.7 billion. Federal Germany comes first in the list of countries trading with Turkey. Meanwhile, the amount of bank notes issued by the Turkish Central Bank reached 281.56 billion liras on 14 November 1980, signifying a 966.8 million lira increase in 14 days. The overall amount of banknotes in circulation was 202 billion liras on June 27, that is, 19.35 billion liras more than the figure noted at the end of 1979. FOREIGN MINISTER VIEWS VARIOUS CURRENT ISSUES

LD281523 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 21 Nov 80 p 20

[Andres Garrigo 19 November interview in Brussels with Belgian Foreign Minister Charles Ferdinand Nothomb: "Spain's Entry Into EEC of Special Political Importance"]

[Text] Brussels, 19 November--In favor of Spain's membership in the EEC and NATO and an advocate of a strong Europe allied to a strong United States, Belgian Foreign Minister Charles Ferdinand Nothomb also defended East-West detente and the Madrid conference in an exclusive interview granted to this correspondent. It is a pleasure to talk with a European minister optimistic about the present situation. While the international press was pouring ridicule on the CSCE "farce," which it dismissed as a failure from the outset, Nothomb was packing his bags, arriving in Madrid for its inauguration and solemnly proposing Brussels as the location for the next EEC [as published] session.

Nothomb's optimism reached unusual heights in his answer to a question concerning the prospects for Spain's integration into the Common Market which, as is known, do not seem very good following President Giscard's famous references to a "pause."

"Officially," he said, "the proposed date of 1983 for Spain's membership in the EEC has not been abandoned. But negotiations have to be completed and it is a fact that some member states are emphasizing the difficulties on this path. This could prompt some people to be pessimistic. However, we believe that these difficulties could be resolved more easily in 1981 and that we could reach the desired results without too much delay."

[Question] Does Belgium have any essential problems to discuss with Spain in these negotiations?

[Answer] No, we have no specific problems. On the contrary, we stress the political importance of Spain joining the EEC.

[Question] Some people believe that our integration into the EEC--which presupposes receiving European financial solidarity--must be synchronized with a sharing of defense responsibilities within NATO. What is your opinion in this regard?

[Answer] The issues of NATO and EEC membership are not connected. Having said that, if the Spanish Government requests NATO membership, obviously our response will be positive. But it is Spain which must take the decision, with full sovereignty. As far as we are concerned, we simply hope that everything proceeds under the best possible conditions....

Our Experience

[Question] In some sectors it has been said that Spain's membership in the Atlantic alliance would cause an imbalance between the two blocs into which Europe is split and would therefore disturb East-West detente.

[Answer] It is clear to us that the form of cooperation with this body that Spain would opt for could not influence "detente" and would not prevent us from welcoming Spain into the alliance if that is what it decides.

[Question] One sector of Spanish opinion hostile to NATO would prefer to neutralist or nonaligned alternatives. Do you consider this stance more constructive and consistent with the interests of peace and security on our continent?

[Answer] My only answer can be to point to Belgium's experience of neutrality in the two world wars, during which we were invaded nevertheless. My country has been a full and permanent member of NATO for over 30 years (since 1949) and we are convinced that the best contribution to peace in Europe and to our own security is membership in the Atlantic alliance.

Since my predecessor in this post Pierre Harmel launched the detente policy, we have believed that expansion [difusion] must go hand in hand with detente, but this is only effective if it takes places within a powerful and significant group and not as an isolated country.

[Question] Since Harmel's time in the sixties, detente has suffered several serious blows, such as the Soviet Union's invasion of Czechoslovakia and Afghanistan and its penetration into Asia and Africa....

[Answer] Yes, indeed, we have fewer illusions regarding the future of detente than at Harmel's time, but we are still convinced of the necessity for it. For instance, we must not underestimate the positive effect of detente in the East European countries.

[Question] Take Poland, for instance. Aren't you afraid that the Soviet Union might also intervene in Poland to crush the liberalization of the trade union movement? If that happened, what would your reaction be?

Significance of Madrid Conference

[Answer] If an East European country's domestic evolution were the object of a foreign intervention, that would be contrary to the Helsinki Act and contrary to detente. In fact, detente would no longer be possible and we could not continue along that path.

[Question] How do you view the present scale of the Soviet military threat, especially following the occupation of Afghanistan, and what kind of response do you consider most opportune?

[Answer] Cohesion among allied NATO countries is in itself a factor of stability in international relations and of deterrence with respect to the dangers created by Soviet action. And at the same time that we are strengthening our mutual cohesion, we must not spare any efforts in our contacts with the USSR on the bilateral, European and world planes. This is the significance of the Madrid conference and of the initiative which we have adopted there.

[Question] Last weekend in Libin the Atlantic youth meeting called for every form of aid to be given to the Afghan resistance. Some people cannot understand why Belgium is selling weapons to Al-Qadhdhafi's Libya, whose contacts with terrorism have been pointed out by the Belgian press, while not supplying weapons to the Afghans, who are struggling for their homeland's freedom.

[Answer] First, Belgium is not helping the countries to which it sells weapons. Or rather, it is not Belgium, but Belgian companies, which sell the weapons. Furthermore, if they did not supply these weapons, other countries would.

As for helping the Afghan resistance, we are too far away to act. Instead, we are helping Afghan refugees through the UN High Commission, just as we are helping refugees from other countries.

Our response to the invasion was to condemn it and to adhere to international measures decreed in relation to it, though it must be acknowledged that the effectiveness of these sanctions has decreased recently. Be that as it may, we are exerting continuous pressure on the USSR and at the Madrid conference we told it that it must witndraw from Afghanistan before further steps to detente can be taken.

Optimistic Regarding Reagan

[Question] Despite everything are you still optimistic regarding the Madrid conference?

[Answer] I am still optimistic because I am sure that no country wants to risk breaking off the detente process, though I do not deny that this process is far from satisfactory. Be that as it may, the first positive result of the Madrid conference is that it is taking place and that negotiations will also broach points troublesome to the USSR, such as the implementation of the Helsinki Final Act.

[Question] So will the next conference be in Brussels after Madrid?

[Answer] Certainly, and we have proposed Brussels as a possible location for this meeting in order to realize this positive wish.

[Question] In the coming months the international scene will change under Ronald Reagan's influence. How do you view the future of U.S.-European relations following his election? Do you believe that a stronger United States is compatible with a strong Europe?

[Answer] Yes, Europe has nothing to fear from a president who knows what he wants. This is positive. Now we must coordinate our stance more with that of our U.S. ally while strengthening our determination to adopt a global European strategy. [answer ends]

Finally we asked the minister about terrorism, a topic discussed last week at a conference organized by the Council of Europe. The Belgian coalition (Christian democratic and socialist) government's stance is clearcut:

"We condemn all forms of terrorism, whether motivated by private interests or by political or ideological aims. Belgium is willing to carry out greater practical cooperation on a European plane to combat this scourge."

PRC DELEGATION LEAVES AFTER SUBS SOLD TO TAIWAN

OW012055 Paris AFP in English 2036 GMT 1 Dec 80

[Text] Amsterdam, 1 Dec (AFP)--A Chinese ministrial delegation cut short its visit to the Netherlands today following the Dutch Government's decision to authorize export of two submarines to Taiwan, announced on Saturday. The submarines were to have been built by a Dutch shipyard.

Mrs Guo Jiam, Chinese deputy minister of communications, who left Amsterdam at the head of a 10-member team due to leave tomorrow, said simply that she had received orders to return to Peijing.

But Mrs Neelie Smit-Kroes, Dutch secretary of state for transport, who accompanied Mrs Guo to the airport, confirmed to newsmen that the submarine affair had hurt the pride of the Beijing authorities. Her guests' gesture had given them their first chance to express their feelings, she said.

The delegation was here to study Dutch industry's possibilities of building port facilities.

Fearing that it would affect the Netherlands' relations with Beijing, Dutch Foreign Minister Christoph van der Klaauw and some Dutch businessmen last week opposed selling the submarines to Taiwan.

The minister, who had considered resigning if he could not make his views prevail, finally decided to keep his portfolio at the insistence of government colleagues, his party and his wife, authoritative sources said.

The submarines will cost 500 million dollars.

SCHMIDT VIEWS EUROPEAN, INTERNATIONAL ISSUES

LD020234 London BBC Television Network in English 2010 GMT 1 Dec 80

[Interview with FRG Chancellor Schmidt conducted by David Dimbleby in Bonn "a fortnight ago"]

[Text] [Dimbleby] Today the most powerful leaders in Europe met in Luxembourg, the first joint discussion of the EEC's countries for 6 months. The world has changed a bit since they last met. Ronald Reagan has been elected president of the United States committed to tougher resistance to the Soviet Union, and events in Poland have shown that Eastern Europe remains a volatile and potentially unsettling neighbor for Western Europe. One of the key influences in framing Europe's response to this is the chancellor of West Germany, Helmut Schmidt, just reelected for another 4-year term in office. Because of his experience as the West's closest neighbor to Eastern Europe, his judgments on Soviet thinking carry particular weight. When I talked to him I asked first whether he welcomed the prospect of the United States taking a tougher stand with the Soviet Union:

[Begin recording] [Schmidt] I am not as much given to toughness, I am given to steadiness, to steadfastness, to calculability and to clarity, and I think there will be an improvement on these fields all over in the West, not only in the United States.

[Question] But I mean is it sensible, for instance, for America now to be committed to the renegotiation of SALT after all the talks that went on, after that agreement was reached. Is it sensible?

[Answer] Yes, obviously it is inevitable.

[Question] Do you approve of it?

[Answer] I said it is inevitable, and then you know that the main thing is that the SALT process has to go on. I am fully in agreement with what President-elect Reagan said so far. I trust that not only Peter Cohen but also Prime Minister Thatcher is fully in accordance with that, and I think the Russians are prepared to accept this.

[Question] Do you feel that American sometimes thinks that European countries, particularly perhaps Germany is somewhat softer in its attitude toward Russia than the United States?

[Answer] What I detect sometimes is that foreigners, not only Americans, not always understand the fact that being a divided nation, 60 million Germans living on this side, 16 millions plus Berlin living on the other side, makes us see some problems a little more complicated than they at first glance sometimes are being looked at in other countries.

[Question] But do you mean to say that you think West Germany is specially at risk and has to pursue different policies to some extent?

[Answer] Not necessarily different policies, but certainly Germany has got specific risks, there is no doubt about that.

[Question] Does it make any sense in the nuclear era to talk about a special risk for Germany? Are we not all--England, France, United States--equally at risk if relations between the United States and Russia go wrong?

[Answer] That is right, that is right, but Britain does, for instance, not run the risk of deepening the rift between two parts of the English people, or deepening rifts between parts of the people living in Great Britain. That is the difference and has nothing to do with nuclear weapons in the first instance, but nuclear weapons can play a role too in deepening the rift.

[Question] So you would see that as far as nuclear warfare goes Germany's interests and every other country in the West are identical?

[Answer] Yes, in general yes, specifically some countries, like Germany, like Britain, might even be more endangered than others as regards medium-range nuclear weapons that do not reach the sanctuaries of the great superpowers.

[Question] Do you believe there is a possibility of a limited nuclear war?

[Answer] Well, I am not going to speculate about that, but what I do believe is that medium-range nuclear weapons if they would be used cannot mean limited nuclear war, it would mean sheer destruction; nothing would be left. I would not call this limited only because the two sanctuaries of the two superpowers might be left out. So it is a strategic question, it is not a question of limited war. And I was one of those in the world who in the first instance asked that there be equilibrium as regards medium-range weapons, as well as regards hitherto so-called strategic weapons which hitherto only meant weapons that could reach over the Atlantic or better to say over the North Pole into the sanctuary of the other superpower. I think there we have a parallelity of interests of Britain for instance and France and Germany. The real difference being here, being that Britain and France are nuclear powers themselves which we are not and don't want to become.

[Question] How do you feel about the growing movement in Britain against cruise missiles, for instance, and indeed the growing movement against nuclear weaponry at all and in favor of unilateral disarmament?

[Answer] I do not believe in unilateral disarmament for one second; I think that is a dangerous idea.

[Question] And the deployment of cruise missiles?

[Answer] I think that if the Soviet do not agree, if they do not agree to a limitation of their medium-range weaponry it is inevitable that in order to maintain the equilibrium of potential, it is necessary that equivalent weapons are being put into Western Europe, although I would favor that in the continued SALT process one comes to an agreement by which this medium-range potential is being limited on both sides of the equation. The ideal case would be to limit it to zero on both sides, but not on one side only.

[Question] Are you concerned that the leadership of your brother party in Britain, the Labor Party, has now passed into the hands of someone, a long-term unilateralist and supposedly against the deployment of cruise missiles in Britain under any circumstance?

[Answer] Well, I would like not to interfere in domestic affairs in Britain. The partner I have to deal with is the British Government, it is Prime Minister Thatcher, and I have the feeling we are not really differing basically in our views, on the contrary, I have the feeling of being on the same tracks.

[Question] It now seems it is reported that here in Germany you may not be able to meet your increase in military expenditure in NATO, the 3 percent target that was set, and it seems that in Britain that subject is also under discussion. Is it, would it be a dangerous turn for NATO if that 3 percent increase that was agreed on could not be met?

[Answer] We have reached the target in the past, and we will reach all the targets of NATO to which we have committed ourselves also in the future. I hate this talk, I must tell you. I am fed up with it. I have heard last year, I have heard it the year before that, I will hear it obviously every year again in the future, but I want to see somebody prove that we have not fulfilled our commitments.

[Question] Are you concerned that NATO is weaker than she should be?

[Answer] Not really, not really. You know I have been a member of the international defense community now for more than 20 years, and I have heard this perennial talk about the crisis of NATO over the decades again and again and again. It is sort of a habit of military commentators in NATO circles or generals for that matter, yes, especially journalists or news media. One cannot discount it out of hand every time, you have to look into specific complaints and if they are proven right you have to do something about it. But this generalizing talk about the crisis of NATO, I think it is ridiculous.

[Question] You sit down and negotiate directly with the Russians. Do you think that Russia is genuinely and understandably nervous about the West's military strength? Is there genuine fear that you come up against?

[Answer] I think that there are some people in Moscow who are afraid of American strategic capability and secondly, which astonishes me again and again, afraid of the capabilities of the German conventional army, but having said so I think that the Soviet Union is not in fear of being overwhelmed militarily. My feeling is that the Soviet leadership either already is in the process, or will very soon get into the process of reappraising their interests in the world scenery of change whether in Africa, whether in the East-West relations.

[Question] You think they are going to change their views?

[Answer] I do not know. I think they have to reappraise their situation and their interests.

[Question] In the light of what?

[Answer] In the light of all these crises which are occurring at one time in 1980 and 1981, also in the light of the economic difficulties they themselves and some of their clients have led them into. They obviously did not understand that previously, that for instance the People's Republic of Poland by way of the world economic crisis might lapse into a bad economic crisis which obviously they are in today. This is a new phenomenon for communist planners, and it is not only Poland, Poland is only the country which is in the focus of the public media of the West right now. They have economic difficulties in the other countries themselves. They have got economic difficulties in the Soviet Union. They have spent much too much of their GNP over the years for military purposes and too little for the well-being of the consumers in the Soviet Union. I have the feeling that they have to alter that course, and before they really basically alter their economic course they will have to evaluate the military situation. I think if they evaluate their situation correctly, they will have to come to the result that they have to spend less money for defense. Whether they really will arrive at that decision I do not know. I do not wish to speculate, but one can be hopeful to let them arrive at that decision by the continuation of the SALT process, of the CSCE process in Madrid and the MBFR process.

[Question] Those economic strains you talk about have led to the upheavals in Poland for instance. Would you like to see the West in general do more to encourage greater freedom in Eastern Europe, such as the free trade union movement in Poland? Do you think the West should do more to help those people?

[Answer] Well, Mr Dimbleby, I think the West has to abstain from any interference into domestic affairs, which we have done, you have done, the British, the French, the Germans, the Americans. On the other hand, the CSCE process and the charter of Helsinki certainly have had a great impact in a number of East European countries, helping to bring about a little more individual freedom for quite a few people, and in this way I think that the continuation of the Helsinki process is very necessary.

[Question] But don't you think if Russia can intervene in Angola or in the Horn of Africa, why shouldn't the West intervene in Poland or in Afghanistan, perhaps, helping the people who are opposed to the Russian influence?

[Answer] The West certainly has the right to help financially or materially, exporting goods, maybe even weapons. The question is whether it is wise, and this question will have to be answered from case to case on the merits of each case. I could not give any general answer, but I think that the enormous pressure, for instance, of all the more than 30 Islamic countries against the Soviet Union after the invasion of Afghanistan has taught them a lesson, and such lessons are advantageous and necessary and ought to be strengthened.

[Question] Do you believe there is a real threat of a Russian invasion of Poland?

[Answer] I would not like to answer that one, but I would like to come back to a joint statement which the French President Giscard d'Estaing and I myself made 10 or 9 months ago after the invasion of Afghanistan. I think that if such a presently hypothetical event should take place, talking in terms of hypothesis, it would change the world basically. It would be a different world afterward.

[Question] It was not a different world after the invasion of Czechoslovakia?

[Answer] Well, I would stick to my statement.

[Question] What do you think the reaction would be?

[Answer] I would like speculation to be left to journalists rather than to responsible political leaders.

[Question] You said, Chancellor, 3 years ago when you were in London, that you congratulated Britain's Labor government and said it was succeeding in fighting inflation, it had come a long way and the outlook was good.

[Answer] It was at the time. The inflation outlook was good at the time.

[Question] Do you still believe the outlook is good for Britain?

[Answer] I think that the British Government is fighting a very stiff fight against inflation. It was obvious that in the beginning that it had to become a little worse until it could become better. It is a hard fight, it is a great difficulty, it is a great complexity of questions that you have to solve. You know any country has economic difficulties right now. That stems from the economic situation of the world economy. In a way Britain is better off than anybody else in Europe with the exception of Norway. Britain and Norway are the ones who have your own oil, you do not need to buy oil abroad; therefore you do not have a great gap in your balance of payments, so your output conditions are much better than those of Italy or France or Germany.

[Question] But you obviously approved of the way that the battle was being fought 3 years ago. Do you approve of the way that it is being fought now? Are the policies right?

[Answer] I think that in the attitudes of entrepreneurs, industrialists in Britain, trade unions, trade union leaders in Britain, something has to change. In both these main groups something is changing already, but a different change is being required, at least it seems so from the outside.

[Question] During the recent election campaign you actually said that your oppenent, Herr Strauss, that he seemed to want to be a German Thatcher. You said: I trust he won't import English inflation, English unemployment in Germany.

[Answer] I said then and Strauss himself had said this and I just quoted him.

[Question] It is suggested that you did not approve of Mrs Thatcher's policy.

[Answer] No, I did not approve of Mr Strauss.

[Question] Do you foresee a time when Britain will be strong again in Europe and able to take a role at present played bv France and Germany?

[Answer] Well, I hope that Britain will be able to play a strong role in Europe. I think it is necessary.

[Question] You think it is a long time off?

[Answer] It is difficult to tell for me; it depends on the basic attitude of the British nation, the basic attitude of the British nation vis-a-vis Europe.

[Question] Which at the moment seems to be almost universally hostile?

[Answer] Right, not including the government itself, but otherwise I think you are not so very wrong.

[Question] And does that worry you?

[Answer] Yes.

[Question] Why?

[Answer] Well, Europe cannot exist with having members in the EEC who do not like to remain to be members.

[Question] Do you think there is a possibility Britain might withdraw from the EEC?

[Answer] That possibility always has been in the wings. I hope that we need not take it seriously.

[Question] What would the effect be on Europe, if that did happen?

[Answer] Well, Europe certainly could go on without Britain being a member of the EEC. Europe was going forward in times at which Britain had not been a member, but it would not be good. It would not serve the purpose of a unified European position, a unified Eureopean policy vis-a-vis the rest of the world, and I guess it would not be good for Britain. [end recording]

GENSCHER URGES EUROPEAN RESTRAINT ON POLAND

LD011450 Hamburg DPA in German 1346 GMT 1 Dec 80

[Text] Bonn, 1 Dec (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher has called on the European states not to interfere in Polish affairs.

In a Deutschlandfunk interview circulated by the FDP in Bonn Genscher today pointed out that with regard to the events in Poland the Federal Government was exercising "extreme restraint," but it also expected "that all other states in Europe, all the signatory states of the Helsinki Final Act, exercise the same measure of restraint for it must be a matter for the Polish people and its leadership to decide its own affairs, to seek its own path to the future." Genscher stressed that no state had the right to interfere here.

GENSCHER INTERVIEWED ON FOREIGN, DOMESTIC POLICIES

DW011608 Frankfurt Hessischer Rundfunk Network in German 1030 GMT 30 Nov 80

[Interview by reporters Middledorf and Purwin with Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher; place not given--recorded]

[Excerpts] [Question] Mr Federal Foreign Minister, in the debate on the government statement, the opposition has offered cooperation in matters of German policy and foreign policy. The federal chancellor and you have reacted very moderately, I would say. Helmut Schmidt asked whether the offer depended on some mood or whether it was a policy. You said with quite some restraint that the speech by opposition leader Kohl had remarkable features with regard to certain points. That does not sound very enthusiastic to me. Do you fail to believe in cooperation because of your past experience? You as the foreign minister ought to grab the opportunity particularly quickly.

[Answer] I believe that one can say first of all that for the first time the opposition has accepted its role as an opposition. In other words, it does not consider itself emotionally as a government party unjustly kept from its role, but as an opposition in the democratic movement to and fro between the government and the opposition. That is a gain not only for the opposition itself, but also for the functioning of our parliamentary democracy.

As regards the foreign policy field, I hope it will result in the fact that we will not have to deal with dogmatism and with the attempt to bring up decisions of the past for new discussion. I said therefore for good reason that the speech by the opposition leader was remarkable with regard to many things he said and many things he did not. I believe that a new beginning was made here. I welcome that very much. You know that I have always said that particularly in matters of foreign policy it can only be a gain for our country if agreement which exists in various fields is not kept quiet or intentionally covered up but is made obvious. This does not rule out a very frank discussion of existing differences of opinion. As regards the opposition's willingness to have constructive cooperation, it can reckon with equally constructive cooperation on the part of the Federal Government.

[Question] This is, so to speak, the theory of cooperation, Mr Genscher. What does the practice look like? What do you expect there?

[Answer] I think one must probe the various foreign policy fields first. It is obvious that agreement exists in matters of alliance policy and European policy. It is also correct that we have the support of the opposition with regard to our suggestions in the fields of arms control and disarmament policy. The federal chancellor stated correctly with a view to the treaties with the East concluded by the social-liberal coalition that more has been said in the debate with regard to this field than merely pointing out that treaties must be adhered to. The intention of the opposition was clearly expressed not merely to respect these treaties, but to exploit them. We can only hope that the statements made by the opposition leader will be widely supported by his party, and that they will have an effect in the practical policy of the years to come.

[Question] You do not see a special situation calling for something like a common national movement, which the recent debates almost seemed to indicate?

[Answer] I said that the important matter is the fact that the opposition has accepted its role as the opposition. That means progress with regard to all political fields. As regards foreign and security policies, two fields of special importance for me, the opposition demonstrated that it did not want to fight the battles of the past again. Here is the beginning of cooperation, and the government would make a mistake by rejecting that. It is not only out of its own interest, but also because of its responsibility for this country that the government has the duty to exploit every possibility of cooperation with the opposition in foreign policy matters.

[Question] You were in Washington together with the federal chancellor, and you talked with President-elect Reagan, who is not yet in office. The federal chancellor made a security policy remark in connection with this visit. He said that we, the Federal Government, would strongly act for a continuation of the SALT process, meaning that Moscow and Washington ought to continue to discuss the limitation of strategic nuclear arms. He said that he came away from his talk with Reagan with the conviction that the new president thinks along the same lines. You were present. Does this mean that the Americans will conclude the SALT II treaty after all, maybe in a changed form?

[Answer] One must not cling to certain models of treaties. It is important that we returned with the impression that the new president wants to continue the SALT process.

[Question] In the government statement, or after the government statement, strong criticism has been voiced that there were not enough perspectives, that there was too much quantitative outlining and argumentation with regard to cuts and economy measures. Many citizens certainly demand that a government must develop certain aims and say what must be done. I ask you as the foreign minister, what do you expect to happen in the eighties? Will it be a decade where the industrial powers will strongly increase their armament, where the Third World will become even poorer, where wars and conflicts will take place if it does not accept that poverty, and that there will be more Vietnams or Afghanistans?

[Answer] I believe it is the task of the poltical leadership to show the prospects one has set oneself and one's policy in order to indicate the aims one wants to achieve. The eighties will be characterized by the necessity to implement partnership in our world, that is, cooperation among the states with equal rights. In other words, the striving for predominance, for rule over others, for bringing influence to bear on others cannot be continued.

We say this to the Soviet Union, which has over and over again shown the tendency to rule over others. An expression of such action, for example, is the intervention in Afghanistan and the continued presence of Soviet troops there. The world can flourish only if states deal with each other in mutual respect.

So partnership does not mean superiority of one side over the other. It means something that played a decisive role in the government statement: the establishment of a balance with the aim--and this is an important perspective of our policy--to achieve that balance on as low an armament level as possible so as not to become entangled in a terrible arms race. Only he will be successful in such efforts who makes it clear tht he is determined to do what is necessary for his own security, and that he will not be put off with the principle of hope. That was the philosophy behind NATO's dual decision of December 1979, and everyone who tries to shake one of these two parts undermines the entire decision. Only the determination to implement that decision with regard to closing the arms gap has cleared the way for taking up negotiations with the Soviet Union on the limitation of medium-range arms.

With respect to the Third World, cooperation on the basis of partnership means that the states of the Third World be included, not only formally but in fact, in our economic system, that we really open up markets to them, that we desist from impeding the process toward a new division of labor in the world and that we give these countries a chance to overcome their development problems. This can reap success only if the industrial states of the North refrain from linking their duty to help the Third World with the attempt to exert influence of a political-economic nature on the Third World, that is to say, if they respect the political independence, the political identity, the cultural identity and the economic independence of these states. When I refer to the duty to help then this means a duty toward these states but, by the same token, a duty toward ourselves. Nobody should claim to be better than he is or pretend that aid to the Third World is a sort of charity. In truth the establishment of a stable world economic system based on equal rights is something that is in the interest of the industrial states just as it is a great moral task to boot.

What is required in this connection, moreover, is that the communist states, I mean the communist industrial states, share equally in this assistance to the Third World rather than waste their resources on excessive armaments which prevent them from helping the Third World and which, by the way, force us to employ resources to this end as well--unless we achieve arms control--resources which would find better use for the hungary people of the Third World.

[Question] Is all this not proceeding too slowly? Considering the really limited successes in the implementation of such trains of thought, has the impatience in the Third World not reached a point where it tends toward an explosive intensification?

[Answer] I do share the concern which your question conveys. I am not sure whether the dramatic character of the development is realized everywhere. But definitely we would be much farther ahead in the development of the Third World if the issue of birth control were treated with due attention there, because it is a fact that the population explosion primarily in the least developed countries additionally aggravates their development. It is quite obvious that the development of the energy prices hits the industrial states hard, but it hits the states of the Third World much harder. Quite a few examples show that the entire development aid for a year is eaten up by oil price hikes alone. Therefore, I believe it is so important that within the framework of the global dialogue the question of energy policy be attributed a very high priority lest energy policy development spoil everything we are trying to achieve in helping the Third World.

[Question] Obviously the great powers are far from adopting this view. The Soviet Union has been in Afghanistan for a year now, and is staying put. It does not look as if it is planning to end its intervention. The United States on its part behaves toward Latin American states as if it were seeking political influence rather than cooperation in partnership, something that these states reject. Are we, the small Federal Republic, really strong enough to effect changes there?

[Answer] It is impossible for me to follow you in a representation of our relationship with the two great powers that might arouse the impression that this is an equal relationship.

[Question] I did not talk about our relationship but about the relationship of the big powers toward the Third World.

[Answer] You cannot mention the two big powers in one breath in this or any other respect. The United States is our ally. It shares our concepts of values as well. It is not the United States that has occupied Afghanistan, but the Soviet Union. It is quite obvious that as far as the Latin America policy of the United States is concerned, highly decisive changes have taken place in the past several years. No doubt this development will continue. It turns out--and we talked about it in Washington, too--that the view is beginning to prevail throughout the Western world which we advocate with special emphasis, namely, that we must recognize the nonaligned movement as an element of stability and that some people around here will have to take off their spectacles which they wore in the past and which conveyed a wrong picture about the nonaligned states. These countries wish to be independent. Yet independence from the East does not mean readiness to be dependent on the West, and vice versa. The more people everywhere learn this the better.

[Question] Our concept, the German concept, is based on the thesis of balance, military and political. But will we not end up in another race? To go by the slogans of the U.S. election campaign, the United States, under a new president, is to become number one again in the world, which means that a shift in forces will take place. There will be a shift of forces, and as a result of it the problem of balance will not be solved but will pose itself anew. For the Soviet Union this will mean making new decisions; it will have to close the arms gap on its part. Are we, at this moment, not in a phase in which the balance is being particularly impaired?

[Answer] Definitely not by the West. If the fact of the arms gap closure is allowed, then it is applicable to the West. Advance armament is applicable to the enormous arms efforts of the East. The United States does not pursue superiority. It has merely made it clear that it has no intention of being weaker than anybody else. This also is an offer to the East; the new U.S. administration, too, makes it absolutely clear that it does not plan to be inferior, being prepared, however, to achieve through negotiations on arms limitation and arms control the balance it desires on as low an arms level as possible. We fully endorse that stance.

GOVERNMENT CONFIRMS GDR APPROVAL OF BOELLING

LD011126 Hamburg DPA in German 1045 GMT 1 Dec 80

[Text] Bonn, 1 Dec (DPA)--The GDR has accepted and given agreement to Secretary of State Klaus Boelling, to date Bonn government spokesman and head of the Press Office, as the Federal Republic's new permament representative in East Berlin. Boelling is to take up his new post on 1 February 1981 as immediate successor to Secretary of State Guenter Gaus. Gaus was Bonn's representative in the GDR for some 6 and 1/2 years.

A government spokesman in Bonn today confirmed the granting of approval for Boelling for which the Federal Government had applied to the GDR at the beginning of November. Earlier Federal Minister for Inter-German relations Egon Franke indicated in a Deutschlandfunk interview that East Berlin had taken a positive decision on Bonn's request. Franke said: "The GDR Government reacted without difficulty to it, as is usual for this replacement or change in staff to be carried out in every respect." The GDR Government has not yet published the approval for Boelling.

SPANISH MINISTER HOLDS TALKS IN FRG ON EC ENTRY

LD282008 Hamburg DPA in German 1705 GMT 28 Nov 80

[Text] Bonn, 28 Nov (DPA)--The Federal Government is to (?support) the speedy progress of the entry negotiations between the European Community and Spain, Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher promised the Spanish minister for relations with the EC.

At the end of his 2-day talks in Bonn, the Spanish minister told journalists tonight that his country is not concerned about the month or year in which the agreed terms will come into force. Rather, what is important are "politically clear and convincing signals" by the European Community. Punset in particular stressed that the Federal Government intends to have the Spanish entry negotiations run parallel with the Community's efforts for reform of the agricultural policy.

In his talk with Minister Genscher, the Spanish minister expressed the wish for the entry negotiations with his country to be concluded by the start of 1983. Genscher thought this possible to desirable. According to Punset, the signing of the entry treaty and the ratification could take place in 1982 and 1983 respectively, which would mean the treaty coming into force in 1984.

Earlier, Otto Wolff von Amerongen, president of the German Chamber of Industry and Commerce, had promised the minister that German industry (?is wholeheartedly in favor) of Spain's entry into the EC. The Community's internal problems, above all as regards agriculture, should not be allowed to infringe upon Madrid's right to join the Common Market as a full member.

In an interview for WESTFALEN-BLATT (Bielefeld), given in Bonn, the minister said that Spain, on entry into the EC, will be establishing diplomatic relations with Israel, since Jerusalem has concluded several preferential agreements with Brussels.

PONIATOWSKI DEFENDS FRENCH POLICY TOWARD USSR

LD011651 Paris LE MONDE in French 27 Nov 80 p 12

[Report on 25 November Radio Luxembourg interview with UDF leadership member Michel Poniatowski: "Poniatowski: New Policy and New Men Will Be Needed After Presidential Election"]

[Excerpt] Mr Poniatowski stated: "Raymond Barre was the man needed by both France and the president to follow the policy of defending the franc on an open international market. What I would like to make people understand is that we are changing our system, we are going to change our system.

"After the presidential elections there will necessarily be a new situation, a new policy and new men. This is not specifically Mr Barre's problem; the president may want to keep him for a while. Sooner or later, however, there will be a change of direction and hence a change of men."

Mr Poniatowski disputed the interpretation of the Warsaw meeting between Mr Brezhnev and Mr Giscard d'Estaing, which he planned, according to which the president of the republic ate humble pie and accepted the Soviet diktat.

"What is the spirit of our relations with the Russians? First it means indicating very clearly our independence and our sovereignty and our intention to maintain that independence and sovereignty. It also means indicating our desire not to see territorial alterations in Europe or in a number of other countries. It meant indicating our strong disapproval of the occupation of Afghanistan which had occurred shortly before the meeting. However, that does not mean that we should not talk to the Russians. If you stop the dialogue with them they will turn in on themselves. They already have an extraordinary isolationist feeling.

"When you have discussions with the Russian leaders they like to show you a map and say: Look, we are encircled by the United States and Canada, by Japan and China, by the Middle East and by Europe. That is the idea which we must remove from their minds. We must strongly assert our position, but also our desire for dialogue. For if there is no dialogue then there is no chance of attaining relative detente and a move toward peace.

"If the Russians were to destroy Europe and the United States they would be alone in the face of an evolution by the whole of the rest of the world led by China, and that is what the Soviets fear most. If, on the other hand, we were to destroy the Soviet Union we would be faced with a balkanized Soviet Union and confronted directly with the developing countries led by China, and that would constitute a threat. We need each other in the future.

"If we avoid this conflict it will be by discussing things with each other. What will we discuss? Our interests, particularly oil. Moreover we will have a problem: If the Russians and Americans discuss oil distribution and the Middle East among themselves, European interests must be strongly upheld in this affair.

"Finally, I would like to say one thing of which I am convinced: If we prevent this period of tension from being turned into a period of war we will gradually, over the next 7 or 8 years, see the emergence of complementarity among the countries in the developed world, the United States, Russia and ourselves. We complement each other. In the final analysis, we have the same culture and technology. We are the white countries, and we are distinguished by different political systems, but that difference will be reduced under the shock of technology."

After Mr Carter's "ridiculous policy," Mr Poniatowski is hoping for the reaffirmation of U.S. power because what threatens the West in a period of weakness is not a military invasion by the USSR but the "finlandization" of Europe via control over raw materials and energy, military imbalance and the reunification and neutralization of Germany.

On the question of Afghanistan he added: "The Russians are busy making exactly the same mistake as the Americans. They are trying to take positions in the world; they are trying to exercise control over the rest of the world. No country, however powerful, can at present control our planet. It is a complete error of vision."

ANNIE KRIEGEL CONSIDERS REAGAN MIDEAST POLICY

LD011301 Paris LE FIGARO in French 26 Nov 80 pp 1, 3

[Annie Kriegel article: "Toward the Complex East..."]

[Excerpt] There is no indication of what the new U.S. administration's Eastern policy will be in detail. However, it has been established that it will be based on two assumptions.

The first is very general: Aside from the doubts as to the Soviet intentions which led Brezhnev to decide on certain specific operations, it is certain that the Soviet Union has deliberately drawn up an expansionist policy which it will persist in following unless the West clearly shows its determination not to tolerate it.

The second is very specific: Aside from individual stances--the legitimacy of the Israel settlements in Judea and Samaria, the validity of Jerusalem's reunification--Reagan intends to base his policy on the distinction, which he regares as crucial, between the PLO--which "nobody elected"--and the Palestinians, whose present status, even if and because it must be changed, is still the "refugee" status which is the foundation of all the existing international documents.

In these conditions the procedure which resulted from the decisions taken by the Europeans in Venice seems highly dangerous. At the time there were grounds for hoping that this procedure had good prospects provided Carter was reelected and hence had a free hand for his second and final term of office.

Since fate has crowned Reagan, a question has been raised which must be answered before any new fundamental European initiative: Is it in the interests of the Nine to immediately show an activism based on the idea of the ultimate need for a PLO state which will meet opposition from the U.S. administration in an affair which will, of course, be serious but secondary and, moreover, sufficiently complex for nobody to be sure of having a viable solution? This is undoubtedly the meaning of the questions publicly raised by Lord Carrington.

As regards the Arab world, the Iranian-Iraqi war has relentlessly underlined the irrelevance of any argument based on the exclusive principle of Islamic or Arab unity. The disparate and dispersed group--Syria, Yemen, Libya and the PLO--which the Soviet Union, for want of more reliable supporters, had made the spearhead of its political penetration of the Near East, has, in particular, been forced by its powerful protector to show Iran and not Arab Iraq and essentially revolutionary solidarity which is bound to damage the PLO since the PLO demands solidarity on the sole basis of membership of the Arab nation.

Hence the return to the card table of King Husayn and the "Jordanian solution" which, alongside the "autonomist solution," is again taking its place in the limited range of probable solutions to the Palestinian question.

PCF'S FITERMAN SUPPORTS MARCHAIS CANDIDACY

LD011259 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 11 Nov 80 p 3

[Text] [PCF Politburo member] Charles Fiterman was in Nantes on Sunday at the PCF festival during which he spoke and answered journalists' questions. In particular he stated:

Francois Mitterrand recently announced his candidacy ahead of the timetable he set himself. I believe that the echo which Georges Marchais' candidacy is encountering and the success of all the initiatives in which he is participating are undoubtedly connected with the fact that the PS first secretary has set things in motion. To use cycling terminology, I would say that George Marchais' start has forced Francois Mitterrand to abandon his "balancing." However that may be, his decision will not cause much excitement in the country. He has already been a candidate twice, and been beaten twice.

And, above all, Francois Mitterrand is the man who, in 1977, took the responsibility of reneging on the commitments of the joint program, of denying the Communists their place in office, as he confirms in the book which he has recently published, of breaking the Union of the Left and, ultimately, of embroiling the latter in defeat. He is now pursuing and aggravating this disastrous orientation by making the PCF the privileged target of his attacks.

Those who truly want change will turn not in his direction but toward Georges Marchais....

In fact, along with the PCF, he favors all the struggles against unemployment, the high cost of living, business closures and the downgrading of the resources possessed by schools, housing, health and research.

He is proposing daring social measures corresponding to what the working people and their families expect. Furthermore, he is not content with vague promises. He indicates the indispensable means for change: the attack on privilege, discrimination against capital, and the taking of money from where it is, among the profiteers.

Finally, he is calling for the construction of a new, more solid and more durable union by giving priority not to summit agreements but to union in the struggle of the working people themselves, to the development of their determined support for indispensable reforms and to the strengthening of the PCF's influence and capacity for action.

This is why the working people and all those who are suffering as a result of the present policy can believe Georges Marchais when he speaks of change. With him they are assured that the fight will be waged to the finish and that commitments will be kept.

By rallying around the Communist candidate they will be seizing the key to change. The more numerous they are, the more it will be possible to progress.

We Communists are prepared to accept all our responsibilities for change, ultimately, in favor of the working people, and the sooner the better.

DAY'S PROCEEDINGS AT CSCE SESSION SUMMARIZED

LD012300 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1830 GMT 1 Dec 80

[Gloria del Campo reportfrom Madrid's Palace of Congresses]

[Text] The description by the United States of the PLO as a "terrorist organization" was made today by the representative of the U.S. delegation in the middle of the CSCE plenary session. These words are exactly the same as those uttered by President-elect Ronald Reagan some days ago when he referred to the PLO. The reference to the PLO followed a request by three countries--the Soviet Union, Yugoslavia and Cyprus--that this movement should be invited to discuss the subject of the Mediterranean, a subject which is being discussed at the conference and on which Israel and four Arab countries outside the CSCE already have made speeches.

The U.S. representative said that one would have to have a lot of imagination to consider the PLO as a country and, moreover, instead of contributing to peace--by this he was referring, we think, to Camp David--it is furthering a terrorist organization.

Again within the context of the Mediterranean, Turkey and Greece today addressed the plenary session, but they did not refer to Cyprus. Nevertheless, Cyprus did refer to its situation as a divided island, but without naming Turkey and Greece, the countries involved in its invasion.

Romania spoke of the continuation of the conference without even speaking about positive results. Once again the Romanian Government mentioned the capital, Bucharest, as the next venue of the conference.

This afternoon the committees, including for the first time the Mediterranean committee, continued their work. In this respect, the most noteworthy feature was the first committee's discussion of military subjects, the arms race, the deterioration of the situation in Europe, confidence-building measures and also a conference on disarmament, a request which already has been made by some countries.

COMMUNIQUE ISSUED ON PRIME MINISTERS' TALKS

LD291146 Helsinki International Service in English 0930 GMT 29 Nov 80

[Text] The Nordic countries plan to reinforce their cooperation in scientific research and to take steps toward a joint energy policy, according to a communique issued at the end of the 2-day meeting of the Nordic prime ministers in Copenhagen this week. A decision on a common radio and television satellite transmission system was temporarily postponed. The ministers also designated a commission to examine the possibility for Greenland, the Faarde and Aaland islands to obtain separate representation on the Nordic Council whose next meeting is scheduled to take place in Copenhagen next month. Other topics at the prime ministers' meeting were the economic outlook in the Nordic countries, the situation in Poland and the effects of the election of Ronald Reagan as the next president of the United States. Finland's Prime Minister Mauno Koivisto was accompanied at the meeting by the second finance minister, Mrs Pirkko Tyolajarvi. The host of the meeting was Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen of Denmark, and representing the other Nordic countries were Thorbjorn Falldin of Sweden, Odvar Norkdi of Norway and Gunnar Thoroddsen of Iceland.

FOREIGN MINISTRY REJECTS APN MISSILE WARNING

LD011143 Stockholm DAGENS NYHETER in Swedish 20 Nov 80 p 30

[Per Sjoegren report: "Soviet Article on Missiles Repudiated by Foreign Ministry"]

[Excerpt] The Foreign Ministry has rejected an article in DAGENS NYHETER on 11 November by Soviet APN commentator Ilya Baranikas, who warned of the consequences if NATO fires armed cruise missiles against the Soviet Union across Swedish airspace. In such a case the Soviet Union would retaliate with antimissile missiles. If a Soviet antimissile missile hits a U.S. missile over Sweden, Swedes run the risk of the warhead landing on their territory, the Russian hack warned.

To begin with, neither the Americans nor the Russians yet have the cruise missiles or the antimissile missiles Baranikas talked about. "It was a slipshod commentary with factual mistakes," Foreign Ministry spokesman Erik Pierre told DAGENS NYHETER. "It was a strange way of discussing cruise missiles. According to SALT II negotiated between the Soviet Union and the United States, the United States is allowed 2,400 missiles. Of these, around 400 will be deployed in West Europe, according to a NATO agreement." "It is extremely remarkable that the Soviet Union should claim that it has the right to shoot down missiles over Swedish territory," Erick Pierre went on. "With today's resources the Russians cannot do this. They need forward radar and forward hunter aircraft to do so." Another Foreign Ministry source told DAGENS NYHETER that the Soviet article is an example of the superpower's arrogance. It is obviously an attempt to pressure Sweden into the choir of anti-NATO voices.

GOVERNMENT DENIES KNOWLEDGE OF 'MINIAGREEMENT'

NC020643 Nicosia CYPRUS MAIL in English 2 Dec 80

[Excerpt] The Cyprus Government has emphatically denied any knowledge about a "mini-agreement" or any other backstage interim agreement about the Cyprus problem. "As far as the Cyprus Government is aware, there has been no development outside the intercommunal talks," the government spokesman said.

He confirmed that there will be an interruption of about three weeks after next week's session of the intercommunal talks and that would be used for the assessment of the situation.

It is only natural that the completion of the third cycle of the talks the government will make a general assessment of the situation concerning the future course of the dialogue, the spokesman said.

The two negotiators are to take up the third item on their agenda, which is "constitutional aspects" and they are due to hold yet another meeting on Wednesday week, December 10, to take up the fourth and last item on their agenda which is "territorial aspects."

ROLANDHIS COMMENTS ON BRUSSELS EEC COUNCIL MEETING

NC281753 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1520 GMT 28 Nov 80

[From the radio newsreel]

[Text] Foreign Minister Rolandhis, who led the Cypriot delegation at the sixth conference of the Cyprus-EEC Association Council, today received in his office editors of the press and briefed them on the agreement concluded on the second stage of the Cyprus-EEC Association. In a statement to Nicosia Radio, Rolandhis said the following:

[Begin recording] I believe that the agreement that we concluded in Brussels last Monday is very important. Effective 1 January 1981, we will move from the first stage of the association agreement to the second stage. This is a very significant transition as we break the political, economic and even the psychological barrier and enter the second stage. We pass from one room to another room, and we close behind us the door of the previous phase. This, I believe, will ultimately have tremendous importance for Cyprus, because it will allow better planning, both in agricultural and industrial production, while we proceed to the second stage and negotiate the content of the various phases. Already we have given instructions to begin the preparation of various studies so that we will ultimately be able to apply the economy and the conditions of Cyprus to the data of the second stage, particularly in the customs union. Something else which I believe will be strengthened is the economic protocol. I believe that since we are now entering the second stage there will be greater possibilities for using this protocol for the benefit of the Cypriot economy.

We should not have expected better results than what we have achieved. We must be aware of the fact that even if the customs union was offered to us tomorrow, we would not be able to accept it because a customs union is not an easy matter. The economy needs readjustments, efforts and studies. Consequently, I believe that what we have achieved is a very balanced settlement and that now we must proceed to negotiate, in detail, the content of the various time limits of the second stage so that we may ultimately find the best possible outcome for the Cypriot economy, both in industrial and agricultural production. [end recording]

VAROSHA PEOPLE TO RETURN HOME IN EARLY 1981

NC010840 Nicosia I DHIMOKRATIKI in Greek 1 Dec 80 pp 1, 10

[Special dispatch]

[Text] Athens, 30 Nov--Before spring, the people of Varosha will return to their homes under a "special status" with a tripartite presence (Greeks-Turks-UNFICYP) and a dual municipal council, comprised of Greeks and Turks.

This was deduced from information by Western diplomatic circles who expressed particular optimism these last days, and who now consider an initial agreement, which Ankara apparently will accept, as a certainty. The same circles interpret the hardening of Denktas' stand as a negotiating maneuver that aims at "maximum profit" under the guise of exchanges in favor of the Turkish side.

At the same time, the same diplomatic circles said that: There will be a rather "painful give and take" bargaining, but there already appears to be an opening to a solution for the Famagusta issue under pressure of the EEC.

Despite expedient denials, it is nevertheless a fact (and it is natural) that the Greek and Turkish Foreign Ministers Mitsotakis and Turkes [as published] will discuss certain aspects of the Cypriot issue without any obvious official commitments and that these discussions will not replace the intercommunal talks.

A fact that is fully confirmed is that: NATO will speed up its efforts to end the Cypriot issue as soon as possible and basing this on certain data that have ensued in the recent past. Toward this direction there is a specific formula which includes a special condition for the Famagusta issue, whose solution is considered as an opening that would lead to the final solution of the Cypriot issue.

ATAKOL CRITICIZES EEC DECISION ON CYPRUS

TA281826 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1730 GMT 28 Nov 80

[Text] The minister of foreign affairs and defense, Mr Atakol, has expressed the displeasure of the Turkish Cypriot community over the latest decision of the European Economic Community Commission in Brussels on the association agreement between Cyprus and the Economic Community. Mr Atakol said that the decision was completely against the Turkish Cypriot community. He added that it completely disregarded the demands made by the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus and was in line with the Greek Cypriot wishes. He stressed that a continuation of past practices would prevent the Turkish Cypriot community from benefiting from Cyprus' relations with the European Economic Community. He reiterated that such a situation would not help in the finding of a just and lasting solution of the Cyprus problem because it would worsen the economic imbalance between the two Cypriot communities.

PAPANDREOU RETURNS FROM OFFICIAL VISIT TO BRITAIN

AT291933 Athens Domestic Television Service in Greek 1900 GMT 29 Nov 80

[Text] PASOK Chairman Andreas Papandreou returned this evening at 1900 from London where he had pa' 5-day official visit. As is well known, during his stay in the British capital, ndreou had talks with British Prime Minister Mrs Thatcher, leader of the Labor Party Micheal Foot, and Foreign Minister Lord Carrington.

Remarks on Visit

AT201420 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 30 Nov 80 p 3

[Interview granted by PASOK Chairman Andreas Papandreou to TO VIMA correspondent Panos Loukakos in London "immediately after he ended his contacts in London"]

[Excerpt] Question: What are your impressions from your talks with the British Government and the Labor opposition and what is the political conclusion from your London visit?

Answer: I am obliged to admit that I am completely enthusiastic over my contacts with the Labor Party. The latest development related to its program (withdrawal from the EEC, opposition to installation of Pershing, cruise, Trident Euromissiles) are elements which bring the Labor Party very close to PASOK's positions. I could say that in its present form the British Labor Party moves within the same ideological climate as PASOK. I also attribute great importance to the changes which occurred within the Labor Party as well as to the party's positions as expressed by its parliamentary group as it now tends to develop. All these things confirm PASOK's permanent positions on the same issues. We are certain we will be able to lay down the firm foundations for a long-term close cooperation during the visit by leading personalities of the Labor Party to Athens at the end of January.

In reference to the government, this is truly the first time that a government has officially invited PASOK for a visit. In all other instances, PASOK was invited by parties. The fact that there was always a meeting with a head of state or with a prime minister is due to the fact that the government position coincided with the party position.

Over and above this, however, the welcome from the British Government was most warm and friendly. It gave us the opportunity to meet two leading personalities of the government related to British foreign policy. Discussions were friendly and basic in the sense that a series of very important questions of international immediacy were covered such as the Cyprus issue, the Aegean, Greece's reintegration with NATO's military wing, Greek-EEC relations, the Iran-Iraq clash, the events in Poland, the U.S. election confrontation and others.

The question of convergence of views on these issues was never raised during these discussions. There was simply an explanation of positions by the British Government and by PASOK. In conclusion, I believe that the visit to London, which was also attended by PASOK's parliamentary representative Yiannis Kharalambopoulos, was extremely important because the program positions of PASOK were authoritatively explained in a country whose important European position must not be underestimated.

Question: Which were the main points of interest of your British interlocutors on which they concentrated their questions?

Answer: As I mentioned in answer to your first question the interest of the British was primarily concentrated on the Cyprus issue, reintegration within NATO, accession to the EEC.

I concluded that the British Government is rather optimistic on whatever affects intercommunal dialogue and that it maintains hopes that a solution is not too far away. I did not agree with this because according to PASOK's estimates all indications prove that there is no convergence of the two interlocutors in respect to important Cyprus issues--in other words, withdrawal of Turkish troops, recognition of the right of free movement and settlement, the return of the refugees to their homes and the drafting of a constitutional charter which would guarantee the integral character of the Cyprus Republic.

Question: How do you believe the present British Government would view a possible advent of PASOK to authority?

Answer. The impression I do have, although nothing of this sort was discussed, is that the British Government, even though it could disagree with specific PASOK actions, would consider them to be the right of the Greek people and their democratically elected government. The conclusion is that it would not create any problems and obstacles to our relations.

Question: What were the views of your London interlocutors on Greek-Turkish differences?

Answer: I established that the British Government believes we overestimate the danger to Greece from the east, in other words the magnitude of the Turkish threat against the sovereign rights and territorial integrity of our country in the Aegean. At the same time--and I do not wish to refer by name to anyone of my interlocutors--they recognize that the conditions for our country's reintegration within NATO are favorable to Turkey.

Question: What are your forecasts about domestic political developments in Greece?

Answer: Our forecasts are: One--an election will be held much earlier than November and in all probability during the end of the winter and the beginning of spring. In this election PASOK will not only emerge as the first party but it will surpass New Democracy by at least 10 percent and will have an absolute majority of seats in the Chamber of Deputies. The government's economic policy, contradictory and inconsistent to date, tends to become chaotic as a result of the government's efforts to turn the climate in its favor and to deceive the people through spasmodic grants. Nothing, however, will be able to save the government from its certain sinking. The people will put an end to the monocracy of the right wing and will open the way toward the great change of which they have dreamed for so many years.

Question: Your interlocutors in London were primarily interested in PASOK's positions toward NATO and the EEC. How can these positions be summarized on the basis of what you presented here?

Answer: PASOK has stated it will request the conduct of a plebiscite from the president of the republic. The question presented to the Greek people during this plebiscite will be the option of Greek accession to the EEC or by contrast, pursuit of a bipartite agreement, of some special relation, like the one recently signed between the EEC and Yugoslavia. If, despite the recent expression of the people's will, the president of the republic refuses to proceed to a plebiscite, then the only avenue open to us will be to violate those conditions of the Treaty of Rome which clash with the economic interests of our country. For us, for PASOK, there can be no tangible national economic planning aired at a self-sufficient economic development of the country without our first being in a position to develop a specific trade policy (imports) and without our being in a position to control the movement of capital.

In reference to NATO, the position of PASOK is well known. Our experiences from an alliance which supported the 21 April dictatorship, which not only tolerated but also assisted Attila in Cyprus and which, in conclusion, supported Turkey in its illegal claims in the Aegean, are all too well known.

Two--since the disposition of our country's armed forces and the type of their armament within the framework of NATO's military wing will be directed toward the Warsaw Pact, the "danger from the north," which according to the minister of national defense has ceased to exist, it becomes very clear to all Greeks that the direct danger comes from the east--Turkish expansionism toward the west at the expense of Greek national sovereign rights - which are established by international agreements and treaties. It is truly unbelievable that the present Greek Government proceeded toward Greek reintegration within the Atlantic alliance which does not even guarantee our frontiers in the east. Consequently when PASOK forms a government it will immediately present the recent Rogers agreement to the Chamber of Deputies for the purpose of abrogating it. I would like to remind you that abrogation of such an agreement requires a simple majority. As I have stated in my Chatham House speech, even if by some miracle NATO acquired an angelic form, I reiterate, an angelic form, even if it ceased supporting Turkish expansionist claims against Greece, even if it furnished guarantees for our eastern frontiers (Aegean, islands), even if it ceased intervening in our country's domestic affairs, then, most naturally, this would not be NATO.

RALLIS CHALLENGES PAPANDREOU ON POLICY POSITIONS

AT301610 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 30 Nov 80 pp 1,3

[Excerpts] Prime Minister Rallis yesterday called upon A. Papandreou to explain his positions and policy, stressing that PASOK has no right to claim authority with deceiving slogans and by covering up its fundamental and proclaimed principles which mean nothing else than establishment of a Socialist-Marxist regime. The prime minister warned the majority opposition party that so long as it does not explain in detail to the people the significance and character of the change it advocates, then the majority front will not accept any change in our bourgeois regime through enforcement of Marxist socialism. The address of Prime Minister Rallis at New Democracy's last regional congress at the Hilton Hotel in Athens was full of severe terms in reference to the confrontation of positions vis-a-vis the opposition parties and in reference to the desire of muting differences in an effort to deal with the dangerous problems, both domestic and foreign, which threaten our country.

In this spirit Rallis called on all national forces to unite irrespective of political conflicts and called upon the youth not to cooperate in efforts to undermine its studies, an effort which unavoidably leads to national degradation.

Among other things, Rallis specifically stressed: Under the leadership of New Democracy during the 1975-1980 period, the Greek people completed achievements which are a true miracle for a small country situated in an area of international antagonisms whose recent international and domestic adventures, during the past 40 years, only created problems for it. During the last 6 difficult years, he said, our fatherland has been blessed with good fortune. It firmly pursued an upward economic course. It established the functions of a model parliamentary democracy. It kept violence outside its boundaries. It did not have to face an unemployment problem. It acceeded to the advanced society of the European Economic Community and recently it strengthened its defense position with its return to the military wing of the Atlantic alliance.

Rallis then stressed that New Democracy's opponents use distorting propaganda in an effort to identify the ruling party with "the backward and anachronistic retarded rightwing" and with the "fascist rightwing." He stressed that the New Democracy front embraces an extremely wide spectrum which starts where the fascist rightwing ends and stops where the Marxist leftwing begins. It is the party of radical liberalism.

He then condemned the orchestrated propaganda offensive against New Democracy which wants to present it as in dissolution. He attributed this offensive to the fears of the opponents of New Democracy.

The New Democracy Party, Rallis continued, has served the country responsibly and creatively ever since its establishment. Continuation of this service with a great and true change as its goal is a national demand. Rallis then stressed: "It is only our front which systematically and methodically implements change in this country. Our opponents are simply sloganeering. They proclaim the slogan for change without ever giving it any concrete context. They never define the character of the change which they advocate or what sectors it will affect, the extent to which it will be implemented nor even how much it will cost in time and in sacrifices. They know what they do not want but they do not know what they want. If, however, they want to change our bourgeois system and bring us Marxist Socialism, then we reply to them that we do not want such a change because wherever it is applied it costs rivers of sweat, privations and oppression; it sacrifices entire generations, and the only thing it achieves is to make everyone equals at the same level of poverty and lack of liberty.

"Our own front, pursuing progressive democratic tradition and implementing radical liberalism, is methodically and systematically implementing progress in a climate of stability and step by step leads to change. This is a change which elevates the country to the level of advanced Western democracies and which guarantees to everyone the right to enjoy the political, cultural, social and economic achievements of modern civilization. Consequently, we are the party which stands for true progress and fundamental change."

Referring to Papandreou's London statements, government circles at first expressed satisfaction over the new turn which PASOK's chairman undertook in his policy toward the EEC and NATO.

The same circles expressed a certain surprise over Papandreou's new position toward the Community--a position according to which the chairman of PASOK will respect only the advantages our country gets from accession to the EEC and will ignore the disadvantages.

"One could understand what would happen if other EEC countries demanded implementation of the Greek accession agreement only to the extent that it served their own interests," these circles stressed, adding that the balance of advantages and disadvantages is positive in favor of our country, in other words "the advantages far outweigh the disadvantages."

A schedule for the work to be carried out by the two countries on this project was developed. Agreement was also reached on increasing the liquid steel production at the Iskenderun mill to 2.2 million tons annually by mid-1983. When the necessary work has been completed, there will be three high furnaces at the Iskenderun mill.

COUNCIL OF MINISTERS RATIFIES 1981 PROGRAM, BUDGET

TA291546 Ankara ANATOLIA in Turkish 1537 GMT 29 Nov 80

[Text] Ankara, 29 Nov (AA)--In a meeting that began at 0930 and ended at 1745 today, the Council of Ministers approved the 1981 fiscal development plan and budget prepared by the State Planning Organization. A statement by the Press Department of the Prime Ministry says that Finance Minister Kaya Erdem will announce the details of the 1981 fiscal budget in a news conference he will hold on 1 December.

Development Program Implemented

TA301625 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1735 GMT 30 Nov 80

[Text] Ankara, 30 Nov (AA)--The 1981 program drafted by the State Planning Organization in keeping with the fourth five-year development plan was published in Sunday's Official Gazette after approval by the Cabinet.

A decree on the implementation and coordination of the 1981 program, which was approved earlier by the Supreme Planning Board, calls on government departments and agencies to prepare five-year investment programs project by project for 1982 in keeping with the goals and policies of the stability measures included in the 1981 program.

Major projects involving more than one agency will require an "implementation program", while each project should have a "working program".

Finance Minister on Budget

TA011406 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1215 GMT 1 Dec 80

[Text] Ankara, 1 Dec (AA)--The consolidated government budget for fiscal year 1981 totals 1,581.8 billion Turkish liras, Minister of Finance Kaya Erdem said Monday at a press conference introducing the draft budget adopted by the Cabinet to the press. This includes 406.8 billion tl (25.7 percent) for personnel outlays, 305 billion tl (19.3 percent) for other current expenditures, 323 billion tl (20.4 percent) for investments, and 547 billion tl (34.6 percent) for transfer outlays. Compared to estimated expenditures for 1980, the new budget represents an increase of 54 percent, the minister noted.

Anti-Inflation, Pro-Middle Class

The 1981 budget was intended as one that would curb inflation and would not allow deficit financing, Erdem said, attempting to harmonize economic stability with development.

A major goal was to "re-create the middle class" almost crushed under galloping inflation, while another major goal would be to "rally productive forces toward growth and industrialization."

Civil Service Pay and Pensions

Erdem noted the draft bill increasing the cost-of-living allowance [subsistence income exemption] in income tax calculation, and an across-the-board pay increase of 1,250-1,500 tl for all civil servants would ameliorate civil service salaries, while the coefficient of salaries would remain 25. For pensioners, there would be a 30 percent increase in pensions, plus the 1,250-1,500 lump sum added.

Foreign Exchange

Turkey's foreign exchange earnings from exports and funds sent by Turkish workers abroad could meet three-fourths of her expenditure for imports, the finance minister said.

Rate of Inflation

1980 practices had been able to curb inflation, the minister claimed, noting there had been a noticeable slow in price increases from March 1980, "if we exclude the big rise in price indices in February due to the new prices fixed in January." The rate of inflation dipped to 0.2 percent in July but the wholesale price index had risen again to 7.1 percent in October, whereupon the government had reduced the issuing of money by 8 billion tl in order to curb prices.

More Details on Budget

TA011928 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 1 Dec 80

[Statement by Finance Minister Kaya Erdem during a 1 December news conference in Ankara--recorded]

[Excerpts] I would particularly like to stress that improvements to be made in the salaries of civil servants in fiscal 1981 are based on changes we have brought to our tax policies. As will be recalled, the amendment to the income tax law which readjusts income tax payments has already been submitted to the National Security Council for approval. Through general and individual exemptions brought to taxes to be deducted from the salaries of employees and low-level income groups, their tax burdens have been alleviated to a great degree. Moreoever, an overall increase of 1,250 to 1,500 Turkish liras in the salaries of civil servants and retired government employees will be made beginning in the 1981 fiscal year. Work to this effect is being carried out in our ministry. These two adjustments together come to an average increase equal to a coefficient of 25 in their salaries. Since the present coefficient of civil servant salaries is also 25 this would mean in practice, increasing the salary coefficient to 50. I would particularly like to draw the attention of the public to this fact. To sum it up we can say that an increase of 50 percent has been provided in the net salaries to be received by civil servants during the 1981 fiscal year.

Investments in state enterprises will be made in particular to irrigation projects in the agricultural field, to hydroelectric and thermal electric power stations in the energy field, to lignite coal and oil exploration in the mining field and to expanding the capacities and improving the infrastructure of ports in the transportation field. No provisions have been made for new jobs in state economic enterprises except in very special cases. In enterprises in which there are enough employees, vacated jobs will not be replaced. Increasing productivity and decreasing the cost of goods have been assigned as major goals.

Police Casualties

TA291747 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 29 Nov 80

[Excerpt] Speaking at the cornerstone laying ceremony of the first 200-bed police hospital to be built in Turkey, Istanbul Governor Nevzat Ayaz praised the sacrifice of policemen who have been serving the country for more than a century and a half. Ayaz recalled that during the last 2 years in Istanbul alone, 44 policemen were killed and 77 others were wounded. Ayaz said that the members of the security forces deserved a hospital that would take good care of them and save their lives. Pointing out that numerous members of the security force still live in shanty towns, Ayaz said that under these circumstances one cannot expect our policemen to receive a decent health service.

Ayaz noted that the hospital would meet the needs of 55,000 servicemen and their families and that, at a later stage, facilities would be added to this health center for aged veteran policemen as well.

GENSCHER INTERVIEWED ON POLAND, PERCY MOSCOW TRIP

DW021152 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0620 GMT 1 Dec 80

[Reporter Kroenig interview with Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher; date and place not given--recorded]

[Excerpt] [Question] The test of the CDU/CSU Union's ability to cooperate with the government on foreign policy issues could well come with regard to the policy toward the East. The Polish situation is causing special concern, particularly after the latest threatening tones from Moscow with a view to today's PZPR Central Committee session.

[Answer] The Federal Government--and we agree here indeed with all the Bundestag parties--has expressed repeatedly that we do not want to interfere in Poland. We are maintaining absolute restraint in line with the commitments we have accepted in accordance with the Helsinki Final Acts. We never, however, the only ones who have accepted the commitment. We expect all other European states, all other signatories of the Helsinki Final Act to maintain the same degree of restraint. The Polish people and their leaders have to make decisions on their own affairs and seek their own path for the future. No state has the right to interfere.

[Question] U.S. Senator Percy, who was in Moscow as Reagan's unofficial envoy, said quite clearly that the Moscow people will not intervene in Poland. He had talks there particularly on SALT, and he informed you in a lengthy telephone conversation about his Moscow contacts. Was that a surprising gesture, or something completely natural?

[Answer] It was neither surprising nor something to be taken for granted. You have to know what preceded this. During our Washington visit, the federal chancellor and I had a thorough talk with Senator Percy, particularly with a view to his Moscow visit. He told me that he would call me after his return. I think it was important that this visit has taken place, and one can term the visit as extraordinarily significant.

[Question] It contradicts, at least regarding the atmosphere, reports that have reached Bonn via the press about strange irritations within the Reagan camp that arose over the meeting between Schmidt and Reagan.

[Answer] I believe Mr Boelling, the government spokesman, has said everything that is necessary in this respect. One should not overrate this event. One ought to much rather assess the contents of the gesture by this very important U.S. senator who is going to be the chairman of the Senate's Foreign Relations Committee.

[Question] Does his comment on SALT II make you optimistic?

[Answer] No, I think you should listen to what he said in public. It indicates that one will naturally continue to talk about arms control and arms limitation.

[Question] So there is no reason for exaggerated optimism?

[Answer] I believe that the visit was a considerable contribution to a realistic assessment of the situation by the Soviet Union, which now knows very exactly or at least more exactly than before about the approaches the United States will take--approaches expressed in the country's election result.

FRANKE ON DEVELOPMENTS IN RELATIONS WITH GDR

DW021230 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0549 GMT 1 Dec 80

[Correspondent Kroenig interview with Federal Minister of Inner-German Relations Egon Franke in Bonn; date not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] According to a report by the journal DER SPIEGEL, the Federal Government has been simultaneously active and dogged on the inter-German level just below the threshhold of obvious and official contacts. DER SPIEGEL reports in its 1 December issue that the inter-German dialogue will be resumed only if the GDR fulfills a precondition, namely exempting pensioners and young people from the new high rate for the minimum currency exchange per day. Is the Federal Government really waiting for a favorable signal from East Berlin?

[Answer] What do you mean, is the Federal Government waiting? No, it is our view that any chance that offers itself ought to be used for resuming talks which may end up in negotiations, so as to start things moving which may well concern us jointly. This includes, of course, discussing issues which concern us greatly. In the context of the developments concerning the increase in the minimum exchange rate, this is a very essential point, of course. After all, the Federal Government has made it clear that it will not accept this increase without protest, but that it will keep endeavoring to have it changed, taking all steps necessary to contribute to this end, namely, achieving a somewhat tolerable settlement.

[Question] Is what you mean by somewhat tolerable an arrangement that might provide for the exemption of nonearners such as pensioners and young people from these new, high mandatory exchange rates?

[Answer] This is it, exactly.

[Question] Are there any favorable signals from East Berlin indicating that East Berlin has understood this condition raised by Bonn?

[Answer] Well, if they interpret this as a precondition it will, of course, be difficult to make headway together; yet the result ultimately must be that. After all, we had a similar development some time ago. It was followed by periods--weeks, months--in which serious talks and negotiations were held. In the end the result was a certain correction in line with the ideas which we on our part have advanced again this time.

[Question] It is striking that Klaus Boelling, the government spokesman, has been quickly and readily accepted by East Berlin as the successor of Bonn's permanent representative in East Berlin, Gaus.

[Answer] Well, I did not doubt that for a minute, because this personnel solution is a matter which the Federal Government has decided on its part and, in so doing, proceeded along the lines customary in such cases, initiating the formalities with the GDR. The GDR Government reacted without any difficulty, as is customary, so that this personnel change can be carried out.

[Question] People are also talking about an unofficial, semiprivate GDR visit by Willy Brandt together with French Socialist chief Mitterrand. Is this, as far as the Federal Government is concerned, a project that should be welcomed and might perhaps be helpful?

[Answer] I welcome any political activity which might contribute toward a development where meetings of responsible people from the area involved might lead to political developments. I am very gratified indeed at seeing responsible politicians undertaking trips to open talks with responsible politicians of the area visited. This may well contribute toward developments.

In any event, it is better than loud statements which are intended to demonstrate strength, without the parties involved even having talked with each other. I advocate any negotiation, any talk, any meeting, because it is in this way alone that political problems can be solved.

[Question] But in any event, it is the objective of the Federal Government to achieve as soon as possible the contact, the talk, between Chancellor Schmidt and General Secretary Honecker as originally planned?

[Answer] Yes, the Federal Government did declare from the outset that what matters to us is not aggravating delimitation but seeking an opportunity time and again for entering into talks with each other.

[Question] Could we say, as a sort of summing-up, that at the moment the entire climate has turned a bit more friendly and less frosty between East Berlin and Bonn?

[Answer] This is the case. I believe that as far as we are concerned there is strong interest in doing everything that needs to be done to be on somewhat friendlier terms with each other.

DIE WELT REPORTS SECRET FRG-GDR PRISONER EXCHANGE

DW021204 Bonn DIE WELT in German 2 Dec 80 p 2

[Werner Kahl article: "East and West Exchanged Their Prisoners Under the Protection of Darkness"]

[Excerpts] Bonn--Under strict secrecy, agents of the governments in Bonn and East Berlin have initiated an exchange of prisoners at the Hessian-Thuringian border zone; the exchange is to be wound up around Christmas. In return for the release of three political prisoners from "GDR" prisons, one of whom had already served 22 years, the Federal Government deported a top communist spy across the Herleshausen/Wartha border crossing point.

To keep the lid on the inter-German secret action, the exchange of agents took place shortly after nightfall at the checkpoint of the village of Herleshausen. There, East Berlin lawyer Wolfgang Vogel, East-West negotiator of many years and authorized representative of the chairman of the "GDR" Council of State, Erich Honecker, awaited his Western counterpart, Juergen Stange. The West Berlin lawyer has been involved in humanitarian actions in divided Germany for two decades now. The exchange of prisoners a few days ago came so suddenly that Stange had to interrupt a rest cure in the Allgaeu region.

DIE WELT learned at the week's end that Bonn and East Berlin will continue their humanitarian actions in 1981 irrespective of their frosty relations. These include, first of all, family reunions and the purchase of the freedom of political prisoners in "GDR" prisons. For the opponents of the SED regime whose freedom has been bought since the building of the Wall, Bonn has made material concessions worth about DM1 billion that have gone into East Berlin's coffers.

The last load of prisoners, by which the agreements for 1980 will have been fulfilled, is expected to arrive at the Giessen emergency reception camp next week.

FOREIGN MINISTER CITED ON DETENTE, TIES WITH U.S.

LD031051 Paris LE MONDE in French 26 Nov 80 p 4

[Text] "I no longer like the word detente very much since the events in Afghanistan and the blow which they dealt to East-West relations," Foreign Minister Francois-Poncet said on French Television Channel 1 on Monday, 24 November. "I am not entirely sure that this word is still a good description of the relations we have with the East as a whole."

The minister then spoke about the "all-European" Madrid CSCE meeting and added: "I believe that dialogue should have a place even when it is difficult, provided it is not conducted in a complacent way."

The following are the other main passages from Mr Francois-Poncet's statements:

United States: "A more confident, stronger United States which will, therefore, be a stronger ally for us," must "treat Europe as an equal partner. The Americans must not think they are in another decade. This is 1980 with a Europe which has rebuilt its forces, which counts in the world because its diplomacy is taking more definite shape each day."

Britain: With regard to the "special relations" with the United States which the UK foreign secretary said he wants in his statements to the INTERNATIONAL HERALD TRIBUNE, Mr Francois-Poncet stated: "I think that has more to do with nostalgia than with politics. It would be incompatible with the organization of Europe. However, the British Government maintains that it is European and there is no reason to doubt that assertion."

Poland: "The credits granted to Poland come back to France in the form of orders placed. By helping the Poles to overcome a very serious crisis by their own means we are consolidating the chances of peace in Europe."

The Near East: "France is possibly the only country to have a complete network of relations with all the countries in this region and we are using this advantage to develop peace, which is what counts most in this extremely sensitive region on which we depend."

LEADERS REACT TO PCP SUPPORT FOR RAMALHO EANES

Sa Carneiro Statement

LD022120 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1900 GMT 2 Dec 80

[Text] In Lisbon this evening, Dr Sa Carneiro, chairman of the Social Democratic Party [PSD], and Prof Freitas do Amaral, chairman of the Social Democratic Center Party [CDS], held a news conference under the slogan: the PCP's support for General Eanes, its meaning and consequences.

Addressing the news conference, the PSD chairman, who is also the prime minister, outlined the views of his party and the CDS views on the PCP's decision to officially support Ramalho Eanes. Sa Carneiro said:

[Begin recording] Despite various indications which have been pointing toward this for some time, the PCP's decision to lend official support to General Eanes has come as [words indistinct] and even surprising. Many would not believe that this could be possible, but the truth is [words indistinct].

The Communists prefer Ramalho Eanes. If Ramalho Eanes is reelected, this will be because the Communists support him. The Portuguese people must now seriously think about this new and very grave development. Social Democrats, centrists and Christian Democrats, monarchists, conservatives, liberals, independent socialists and all democrats in general (?are dutybound to) carefully consider from a patriotic perspective the meaning and consequences of the PCP's official support for Ramalho Eanes.

We say without any hesitation that this support is unquestionably the gravest political development in our country since the 1975 events and Goncalvesism. In our recent history, today's developments can be compared only to the support lent by the Communists to General Costa Gomes in 1975.

The Portuguese people have had the bitter experience of living under a president to the liking of the Communists. It means social (?unrest), economic crisis, disturbances in the streets--general crisis in the country.

The change in Gen Ramalho Eanes' personality and political conduct cannot have been more radical. In 1976 he was supported by the Socialist Party, the PSD and the CDS while the PCP opposed him. In 1980 his only supporter is Alvaro Cunhal, since Mario Soares, Freitas do Amaral and I have all withdrawn our support, although at different times and for different reasons.

The meaning of this is that General Eanes has no political blueprint, doctrine or program. His only desire is to cling to power. It would be hard to find another case such as this in the history of any European country in which the president of a republic, elected against the wishes of the Communists, is willing to be reelected 4 years later on the strength of Communist (?votes). This is the height of hypocrisy and personal greed. [end recording]

Further Reportage

LD030025 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2035 GMT 2 Dec 80

[Excerpts] Social Democratic Party Chairman Sa Carneiro and Social Democratic Center Party Chairman Freitas do Amaral this evening held a news conference within the framework of the Democratic Alliance's support for Gen Soares Carneiro at which they adopted a stance vis-a-vis the PCP's official support for Gen Ramalho Eanes, which they viewed as a new and surprising development.

Sa Carneiro said: Many did not believe that this could be possible, but this is the naked and crude truth, and it hits the traumatized soul of the Portuguese people with brutal force.

If Eanes were reelected, in the view of Sa Carneiro and Freitas do Amaral, Portuguese diplomacy would once again become ambiguous, and there would be the possibility of the Democratic Alliance government resigning, of the Assembly of the Republic being dissolved and of the Democratic Alliance being destroyed.

In economic terms, if Eanes were reelected the cost of living would soar, the value of the escudo would crash, wages and salaries, state pensions and family benefits would once again rise at a pace far below that of prices, rents and taxes.

Meanwhile, Gen Ramalho Eanes this evening said he did not think that Carlos Brito's stepping down in his favor could be taken as Communist support for him. In a campaign speech, Ramalho Eanes recalled that the PCP does not approve of, but in fact deplores, his policy. He, however, admitted that the PCP does not support Soares Carneiro. In his opinion, Carlo Brito's stand is tantamount to choosing the lesser of two evils.

PS APPOINTS MACEDO INTERIM SECRETARY GENERAL

[Text] The Socialist Party [PS] Executive Committee yesterday confirmed the appointment of Antonio Macedo as interim secretary general for the period for which Mario Soares has stepped down from the post. In fulfilling this post, which he will hold together with that of party chairman, Antonio Macedo will be backed by a committee composed of Antonio Esteves, Sousa Gomes and Arons de Carvalho, representing the National Secretariat, and by Eduardo Pereira, Almeida Santos and Manuel Tito de Morais, who are considered to hold stances close to those adopted by Mario Soares.

The above-mentioned committee is the result of the agreement reached between Soares and the Socialist Party National Secretariat, which according to ANOP was also ratified by the Executive Committee at yesterday's meeting, at which Salgado Zenha, Vitor Constancio and Antonio Arnaut were confirmed as members of the Political Council backing General Ramalho Eanes' candidacy to the presidency of the republic.

The Executive Committee also raised no objections to publishing the protocol signed by the PS and Eanes, although the current president of the republic should be responsible for this.

Before the meeting at the Largo do Rato headquarters Antonio Macedo announced that he would only agree to replace Mario Soares on a temporary basis if it was agreed to form and ad hoc committee to support him--which is what happened. The Socialist Party chairman nevertheless expressed the hope that Mario Soares would return to his post as soon as possible.

INTERCOMMUNAL NEGOTIATORS INTERVIEWED ON TALKS

NC022117 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 2000 GMT 2 Dec 80

[Text] In interviews carried by the TV program "Panorama" this evening, the two interlocutors at the intercommunal talks, Mr Ioannidhis and Mr Onan, referred to the progress of the talks.

Mr Ioannidhis said that although he could not say there was concrete progress in the talks, it could be said generally that a dialogue is being conducted which for the first time almost throws light on the true dimensions of the Cyprus dispute. Ioannidhis noted that we are still a long way from a Cyprus solution or from a minisolution. He dwelt on the constitutional and territorial aspects of the Cyprus issue and said that a prerequisite for a constructive dialogue on the constitutional aspect is to have concrete proposals on the territorial aspect.

Concerning the initial practical measures, Mr Ioannidhis said that these measures should assist in blunting the present difficulties and should not aim at departing from the goal being pursued with regard to the constitutional structure of the new federal republic. He went on: The Turkish Cypriot side is asking for some measures which if taken, at least at the present stage, are likely to lead to the creation of a separate situation which we will not be able to overcome and establish the new federation.

Concerning the question of Varosha, the Greek Cypriot interlocutor said that the whole issue is basically focused on the question of the area for resettlement, and the type of administration that would be in force during the transitional period from the time of resettlement until a positive Cyprus solution is found. Mr Ioannidhis stressed that according to the 19 May agreement, should an agreement be reached on this issue, this agreement will be implemented immediately.

In conclusion, Mr Ioannidhis addressed a message to the Turkish Cypriots conveying his faith in the inter-Cypriot dialogue which, as he stressed, constitutes the right procedure that could lead to a Cyprus solution. He also voiced the conviction that a lasting and viable Cyprus solution will be found, to the interest of both communities and of the entire Cypriot people.

Meanwhile, Mr Onan said that both sides are trying sincerely and with good will to find a solution and that they are both doing their best. He said: Both sides are encountering difficulties but with patience, perseverance and hard work we may be able to find a satisfactory solution for all. Mr Onan said that quite a few common points have been found at the negotiations as well as quite a few divergent points. He added that these common points may be turned into an agreement if we study them in depth and find common means. The Turkish Cypriot negotiator said among other things that conjectures offer no support and that no miniagreement has been proposed nor is there currently any question of a miniagreement. He said: We are all working toward a package deal as we initially agreed upon.

On the question of Varosha, Mr Onan said that up to now, with the exception of some common points, there is no agreement and if an agreement is reached on the [Varosha] issue, there will be a temporary arrangement until a final overall agreement is reached. He also stood for a weak central government and the expansion of its juridictions at a later stage.

OFFICIAL DENIAL OF EEC GRANT TO DENKTAS REGIME

NC031230 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 3 Dec 80

[Text] An official statement has denied reports in today's press that the EEC has granted the so-called Turkish Cypriot state $6 million credit for irrigation and sewage purposes in occupied Cyprus. The statement adds that what had been agreed within the framework of the financial protocol between the European Community and the Cypriot Government was the financing of the second phase of the Nicosia sewage system, and that the sum of $6 million will be granted through the government to carry out the necessary work in the Nicosia occupied areas. It also said that within the framework of the same protocol it was also agreed to finance two other projects, namely, the Vasilikos-Pendaskino and the Cyprus electricity authority's development projects. The EEC rejected a previous Turkish Cypriot community request to finance an irrigation project in the island's occupied territories.

HOUSE PRESIDENT SATISFIED WITH LONDON TALKS

NC021614 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1500 GMT 2 Dec 80

[Text] House President Mikhailidhis has expressed his satisfaction over the results of his official visit to Great Britain where he held broad contacts on both government and parliamentary levels focused on the Cyprus issue.

The house president said that in his talks with Prime Minister Thatcher, as well as with government and parliamentary representatives, he stressed that now is the most suitable time for efficient activities and initiatives to be undertaken toward Turkey so that the dialogue may bear fruit. Mikhailidhis said: If there are no effective activities and the dialogue does not bear fruit, then a good opportunity for a Cyprus solution will have been lost. He added, however, that this would not be just another blow but a blow against the very procedure of the dialogue itself.

The house president said that Great Britain--in its capacity as a guarantor power and as the leading country of the Commonwealth of which Cyprus is a member--can play a very useful, positive and constructive role.

Before going to Great Britain, Mr Mikhailidhis visited West Germany where he participated in a seminar on the topic "Greece-Turkey-Cyprus".

KIPRIANOU RECEIVES CREDENTIALS OF GDR AMBASSADOR

NC021550 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1500 GMT 2 Dec 80

[Text] President Kiprianou has stressed that now is the time for all those interested in a Cyprus solution to do all they can in the direction of Turkey so that progress may be made in the intercommunal talks.

Receiving today the credentials of new GDR Ambassador Guenter Schurath, President Kiprianou also said that, although it is too early to make any forecast on the outcome of the intercommunal talks, it is imperative for all of mankind to show active interest within the UN framework and stress to Turkey the need for a just Cyprus solution. The president of the republic expressed the hope that the talks would succeed in bearing some positive results. He added, however, that if they fail this would not be the faut of the Cyprus Government or the Greek Cypriot side. He stressed: We are determined to do all we can but there are limits which we cannot exceed. He added: We cannot accept something that would be tantamount to legalizing the faits accomplis.

President Kiprianou expressed his appreciation for the consistent support of the GDR in the just struggle of Cyprus. He also said he is convinced that the friendly relations and close cooperation between the two countries will be strengthened even more. In conclusion, he hoped that the visit by GDR leader Honecker to Cyprus will take place soon.

Addressing the president of the republic, Schurath said the GDR will continue to be firmly by the side of the Cypriot people and render firm support to their just struggle for a peaceful and democratic settlement of the Cyprus problem. He also said his country welcomes all constructive measures which are conducive to ensuring the independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity and nonalignment of the Cyprus Republic. Schurath also referred to the rapid development of relations between his country and Cyprus in the past few years, and stressed that these relations are an example of peaceful coexistence between states with different social systems.

FOREIGN MINISTRY BEGINS NEW TALKS WITH TURKEY

AT020845 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1930 GMT 1 Dec 80

[Text] News agency reports state that the secretaries general of the Greek and Turkish Foreign Ministries, Theodhoropoulos and Gurun, will meet in Athens on Wednesday. Turkish newspapers report that the results of this meeting will be placed before the foreign ministers of the two countries who are expected to meet in Brussels on 13 December on the occasion of the winter meeting of NATO foreign ministers.

I KATHIMERINI Report

AT020910 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 2 Dec 80 p 1

[Text] The new cycle of talks between the secretaries general of the Greek and Turkish Foreign Ministries will start tomorrow. The Greek secretary general, Ambassador Theodhoropoulos, for the first time will not represent the Greek side due to illness. He will be replaced by the acting secretary general of the Foreign Ministry, St. Rousos.

The talks will continue for 2 days and will be preparatory for the foreign minister's meeting in Brussels, during the NATO foreign ministers' conference which starts on 10 December.

During their talks, the secretaries general will examine all issues which remain unresolved between the two countries such as the continental shelf, Aegean airspace and operational control, the minorities, demilitarization of the island, and views will be exchanged on latest developments in the Cyprus issue. These issues will be examined in detail--during the Mitsotakis-Erkmen meeting without, naturally, there being any increased optimism about the result of the talks.

The Turkish press also deals with the meeting of the secretaries general. It foresees that an effort will be made toward a rapprochement of views between the two sides on Greek-Turkish problems. Results of this meeting will then be submitted to the two governments for study and later they will be submitted for examination during the meeting of the two foreign ministers.

Turkey considers the status of Aegean operational control, after Greece's return to NATO, as temporary. In a statement published yesterday in the review YANKI Turkish Foreign Minister Turkmen said: "There is no specified state of operational control in the Aegean today. Everything around the Aegean will be the subject of negotiations. Whatever existed before Greece's return to NATO's military wing could possibly remain for a period after its return. I know of no progress achieved in the separation of areas of operational responsibility or about a joint implementation of such areas. This will be the subject of negotiations."

In the same interview, referring to the Cyprus issue, Turkmen said, "No pressure is being applied on Turkey over the Cyprus issue. We are satisfied with the progress of negotiations."

TO VIMA REPORTS U.S. HASTE OVER BASES AGREEMENT

AT021015 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 2 Dec 80 p 1

[Report by TO VIMA New York Correspondent St. Evstathiadhis on the bases issue and the Greek-U.S. defense agreement]

[Text] New York, 1 December--A U.S. administration source in Washington has informed TO VIMA that "if the Greek Government submits its plan on the defense agreement and the bases by 12 December, the U.S. side will be in a position to initial it by 12 December." The same source confirmed that negotiations to date have "clarified" every basic issue and that there are no "problems which would require more time for their clarification."

(Yesterday's Athens meeting between Assistant Secretary General of the Greek Foreign Ministry Rousos and U.S. Embassy Counselor Milton Kovner was also related to the bases issue.)

As is well known, the Greek counterproposal on bases is in its last preparatory stage and its submission to the U.S. side will take place within the next few days. In this way Kovner had the opportunity to be briefed on the general lines of the Greek counterproposal and to express the first U.S. reactions.

Other Washington sources, including military sources from various NATO member states, stated that Athens "understands" that it would be more constructive for Greece and generally for the south wing of NATO, if the written and final Greek views on the question of the bipartite agreement were made available before the regular NATO ministerial meeting in mid-December. They added the Greek Government was informed well in time and in a responsible manner that the next NATO ministerial conference would exhaustively deal with the question of "European participation in the alliance's defense plans" and that it would be "imperative" for this reason that the Greek position on the bipartite agreement--the signing of which is, in any case, considered certain both in Washington and in Brussels--should be made available before this time.

The finalization and signing of the new Greek-U.S. defense agreement, at least in respect to the date of signing, was an issue which in a certain way separated the position of the advisers of new President Reagan from the positions of the Democrats at the White House and at the Pentagon.

The Democrats insist that they are interested, for purely party reasons, to see the bipartite agreement signed during their time, in other words by 20 January. In an effort to influence the Greek side they even resort to presenting a sufficient number of danger-mongering warnings. By contrast, Reagan's staff officers, without making any undue noise, let it be understood that they would prefer that the new Greek-U.S. agreement should be signed by them, in other words, after 20 January, and they even state that it would be to the interest of the Greek Government as well as more diplomatic if the new Reagan administration signed the agreement instead of having it signed under the departing Carter administration.

[Text] Turkey has decided to limit diplomatic relations with Israel and to mutually reduce the level of representation. Foreign Ministry spokesman Oktay Iscen made the following statement on the issue: Turkey has decided to limit its relations with Israel and to mutually reduce the level of representation. This decision was made after it became evident that Israel will not retreat from its intransigent policy concerning the Middle East conflict and the fait accompli that it wishes to create in connection with the legal status of Jerusalem. The Israeli Government was informed about this decision on 26 November. In accordance with this decision, all diplomatic personnel, with the exception of a second secretary who will have the title of a temporary charge d'affaire, will be called back within 3 months.

ANKARA COURT RULES NO JURISDICTION ON TURKES CASE

TA021733 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 2 Dec 80

[Text] The Ankara Third High Criminal Court that was trying NAP leader Alpaslan Turkes for publicly insulting the moral character of the government and the security organization in March 1979 has made a decision of no jurisdiction over the case. Turkes' indictment prepared by the Ankara Public Prosecutor's Office was read at the Ankara Third High Criminal Court. The indictment said that Turkes publicly insulted and expressed contempt for the government and the security organization in a statement he made at the congress of the Idealist Youth Association on 18 March 1979.

Turkes testified after the indictment was read and said that he had not insulted the government and the security organization in the statement in question. The court then made a decision of no jurisdiction based on the amendment made to martial law No 1402 which stipulates that cases involving offenses against the character of the state cannot be heard in civil courts unless indicated otherwise by martial law commanders.

Turkes was also tried by the Ankara Second High Criminal Court today for having insulted the moral character of the security organization in 1978. Turkes' indictment was read at the court and stated that Turkes had insulted and had expressed contempt for the moral character of the security organization in a statement he made at the NAP minicongress on 19 August 1978. Speaking after the indictment was read, Turkes denied having insulted the moral character of the security organization. The trial was postponed in order to complete some missing points in the court file.

Four different cases concerning Turkes are being heard in separate courts in Ankara on grounds that he has violated article 159 of the Turkish penal code.

VOTCP COMMENTARY CRITICIZES NEW GOVERNMENT BUDGET

TA031013 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 3 Dec 80

[Station commentary: "The New Budget of Destruction"]

[Text] Dear listeners, the 1981 budget has been submitted to the National Security Council after being approved by the government. Last year's budget was 770 billion Turkish liras. The budget has doubled this year. It has been fixed at 1.5 trillion liras. This is an astronomical figure. Inflation, decrease in production and an increase in balance of payments are among the major reasons for the budget increase. For example, inflation has reached 130 percent. As has already been published by the daily DUNYA, Turkey's foreign debts--including interest rates--have reached $30 billion. The constant devaluation of the Turkish lira has caused incontrollable price increases. On the other hand, arms expenditures comprised 40 percent of the budget. A statement issued by the international strategic research institute notes that Turkey's NATO expenditures for the years 1979 and 1980 reached $2.6 billion.

Dear listeners, the new budget is based on a rotten foundation. Despite the finance minister's statements that the budget is anti-inflationary, this budget of destruction will only exacerbate the economic crisis and living conditions. Arms expeditures in the 1981 budget have been increased by 65 percent in comparison with last year. The fact that 40 percent of last year's budget was allocated to armament and that this amount has been increased by 65 percent this year clearly reveals the militarist character of the 1981 budget. In other words, the lion's share of the budget has been allocated to arms and NATO expenditures.

Meanwhile, public sector investments have been curbed further in the new budget. Emphasis will be laid on the private sector. The budget also notes that subsidies for public economic enterprises have been withdrawn. Furthermore, the new budget limits industrial investments. Some 325 billion liras have been allocated to investments in general in the new budget. The junta government, which has allocated 298 billion liras for the war budget, has allocated only 325 billion for investments in general. This is a clear example that the junta government has based the economy on a military foundation.

The new budget states that a mjor emphasis will be laid on agriculture and that big industrial installations have been rejected. This fact confirms that the new budget was prepared in accordance with IMF and World Bank recipes. A World Bank delegation, which visited Turkey 2 weeks ago, issued a report and pressed the following points: Doors will be opened to foreign invesment; transfer public economic enterprises to the private sector; reject projects aimed at increasing the production capacity of big industrial installations; put more emphasis on agriculture. The junta budget is the result of these demands.

An IMF delegation which is currently visiting Turkey is examining the 1981 budget prepared by the junta government and discussing to what extent the demands of imperialist financial establishments have been reflected in the budget. It is a known fact that the chief architects of the 25 January [word indistinct] program, called the economic stability program by the monopolies and implemented by Turgut Ozal, are imperialist financial establishments such as theIMF and the World Bank IMF demands such as keeping the development rate at zero, freezing wages, the constant devaluation of the Turkish lira, cutting subsidies to public economic enterprises and renouncing subsidy pruchases of agricultural products, that appeared among the 25 January decisions, also constitute the basis of the 1981 budget.

With this budget the junta has extended its hand into the pockets of the workers and the toilers. As stated by the finance minister, the major source of revenue of the revenue of the new budget is taxes collected from the people. Some 1,354 trillion liras will be collected as taxes during 1981. The toiling people will, thus, be condemned to hunger and poverty.

Dear listeners, it is clear that that the new budget voices the plundering and profiteering interests of the monopolies and is based on the demands of imperialist establishments. The junta, which is defending the requests of a handful of collaborationist monopolists, is forcing this militarist budget of destruction and hunger through the use of bayonets. We, therefore, name this junta the enemy of the toiling people.

TA031159 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 3 Dec 80

[Text] Foreign Ministry Secretary General Ambassador Kamuran Gurun has left for Athens to hold talks on problems between Turkey and Greece. In a statement at Istanbul Yesilkoy Airport before his departure, Gurun said that various issues concerning both countries and the Aegean airspace will be discussed at talks to be held at the secretary general level.

Gurun added that various issues on which decisions will be reached at the talks will be submitted to the Turkish and Greek foreign ministers, who will meet in Brussels on 13 December while attending NATO meetings there. The talks to begin in Athens tomorrow will last 2 days.

GISCARD OUTLINES FOCAL POINTS OF COUNCIL MEETING

LD011926 Paris Domestic Service in French 1800 GMT 1 Dec 80

[Excerpts] The 18th European Council meeting began in Luxembourg a short time ago. For the first time this summit has brought together 10 heads of state and government of European countries, as the Nine have in fact invited Greece to join the proceedings. Greece--may I remind you--is due to join the Common Market officially on 1 January. This council will end its work tomorrow afternoon. Before the 10 began their meeting, Valery Giscard d'Estaing described the two focal points of the summit: [Begin recording] The first objective of our meeting of the European Council is to examine in depth the international situation and after this examination to define and express positions proper to Europe. I see two essential questions, as far as I am concerned. The first question is what is the role, what is the place of Europe in the settlement of world problems? Has Europe a will, has Europe any capacity to act and to formulate proposals? And then, how does Europe see the development of relations with the United States at a time when the election of a new president will necessarily lead to a reappraisal of U.S. foreign policy? PARLIAMENT GRANTS AUTONOMY TO ANDALUSIA 2 DEC

LD022332 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1900 GMT 2 Dec 80

[Excerpt] Andalusia now has the autonomy which it requested on 28 February. Shortly before 1900 this evening the Senate unblocked the process of Andalusian autonomy by approving laws which allow autonomy to be attained via article 151 of the constitution--the same article which has made autonomy possible for the Basque country, Catalonia and Galicia. The two laws passed are a modification of the law of referendum and the popular initiative on autonomy which was replaced by the parliamentary initiative in Almeria Province. They are the two laws which were already passed by the Congress of Deputies and which were submitted jointly by the four political groups which make up the junta of Andalusia.

CARRINGTON ON POSSIBLE USSR INTERVENTION IN POLAND

LD030045 London BBC Television Network in English 2100 GMT 2 Dec 80

[Text] It was an early return home for the British delegation [from the EEC summit in Luxembourg]. Later, Lord Carrington spoke in more detail about the warning on Poland. (Frances Coverdale) asked him what would the consequences be if the Russians invade:

[Begin recording] [Carrington] Well, I think inevitably it would be the end of detente. It would mean that I imagine that all the negotiations about arms limitation would inevitably be broken off, and mutual balance of force withdrawals, that it would be difficult to renegotiate SALT II as Governor Reagan wants to do, and I think it would be impossible to carry on the security conference in Madrid. I don't see how you could.

[Question] The Russians have denied reports of troop movements near the Polish border. Are you convinced by those denials?

[Answer] No. I mean I don't think any of us know exactly what is going on, but I think that there are signs that there is some kind of military alert there, but it may not mean that there is going to be intervention by the Soviet Union. But, certainly, things are happening. [end recording]

AFP INTERVIEWS NATO SECRETARY GENERAL LUNS

NC040921 Paris AFP in English 0905 GMT 4 Dec 80

[Text] Brussels, 4 Dec (AFP)--Metal from southern Africa, including the Republic of South Africa, are as vital to the economies of industrial Europe as oil from the Gulf countries, North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) Secretary General Joseph Luns said in an interview with AFP here.

Any Soviet threat to the deliveries of chrome, vanadium platinum and manganese was more dangerous than the potential threat faced by the Gulf area following the invasion of Afghanistan, he added. "Our interests are at least as great there (in southern Africa) as in the Gulf," he said. "But the Soviets have not yet the necessary wherewithal to pose a threat to this region."

"All the talk nowadays is of oil--not to mention all the other products and raw materials that are vital to Europe," Mr Luns said. And the stranglehold threat to Europe's key interests was real enough to require protection measures to be taken. "It is not the business of NATO--an alliance responsible for defending Europe with its well circumscribed geographical limits--to react, but that of a power with worldwide responsibilities (the United States), which has already done so," Mr Luns declared.

"The Soviets have already had one warning," Mr Luns said, "a warning that involved sending considerable military forces to the Gulf (55 ships), and a U.S. decision to organize a Rapid Deployment Force, part of which is already operational."

Mr Luns ruled out any possibility of a European fighting fleet to protect EEC (European Economic Community) supply lines. "Where would fighting ships come from, when the Western navies are nearly all occupied in defending NATO interests?" he asked. "However, we in NATO have stand-by plans that could be resorted to if it is ever necessary to protect the Cape sea route."

He added: "Setting up a European navy would be like the project for a European army that collapsed because of the nationalism of some, and which was always more advanced on paper than in fact. Can you seriously imagine a navy under British command that included the ships of France, the Netherlands, and Italy? At all events, in the Gulf the United States has already taken precautions, and in the Indian Ocean there will from now on always be ships from the West's fleets--French, British and American," Mr Luns said.

On Poland, Mr Luns expressed a clear warning to the Soviet Union against any attempt at military intervention. "Soviet military intervention would have incalculable and very serious consequences," he said, adding: "I don't want to go into the details of those consequences."

On relations between Europe and the United States after President-elect Ronald Reagan takes office next month, Mr Luns said he had received a message from the incoming president assuring him that everything would be done to cooperate with the European allies. "I think the United States will urge its allies to do more individually as well as within the framework of the alliance," Mr Luns said. "Mr Reagan has a good team, and there won't be any upsets."

LE SOIR REPORTS ON ATLANTIC ASSEMBLY SESSION

LD031545 Brussels LE SOIR in French 23-24 Nov 80 p 3

[Pol Mathil report: "Atlantic Assembly; Paragraphs and Commas"]

[Text] "We have followed the development of the situation in Poland with obvious sympathy. We know that the USSR is worried and a Soviet intervention cannot be ruled out.

USSR intervenes directly it will be the end of detente. However, NATO is a defensive alliance and was not set up to protect Poland against its friends...."

This statement was made by NATO Secretary General Luns during his question-and-answer session at the 26th Atlantic Assembly meeting which ended in Brussels Friday. However, although it was naive to hope for a different stance from NATO's top official and although, in actual fact, the 160 parliamentarians from the 15 alliance countries had a less concise discussion on Poland, Mr Luns' remarks give an idea of the circumstances in which the session took place.

On the one hand, the conflicts on the fringes of and outside the alliance's geographical area have never before been so obviously decisive for the West's security (the Gulf, Afghanistan and Poland). On the other hand, the degree of international complexity is increasing while the alliance's cohesion and efficacy are being called into question. As U.S. Democratic Congressman Jack Brooks, who was chairing the assembly, said, "problems are affecting all the alliance member countries, but despite the significance they have for the alliance as a whole, they threaten to divide us rather than to unite us." To demonstrate this you just have to mention the different if not divergent reactions in Europe and the United States to the aggression against Afghanistan, the embargo question, the Olympic games boycott and so forth, not to mention the delicate question of increases in military budgets or the Euromissiles.

A fairly significant example of these differences of opinion is the rejection (for the third time running) by the assembly's military committee of Mr de Vries' (Netherlands) report. Although described as excellent as far as documentation is concerned, this report, which is fairly harsh with regard to the United States, has been deemed too unilateral and too controversial, especially as regards the need for the member countries to strengthen their defenses, which is considered unfounded by the Netherlands deputy and by several of his socialist colleagues.

The result of the 26th session is not easy to summarize. The assembly worked in five committees: military, political, economic, educational, scientific and technical. Each committee listened to long general reports ranging from the economic aspects of security to antisubmarine warfare, and including the Madrid conference. Some of these reports are remarkable and very complex, such as the one on genetic engineering or the one on energy resources. However, although the reports are undoubtedly excellent, the resolutions which followed them are depressingly banal and platitudinous. After all, it is not necessary to gather 160 parliamentarians together in order to reaffirm that "the respect for human rights constitutes an important element in East-West relations," to express the hope of "pursuing cooperation with the United States without reservations..." to express the desire to "set up a more effective system of managing the crisis among the alliance powers," or to decide to continue "to express condemnation of the invasion of Afghanistan to the USSR."

Questioned about the absence in the resolutions of any attempt to provide the means to ensure that these desires are fulfilled, one observer stated: "We wasted too much time arguing about commas and paragraphs."

In his opening speech Mr Brooks recalled that the assembly's previous session in Brussels had been held in 1969 in the midst of the shock caused by the invasion of Czechoslovakia. "Today," Mr Brooks said, "it is from Poland that the tensions and uncertainties are coming." Let us hope that the analogy, made in a beautiful and comfortable hall in Brussels, will not be borne out in the field....

BELGIAN FOREIGN MINISTER ON ARMS SALES, KAMPUCHEA

LD281445 Brussels LE SOIR in French 22 Nov 80 p 2

[DV report: "Zaire, Arms Sales: Debate Announced by Charles-Ferdinand Nothomb"]

[Excerpt] Foreign Minister Nothomb attaches great importance to consensus and to the parliamentary debate which should precede it. That is why, he explained, he only supplied fairly concise replies to the questions put to him during the foreign affairs budget debate. Indeed he intends to organize a major debate in the near future on the two most controversial questions--Belgium's African policy and the arms sales question.

It is only after those debates that he will finally define the policy he intends to follow on these questions.

Meanwhile, however, the foreign minister explained his stances on a few points. First he recalled that arms sales represent only 0.8 percent of our total exports and that their importance is therefore relatively small. Mr Nothomb also pointed out that all arms and munitions exports require an export license granted by the central quotas and licenses office which comes under the Foreign Ministry's control. Mr Nothomb also recalled that arms contracts always contain a clause making provision for secrecy, and that if Belgian producers were no longer in a position to respect that secrecy, because of new provisions, the volume of their sales would automatically be affected.

With regard to the supply of arms to Libya and the training of Libyan soldiers in Belgium, Mr Nothomb invoked the notion of professional and commercial secrecy and stressed that Libya is a traditional client of PRB [Belgian United Powder Factories], which has always respected the nonexport requirement. As for the 15 Libyan soldiers who have been in Belgium since 27 August, they are only being taught handling, laying and clearing of mines which are exclusively defensive weapons.

With regard to Kampuchea, Mr Nothomb explained the reasons Belgium voted in favor of the Khmer Rouge regime at the United Nations. He pointed out that this was not support for that regime; quite the reverse, we clearly expressed our disapproval, but it was a matter of principle: Belgium is against the installation of a regime by force by a foreign army and, as the small ASEAN countries had requested, Belgium had considered that the empty chair policy (France and the Netherlands abstained) would necessarily lead to eventual recognition of Heng Samrin's regime. As far as Vietnam is concerned, Mr Nothomb said, Belgium would be prepared to change its attitude if Hanoi started withdrawing its troops from Kampuchea and agreed to the installation of a more representative regime in Phnom Penh. Moreover it is in that spirit that Belgium agreed to jointly propose ASEAN's resolution making provision for an international conference on Kampuchea.

OFFICIALS, PAPERS COMMENT ON EC STANCE ON POLAND

Von Dohnanyi Interview

DW031749 Saarbruecken Saarlaendischer Rundfunk Network in German 0726 GMT 3 Dec 80

[Reporter Klein interview with Dr Klaus von Dohnanyi, minister of state for foreign affairs--place not given]

[Text] [Question] The chiefs of state and government of the European Community at the conclusion of their summit meeting in Luxembourg yesterday called upon all states to maintain restraint with regard to events in Poland. My question to you is what does the People's Republic of Poland need to have? Where could the FRG help?

[Answer] You probably are referring to food problems, but, to begin with, let me state that the chiefs of government in Luxembourg stressed once again what should be a matter of course, namely, that no one must interfere in the sovereign People's Republic of Poland and that naturally we are prepared to help the Poles--if they want our help--cope with their present problems which certainly are of a temporary nature only.

[Question] Could you give a few concrete examples?

[Answer] Yes. It is possible, for instance, that the People's Republic of Poland in the light of a poor harvest would want to have additional meat, butter or grain supplies. This would have to be negotiated when and if the People's Republic of Poland makes a request. In this respect the Europeans are of course ready to help in solidarity, but, as I said, only on the basis of Polish wishes and without any interference in Poland's internal affairs.

[Question] How do you assess the current situation?

[Answer] We see that very serious efforts are being made in the People's Republic of Poland to channel an internal movement into a productive process. This will take some time, and we assume that all parties concerned in Poland will have the patience to allow this process to develop.

[Question] Has the policy of the FRG toward Poland been coordinated with the United States?

[Answer] You mean whether we have agreed on this policy?

[Question] Yes.

[Answer] I believe this policy does not require any specific coordination; it is based on the matter-of-factness of our attitudes. The United States and we are signatories of the Helsinki Final Act. We confirmed there what is a principle of our policy, namely, noninterference, but on the other hand also cooperation. Therefore if our cooperation is requested, we will be very willing to grant it.

Kohl Statement

LD031428 Hamburg DPA in German 1245 GMT 3 Dec 80

[Excerpts] Bonn, 3 Dec (DPA)--The CDU/CSU has welcomed the statement of the EEC government and state leaders on the Polish situation.

Opposition leader Helmut Kohl stated with regard to the Luxembourg meeting in Bonn today that the Union shared the view that a Soviet intervention using force in Poland would have dramatic consequences on detente and security in Europe and the world. According to Kohl, the CDU/CSU believes that the Soviet Union, as the only possible aggressor, should have been named in the statement. This would have shown the EEC governments' determination and increased the effect of their appeal. Kohl stressed that the opposition supported the offer of aid to Poland if it really did go to help the Polish people.

3 Dec Press Review

DW030839 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0605 GMT 3 Dec 80

[Press review]

[Text] Freiburg's BADISCHE ZEITUNG writes: The developments in Poland obviously have entered into a decisive phase. The news saying that the border area between the GDR and its unstable Eastern neighbor has been declared off limits to Western military personnel seems to prove those right who consider a military intervention inevitable. Warsaw has obviously understood these signals. Party chief Kania in his remarkably frank speech to the Central Committee promised that the reform course will be continued, but he also made it clear where the limits are, and he urgently called on all parties concerned to be reasonable. To the sensitive Poles it ought to be significant that he used the word counterrevolution: Counterrevolution provokes the notorious fraternal assistance. Prague has recalled once again what this assistance is like. What now matters is that the moderate wing in the party leadership retains the upper hand and that trade union leader Lech Walesa succeeds in motivating the millions of his followers to utilize the existing leeway jointly with the government without any spectacular lone actions and thus to avert the threatening catastrophe.

The Ludwigshafen RHEINPFALZ states: It is now possible, after the meeting of the party Central Committee in Warsaw, to speak of an official reform course in Poland. Party chief Kania as well as Premier Pinkowski in their speeches considered the pressure of the party grassroots for a self-purge of the party just as they took into account the reform efforts of the free trade unions of Lech Walesa which meanwhile has reached a membership level of more than 10 million. The people of the Solidarity trade union are perfectly aware that they must not go too far, for if they risk their movement there will not be any alternative left for a reform of conditions in Poland. Lech Walesa yesterday termed this reform simply as turning Poland into Poland again.

The Bremen WESER KURIER makes the following comment: While the Polish state and party leadership desperately tries to regain control of things in the country by means of an all-round defense determined by a forward strategy forced upon them, Moscow alarmed the West with the opening of its war of nerves against its ally. The declaration of the GDR's eastern border area as off limits to personnel of the Western military missions in Potsdam, news on Soviet troop movements along the Polish border, the unexpected appearance of GDR Premier Stoph in Prague, the return of the GDR's ambassador in Warsaw to East Berlin, all are clear indications that the patience of the Kremlin rulers with the Poles is petering out.

The editorial of FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE reads in part: Forthcoming maneuvers is the justification which the Soviets supreme commander in the GDR uses for banning the three Western military missions in Potsdam temporarily from any access to the area along the Oder River. Even if such maneuvers did take place, the choice of this very region as the theater for exercises at this time can only be inteded to aggravate the tensions in Europe and to bring pressure to bear on the Polish leadership elite.

It may well be that the Soviet management also speculates on an amplification effect if reports on such maneuvers hinting at an intervention first are passed on to the Western media and then are reflected to the Polish public with the worried commentaries of these Western media. The West should not take part in this war of nerves against the Poles, not even involuntarily, but should instead focus the angle of reflection on the greater distance, on Moscow itself.

The daily DIE WELT points out: The attempt by Moscow to revive the special relations between the superpowers in these explosive weeks could be an expression of Soviet weakness, but it could also be an attempt to move into new positions in the worldwide fight for power. It would mean following Lenin's slogan to achieve a reprieve. If that were the case, the Poles would have to pay for it. At any rate Reagan should not miss an opportunity to make it clear to the Soviets that the West would not consider an attack on Poland as an accident on the way to detente. There are some things in the West on which Moscow depends. Its efforts with regard to Reagan show that the Kremlin knows it.

RHEINISCHE POST of Duesseldorf notes: Maybe the reports on troop movements and the establishment of restricted areas for undesired Western observers are nothing but part of the war of nerves that has been initiated for weeks by the Soviet Union and its devoted satellites, initiated with growing intensity against the Polish people's striving for freedom. At present it finds its most visible expression in an independent trade union movement. One would like to hope and believe that nothing but an aggravated war of nerves is taking place at present, but after all, the situation seems to have aggravated so dramatically that the leading statesmen of the European Community in their Luxembourg "fireside talks" have pondered the danger of World War III in Europe.

NEUE OSNABRUECKER ZEITUNG stresses: The European Community demonstrated finally that it is able to make an unambiguous statement. The clear repudiation of the Brezhnev doctrine and the warning against the grave consequences of an intervention in Poland carry double weight: They are being fully supported by all state and government chiefs of the Community, and they come at a time when Poland needs that support more than ever. In contrast to the preparations for the attack on Afghanistan, which were negligently ignored, the West this time clearly alerted the world public, and in contrast to January 1980 there are no differences of opinion between the West European states and the United States on the assessment of the situation. Moscow knows that interference in Poland will not be considered a regional conflict, but that it will be a fatal blow to detente policy.

BRAUNSCHWEIGER ZEITUNG writes: The European government chiefs stated together what most of them had said individually, and what Mr Percy, Reagan's close aid, had told the Kremlin: A military intervention in Poland will have unpredictable consequences for East-West relations. It would "change the world," as Schmidt put it. In order to point that out, the government chiefs have emphasized the final CSCE document of Helsinki, thus stressing the difference between the 1968 occupation of the CSSR and the current threat of a military action against Poland: At that time no international agreement existed guaranteeing the integrity of every state, including the communist states. Now the treaty exists. If Moscow staged an invasion, it would be violating international law.

WESTDEUTSCHE ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG of Essen states: It would be completely wrong to consider the European Community statement as interference in Polish domestic affairs. The Western government chiefs are hesitant enough. Naturally they realize that the Kremlin could claim that their reminder was an act of interference. The Kremlin is trying hard already to prove that the reasons for the Polish revolt and the demand for trade unions and civil rights have been caused by Western influence.

Neither the geographic situation nor the development of unrest in Poland can be compared with the CSSR and the experience gathered there. The top echelon in Prague followed its own course, while in Poland the people have set the course.

WESTFAELISCHE NACHRICHTEN of Muenster comes to the following conclusion: Some 35 years after the end of World War II, the division of Europe in two spheres of interest is still valid. Otherwise the European Community's state and government chiefs would have commented much more clearly in their Luxembourg meeting on the more and more threatening situation in Poland and the danger of a new and bloody Soviet invasion, much more clearly than in yesterday's resolution on East-West relations.

OFFERGELD INTERVIEWED ON DEVELOPMENT AID ISSUES

DW031011 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0621 GMT 2 Dec 80

[Reporter Elsner interview with Rainer Offergeld, federal minister for economic cooperation; date and place not given--recorded]

[Excerpt] [Question] International development officials, members of the Third World, and OPEC members, have met in Kuwait with almost the total exclusion of the public. Is it true that there was reason to reconsider the principles of development policy?

[Answer] Naturally there was cause for very frank discussions behind closed doors on the prospects of developing countries. There was no doubt at all that many of them are facing a dramatic deterioration of their situation. One of the most discussed questions was the problem of how to find additional opportunities to avoid a deterioration or keep it within limits as much as possible.

[Question] Did one agree on the official denominator that the oil price explosion was the reason for the deterioration of the situation of Third World countries?

[Answer] Such a meeting has the advantage that one talks to each other much more frankly than at public international conferences. It was not contested on this occasion that the oil price explosion was a significant factor in the forthcoming or already experienced deterioration. It was agreed that it cannot be ruled out that the poorest countries--such as in Africa, south of the Sahara--could face a grave shortcoming with regard to foodstuff, so that famine and wide-spread deaths could take place.

[Question] If you succeeded in achieving a 10.4 percent budget increase in your department, it was certainly a remarkable success. But is that possibly the expression of a bad conscience in the Federal Government, indicating the need for an increase?

[Answer] It is in any case an expression of our realization that it is significant to make a contribution to some stabilization, particularly in a difficult international situation with some hotbeds of crises--mostly located in the Third World--a contribution in a difficult foreign political situation. Development aid is naturally the most effective instrument in this connection. The Federal Government will therefore not decrease but expand its development policy in the near future.

[Question] It could be heard from your department that a new strategy has been thought of to be pursued in this legislative period. More emphasis will be given to technical assistance for the Third World. The mere transfer of money seems to have been curtailed. Isn't that insight a bit late?

[Answer] Money is not always the most decisive thing. You are right. We will emphasize this insight in our future development policy.

[Question] Some observers suspect that the attempt will be made over and over again to press an economic model on the developing countries. Ralf Dahrendorf is one of these people. Does that danger exist?

[Answer] Such pressure is absolutely out. Naturally there are some realizations, just thinkof our natural science and agriculture technology, which are necessary for modern development. But pressure with regard to an economic system is absolutely out. We cooperate with developing countries with most different political and economic systems. Naturally it is necessary to accept the different history, mentality and religion of developing countries. On the basis of the different history and ideology one sets up different economic models.

[Question] It was Mr Dahrendorf who advocated the view the other day that contrary to the contention hitherto upheld, the industrial countries are not at all dependent on the developing countries, not even with respect to the raw materials which mostly are available in the developed countries.

[Answer] It is my view that this thesis needs to be differentiated--the way it is advanced is neither wrong nor right. It is true that there are many developing countries on which we are extremely dependent--the OPEC countries representing the most striking proof of that. Other developing countries, too, meanwhile have attained a considerable economic capacity making us with our exports dependent on their potential and their import capability. There is growing interdependence there indeed. It is a correct aspect of the theses, however, that quite a few very poor developing countries do not even possess raw materials, countries in whose case our development aid policy is actually based on humanitarian considerations rather than on mutual dependence.

[Question] Were any special demands raised with the Federal Government in Kuwait?

[Answer] Not specifically on the Federal Government, but on the industrial states at large, but also on the OPEC states which, to my astonishment, indeed were openminded toward these demands. It is quite obvious that in view of the dramatic worsening that is looming ahead new measures of support are necessary. It has turned out that the reaction of the industrial states toward these facts is quite diverse. Some of them will reduce their development aid despite everything. But it also became obvious that some countries reacted in a positive manner to the new challenge, and that the World Bank, whose president was there, and the International Monetary Fund, whose secretary general took part in the meeting, are contemplating and discussing new and additional measures of aid and support.

[Question] The working association of the development services in the Federal Republic recently voiced the concern that development aid might be turned into a sort of platitude playground for insiders. Is this the explanation of the negative attitude toward development assistance which can be observed in broad segments of the people time and again?

[Answer] Yes, surely this was partly true in the past. The Federal Government seeks to obtain the broadest possible support among the people for its development aid policy. Many other organizations help us in our efforts to attain this goal, and it is a fact that development aid nowadays enjoys much broader support among the people than it did, say, 10 years ago. We commission a survey on this at regular intervals. Today most of the people advocate development aid policy, and it is especially gratifying to note that a great majority of the young generation considers development aid policy something that is necessary, something of a positive nature.

LE MONDE ON CONFLICT WITH CANADA OVER CONFERENCE

Quebec Delegation Disputed

LD031553 Paris LE MONDE in French 27 Nov 80 p 4

[Text] The conflict between Paris and Ottawa over the Dakar conference is growing worse. This conference, planned for 8 and 9 December, is to decide on the formation of an "organic French-speaking community."

Canadian Secretary of State for External Affairs MacGuigan stated Tuesday, 25 November, that the composition of the Canadian delegation "is Canada's affair and not France's," a fact which is not disputed in Paris. Moreover Giscard d'Estaing reiterated as much to Canadian Prime Minister Trudeau on Monday. However, he added that since this matter concerns French-speaking countries, "France's participation will only be possible if the solution adopted receives the Quebec government's agreement."

Recalling this stance, a spokesman for the French Embassy in Ottawa added: "If this agreement is not given, France will not take part in the Dakar summit." Mr MacGuigan said, for his part, that, in his view France's absence would not prevent the conference from taking place and that Canada intends to take part.

The Quebec government does not reject the principle of single Canadian representation, and the Ottawa government is proposing to include Quebec elements (and people from the New Brunswick Province, which has a considerable French-speaking minority). However, the conflict relates to the level of these Quebec elements. Quebec is anxious for Morin, Quebec minister for intergovernmental affairs, to be present in Dakar, while Mr Trudeau will only agree to lower-level officials accompanying the Ottawa minister in the Canadaian delegation.

Senegalese Initiative

[Editorial: "Threat to French-Speaking World"]

[Text] Will the French-speaking world suffer by the internal quarrels among French-speaking countries? How can we help fearing this when the "organic French-speaking community"--the longstanding dream which a 70-year-old African head of state is striving to realize before he retires--is threatened by quarrels between the only two "native" French communities in the world: the French people in France and the French-speaking Canadians.

In the 20 years that his country and all that was called "overseas France" have been emancipated, Senegalese President Senghor, a qualified French teacher and a writer, has struggled to "organically" unite all the countries in the world which speak French. Paris responded to his efforts with reservations which were partly, but only partly, tactical. Is it not preferable, in order to avoid the accusation of "cultural imperialism," that France should respond to an appeal from the French-speaking world rather than prompting it? As for political action, does the French Government not do enough in this respect in the practical French-African framework with its annual summits, based on the former French Africa and which are sufficiently attractive for non French-speaking countries (Libya and Sierra Leone) to have joined them? What Mr Senghor wants is different--"an organized network of solidarity which will group the cultural communities" which speak French throughout the world, even those which are not in French-speaking states.

This desire gave rise 10 years ago to the Cultural and Technical Cooperation Agency which comprises 34 governments as diverse as those of Vietnam, the Canadian Province of New Brunswick, and the Antillean island of Dominica.

Today Mr Senghor, who is apparently contemplating retiring next year, wants to crown his career by taking another step. His aim, as he explained at the French African summit in Nice last May, is to create the "privileged tool of many kinds of action"--"a flexible body for consultation among heads of state and government, based on consent from the partners, debating freely and in private questions and plans which concern their countries." In short, "an organic community" which is sometimes described by the desk title of "French commonwealth."

On the whole, the reception was favorable. Even President as-Sadat is apparently prepared for Egypt to take part on behalf of its French-speaking elite, which is still influential.

However, this did not take account of the eternal quarrel of Canada and Ouebec. This had already caused trouble for the Cultural and Technical Cooperation Agency promoters. They solved the problem with "associate member" status, which Quebec is not the only member to enjoy.

There is also a basis for compromise over the Dakar conference since the Ouebec government agrees to its representative being included in the Canadian delegation. However, it intends to be represented by the very active Claude Morin, Quebec minister for intergovernmental affairs. This is what Canada's (French-speaking) Prime Minister Trudeau refuses to accept. In the wake of his referendum success, after removing the threat of Quebec's secession, he clearly wants the separatists in the "beautiful province" to eat humble pie again. The French Government, which will receive Quebec Prime Minister Levesque on an official visit next month, has fortunately stated that it would not take part in a French-speaking conference if Quebec were not represented in a way which satisfies the latter.

Once again the main enemy which the French language--retreating on all sides--has in the world is to be found among those who speak it.

PHNOM PENH REGIME DELEGATION ON 1-MONTH VISIT

LD031639 Paris LE MONDE in French 2 Dec 80 p 3

[P.D.B. report: "Phnom Penh Regime Delegation Has Been Able To Visit France Through the French-Speaking Countries' Agency"]

[Text] The first delegation from the People's Republic of Kampuchea to visit France since the pro-Vietnamese regime came to power on 7 January 1979 ends its visit this week. This delegation, which arrived in Paris at the beginning of November at the invitation of the Association for the Development of Relations with Kampuchea (ADRAC) comprises Khieu Kanharith, chief editor of Phnom Penh's sole weekly, KAMPUCHEA and Dr (Chhea Thang) (from the Health Ministry). The Angkor conservator who was to have been included in the delegation did not, after all, make the trip.

The French Government, which does not recognize either of the two governments disputing Kampuchea and which has had no official contact with Heng Samrin's regime, agreed to grant visas to this delegation to enable it to make contact with the Cultural and Technical Cooperation Association (ACCT)--an international body of French-speaking countries which has its headquarters in Paris. According to an informed source, the Foreign Ministry's decision was motivated by humanitarian objectives--since the ACCT can supply technical aid to Kampuchea--and by the desire to defend the French-speaking world. Indeed, many people in Kampuchea still speak French and the country's two main allies, Laos and Vietnam, belong to the ACCT.

Contacts were made, through the ACCT, with technical officials--"middle-ranking and not top officials"--of the health, national education, transport and culture ministries.

"We discussed the principles and forms of cooperation," delegation chief Khieu Kanharith told us. According to him it was decided to supply documentation to Phnom Penh. In addition, ADRAC organized meetings with various associations (CGT Youth Movement, Christian Workers Youth Movement), and visits to universities and hospitals.

The delegation's aim was undoubtedly to try and establish as many relations as possible with French bodies which could exert pressure on the government to recognize the Phnom Penh regime. The PCF and various humanitarian associations are already trying to achieve that. As far as aid is concerned Khieu Kanharith said he is "full of optimism." "We requested less food aid for 1981," he said; "we are mainly concerned with medium-term development, the supply of spare parts and raw materials. Our priority is not national defense--it is possible to move around anywhere by day or night--but the education of young people." Questioned on Khmer Rouge attacks he replied: "Nobody can prevent attacks; there are bombs in Paris too!"

CAUSES OF GOVERNMENT APPROACH TO CHAD VIEWED

[Editorial: "Chad, France and Black Africa"]

[Text] The remarks made in Paris on Wednesday, 19 November, by Senegalese President Leopold-Sedar Senghor reflect a deep feeling of anxiety about the escalation of the Chad civil war. During a meeting with Valery Giscard d'Estaing in the Elysee which lasted over 1 hour the Senegalese statesman expressed the hope that the OAU will quickly call on the UN "blue helmets" to try to restore peace in Ndjamena.

In Paris, as in most of the southern Saharan capitals, Colonel al-Qadhdhafi's behavior toward Chad is causing acute apprehension. We should not be deceived by the silence officially observed by some heads of state. The main motive for this silence is the fear of laying themselves open to the accusation of interference. This fear of being placed in the dock by the Libyan president is not the least of the paradoxes in this affair and constitutes one of the Tripoli leader's main advantages.

The Elysee's attitude is, in any case, raising some questions. It is difficult to see that it could be determined simply by a concern to preserve harmonious relations between Tripoli and Paris. Of course, Paris is afraid of being accused once again of being the "gendarme of Africa," as was the case with the two interventions in Shaba to prevent the destabilization of General Mobutu's regime in Zaire. However, we must also look elsewhere for the reasons for a wait-and-see attitude which could eventually have fearful consequences. Since French troops left Chadian territory last May at the request of the National Unity Transition Government, Paris feels it can no longer intervene in an affair in which it was asked not to meddle by all 11 Chadian politicomilitary groups, which were unusually agreed on this point.

Just as after Guinea's negative vote in the 1958 constitutional referendum, France seems to have acted on the choice officially made by its African partner. The approaching presidential election is also prompting the government to avoid, as far as is possible, taking any initiatives which may or may not be approved by a public who unfortunately care little about Africa questions.

It is, therefore, up to the black African leaders themselves to settle the Chadian tragedy. In Lome, General Eyadema, chairman of the OAU ad hoc committee, is doing all he can. In Niamey, to which Benin President Kerekou has just completed a short official visit, the publication of a joint Niger-Benin communique strongly condemning "foreign interference" suggests that some African politicians, like President Senghor, are determined to overcome their fears and take action.

In fact, for the time being at least, it is in Ndjamena and above all in Tripoli that we find the key to the tragedy which is tearing Chad apart and claiming thousands of lives. As long as Goukouni Oueddei and Hissein Habre--the two main protagonists in this conflict which is sometimes more like personal score settling--refuse to sit down at the same table to discuss the matter, nobody will be able to silence the guns in Ndjamena. This will also be the case until the Libyan soldiers, to whom Goukouni Oueddei appealed in order to keep himself in power, start to go home.

RCF SPOKESMAN HITS PS ATTITUDE TO ELECTIONS

LD021247 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 25 Nov 80 p 3

[Text] [PCF] Politburo member Andre Lajoine was France-Inter's guest at 1300 yesterday, when he answered Didier Lecat's questions.

Andre Lajoine: I would like to give my opinion on the results [of the first round of the by-elections]. These seven constituencies are not representative of the French voters.

Didier Lecat: You did not regard this election as a test?

Andre Lajoine: Obviously not, since, I repeat, it was not representative of the French voters. The fact is that the results reflect a stabilization of the political forces in France. This stabilization applies to the rightwing forces and to PS and PCF forces. Contrary to Mr Valette's statements on this radio station, the PS has gained no ground, even if you add the Left Radical votes in Averyron. Overall, in the seven constituencies, these dropped by 0.5 percent. Those are the facts.

Didier Lecat: But the PS is ahead of you everywhere?

Andre Lajoine: Yes, it is ahead of us, as it was before. The situation is the same. Of course the PCF dropped slightly too; we dropped 1.25 percent in all and the PS, including the Left Radicals' vote, dropped 0.5 percent.

The explanation is very simple: First, these are constituencies in which--as you yourself said--we were not in a position to be elected. Then there is the relentless campaign which the mass media have waged, directed solely against the PCF. No mention was made of a meeting held by G. Marchais in Cholet attended by 5,000 people. There was complete silence about a speech by C. Fiterman to 5,000 young people in the north. Yet a Giscardian speaking to a dozen supporters was reported. Therefore, clearly, in those places where the PCF was unable to struggle energetically enough we lost some ground. However, in other places we did gain ground, as in the Dordogne where we won 2 percent more votes.

I must also add that the PCF gained ground in working class centers and in some peasant circles, notably among the Cantal stock raisers and the peasants in the southwest threatened by EEC expansion. This shows that the struggle plan and G. Marchais' candidacy in the presidential election are starting to produce results. This struggle plan not only expresses what must be done but provides the means of doing it, and it is original because no candidate has outlined serious means of overcoming the crisis; they all accept it as if it were inevitable.

Didier Lecat: But is 3.4 percent in Ain very much for the PCF?

Andre Lajoine: No, I repeat, the results--including the result in Ain--show that progress is being made in working class circles. Of course, for the Ain federation that raises the question of the energy of its fight, of the Communist organizations' battle against the combined offensive launched by all the other forces.

I repeat that all the others--including F. Mitterrand--have been seen repeatedly on television, while no mention has been made of the Communists' campaign. Clearly that must inspire our comrades to step up the battle, which they will certainly do.

Didier Lecat: Everybody is awaiting your decision on the second round. They would like to know what you are going to do?

Andre Lajoine: The organizations concerned and the candidates are going to step down for the PS candidates who are ahead. We have not issued any decree for that. Our organizations are responsible; they are doing this despite the attitude taken last week by the PS, which deliberately brought about the defeat of the PCF candidates in the Savigny-sur-Orge elections (several hundred spoiled ballot papers were found in the ballot boxes). Despite this defeatist PS attitude--an attitude which the elections have just confirmed, since Mitterrand should be disturbed by a 0.5-percent drop after he committed himself fully to the election campaign in the seven constituencies. All this shows that his candidacy is a candidacy for defeat.

Didier Lecat: So, you are withdrawing your candidates. Does that mean that you are going to campaign for the PS candidates?

Andre Lajoine: Our candidates have stepped down, and I think that is the main thing. When F. Mitterrand says that he is counting on the PS candidate being elected in Cantal, I think there is reason to talk. The total of Communist and Socialist votes there is 46 percent and, if the PS candidate is to be elected, it will be because the Giscardian candidate who is withdrawn will call on his supporters to vote for the PS candidate, officially or not. So, if the PS candidate is elected in Cantal, it will mean that the Giscardian candidate had him elected. Look at the figures: The candidate who had Giscard's photograph on his posters must decide to have the PS candidate elected in Cantal. I have the impression that F. Mitterrand is counting on that, since this morning he spoke as if that candidate were bound to be elected. He is assuming his responsibilities.

Didier Lecat: Is the return to republican discipline a lesson which you learned from the Senate election? Is this a change in attitude?

Andre Lajoine: In the Senate election we said: "We are for union, we want Socialist and Communist senators in the second round, provided that the PS wants the same," although we came out with nothing, and the PS together could have had 7, 8 or 10 senators elected and could thus have defeated the right. The PS rejected that union and we said: "Since the PS refuses, we will keep our candidates in." That is not a change of line. We will do that when it is necessary. If the PS still wants to defeat us systematically, it will receive the same clear answer. This is simply a firm and honest attitude.

FOREIGN MINISTER RECEIVES IRANIAN DELEGATION

LD040002 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 2130 GMT 3 Dec 80

[Text] Foreign Minister Colombo received an Iranian delegation at the Farnesina. The Iranians handed Colombo a message from Prime Minister Raja'i in which the Iranian prime minister asked Italy to express explicit condemnation of Iraq for the aggression committed against Iran. The delegation arrived in Rome yesterday. It is on a diplomatic mission to several European capitals.

Colombo recalled Italy's stance, that is, its great concern over the war and its determination to give maximum support to all possible peace initiatives.

PCI DIRECTORATE CALLS FOR NEW GOVERNMENT

LD021653 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 28 Nov 80 p 1

[Unattributed report: "Another Italy Must Govern"--first paragraph is L'UNITA introduction]

[Text] The PCI Directorate issued the following document at the end of its extraordinary meeting yesterday:

The PCI stresses that the demanding and pressing task for the entire nation is to meet promptly, by mobilizing all resources, the pressing requirements for aid and solidarity of the people hit by the earthquake. To this end all communist organizations and party members will continue to do their duty to the full, without reservations and in a spirit of unity and cooperation with the public and government bodies whose task it is to coordinate all the interventions in the earthquake areas.

However, the PCI is well aware that the tragic occurrence of the earthquake, following the disappointing and negative responses from the government in the face of the chain of scandals, distortions in the state apparatus and power intrigues, has very painfully highlighted the problems of the efficiency, correctness and morality of the political leadership.

The country is profoundly shocked by this behavior; its mistrust and indignation are becoming increasingly apparent. This emerged also from the president of the republic's speech. The fact is that all this calls into question not simply the responsibilities of one or more ministers or of the present government, but of a power system, a conception and method of government which have generated and still continuously generate inefficiency and confusion in the functioning of the state bodies, corruption and scandals in the lives of the government parties, and complicity and impunity for those responsible.

The moral issue has now become the most important national issue. Indeed, it is infeasible to govern the country and to resolve the problems assailing it without reestablishing strong relations of trust between the citizens and the state. Of course, there is a pressing need for measures and action to ensure a moralization, and there will also have to be incisive reforms in the institutional field; but the decisive and now indispensable factor is a radical change in the country's political leadership.

There is an evident crisis in the government's approaches, methods and formulas, which hinge on the DC leadership. The quest for solutions confined to the context of the parties which have governed Italy in recent decades seems illusory and unequal to the gravity of the situation, particularly in view of the acute nature of the moral issue. On the other hand, it would be irresponsible and reckless to push the situation toward another early election, which is a hypothesis the PCI rejects outright.

The PCI has been and still is a major force of democratic and constitutional opposition in Italy; it has given an exemplary demonstration of political and moral correctness and rigor in the struggle against corruption. People must therefore decide to acknowledge that, at a time when the DC is showing itself incapable of heading the moral reform and regeneration of the state, it is objectively up to the PCI to be the driving force behind and the major guarantor of a government that will represent and unite the best energies of Italian democracy--capable and honest men from the various parties and also from outside them. The exceptional nature of such a proposal is clear, but the pitch which our country's political crisis has reached and the need to safeguard the republic demand the courage and willingness to try a new path, to start implementing, within a limited space of time and with full respect for the constitution and the democratic rules, a plan for the moral reform and reconstruction of the state organization.

While believing that no government vacuums must be created at a time when there is a more pressing need than ever for aid to the populations of the areas hit by the earthquake disaster, the PCI submits its proposal of a new government for debate by all citizens and urges the political forces to examine it with the necessary careful consideration and with an awareness of the dangers threatening the democratic system and the parties which have been and still are the foundation of the Italian Republic.

POLISH DELEGATE DISCUSSES RAMIFICATIONS FOR CSCE

LD032220 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2105 GMT 3 Dec 80

["Special Program on CSCE"]

[Excerpt] We have with us Dr Jerzy Nowak, vice-chairman of the Polish delegation to the Madrid conference. Mr Nowak, in the framework of the Madrid conference, what echo do you think the diverse news concerning your country has had?

[Nowak] What is happening in Poland at the moment has practically no reflection on the official sessions. The reason is simple. What is happening in Poland are our country's, our nation's domestic problems, which we want to resolve alone. I am sure that we can solve them with our own hands and we shall do it in this way. Poland is known in the world as an heroic nation, and that is true, but it is less well-known as a country which is capable of resolving problems by political means and by so-called intelligent compromises by the Polish people. We shall resolve our problems in this way.

You asked me what echo it had in the conference, well, in the official sessions it had none. Only the Polish delegation spoke two or three times on the problems which we are now facing in Poland, on these very difficult times. Naturally, it is talked about in the corridors and among the delegates. That is normal because Poland is one of the largest countries in Europe and the security of Poland depends upon what happens in Europe, but the security of the whole of Europe also depends upon what happens in Poland.

FOREIGN MINISTER ADDRESSES NATO MEMBERSHIP ISSUES

LD031738 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2300 GMT 2 Dec 80

[Text] Today in the Senate the Spanish foreign minister reiterated the Suarez government's intention to join, or apply for Spain's entry into, NATO at the appropriate time. A report from Pedro Fernandez Cespedes:

Besides the intention of the government and the Center Democratic Union that Spain will join NATO--an intention which is already known--Socialist Senator Fernando Moran, who submitted the interpellation on defense policy, also asked the government how incorporation would be carried out, when it would happen, and what interdependence would it have with the treaties with the United States. He also asked what guarantees Spanish entry into NATO could offer for the defense of Spanish towns such as Ceuta and Melilla. We asked the same question of Minister of Foreign Affairs Jose Pedro Perez Illorca:

[Begin recording] Well, answering the questions in reverse order, I would like to reiterate that on a specific point like that of the Spanish towns of Ceuta and Melilla, which are part of our sovereign territory, part of our national unit, fully integrated into the national territory, any action undertaken by this Spanish Government, any action, as I say, will always be in the best interest of their defense and their best guarantee. That will always be the aim and orientation of the government.

As for the technical questions, I think the technical questions with regard to [word indistinct] to procedure and time were made sufficiently clear during the [Senate] debate. On the subject of NATO, the government at present does not have so much a timetable as precise conditions which have already been set out; the constitutional process on the matter is already outlined. What political prudence might dictate with regard to majorities is something else, but, first, there is the subject of renegotiating the treaties with the United States, a subject which normally comes before that of NATO. [end recording]

During several of the regulation rights of reply, the opposition insisted that the minister had not answered the question of when Spain would join NATO. We asked him the same question:

[Begin recording] I think I tried to make it fairly clear there will be no surprises--that is, when the government considers that the objective conditions--which I have set out for the matter to be deliberated in every sense--are fulfilled, it will join NATO. [end recording]

It will join NATO when progress can be seen on the subject of Gibraltar and progress, too, on the subject of Spanish entry into the EEC.

CARRILLO SPEAKS ON DOMESTIC ISSUES, TRIPS ABROAD

LD031938 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2300 GMT 2 Dec 80

[Report on press conference given by PCE Secretary General Santiago Carrillo; date and venue not specified--Carrillo's recorded remarks enclosed in quotation marks]

[Text] The press conference given by Santiago Carrillo, the PCE secretary general, comprised two very different parts: the first--which Carrillo had already prepared--on foreign policy, relations between the communist parties of Spain and China, and so forth; the second, on internal policy, which we raised at the press conference itself. We will begin with that which is nearer to home with the subject which is of the utmost topicality--the caretaker government. There had been no earlier opportunity to ask Carrillo for his opinion on the subject because he was in the PRC, but today he spoke clearly on the caretaker government.

"I have to say that I do not share the joy of those who think that Suarez is sinking and that it might be due to Fraga. It seems to me that Fraga--with all the criticism, with all the reservations I might have about Suarez, and all the opposition I have toward Suarez--Fraga is much more rightwing than Suarez. If, instead of Suarez, we had a Fraga government, the position of the left in this country would be much worse. I want to make this very clear and I should like to say that the Communist Party will not do anything that might strengthen Fraga against Suarez, although neither will it do anything to strengthen Suarez."

In synthesis, the PCE is against the caretaker government and against everything which does not respect the Spanish Constitution. "We have said publicly that we respect the rules of the game, while those above respect the constitution. If those above violate the constitution, by whatever formula, that, for us, would mean they are breaking the rules of the game, from which we shall draw the conclusions which follow."

Now to something else internal: We referred to the recent statements by Ramon Tamames, a communist deputy, on the need for the party secretariat general to be collegiate. Carrillo said: Tamames should try to win the battle inside the party and not outside. "I am not of the opinion that Tamames aspires to the party secretariat general. I do not hold that opinion. In no way do I want to reproach him for this. I sincerely think that Tamames has a view of the party which is influenced by his overall development, which is not the view held by the majority of the party." The next congress will say whether the majority of the party agrees with Carrillo's opinion or with that of Tamames.

"What did I say to Tamames? Well, I met him in Parliament and we greeted each other in a very friendly way. That is all." They greeted each other, without saying anything else. "I do not pick quarrels with anyone in the party. I am very careful about that sort of thing, very respectful about the opinions of those who form a part of the party."

With regard to the conclusions made from his recent trip to China, Santiago Carrillo stressed the following: China defends peace and understands that the greatest danger to peace is not the Soviet Union but the policy of domination which it practices. China supports the position of the PCE against Spain's entry into NATO.

With regard to the relations between the two parties, the PCE secretary general said that the trip to Beijing had served the normalization of relations, thus resuming an old friendship. This does not mean breaking or weakening relations with other communist parties, without specifying the communist party of any particular country.

PRC, DPRK Visits

LD031259 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 29 Nov 80 p 13

[Joaquin Prieto interview in Pyongyang with PCE Secretary General Santiago Carrillo: "Carrillo Supports Proposal for Reunifying Korea"--date not specified]

[Excerpts] Pyongyang--PCE Secretary General Santiago Carrillo will return to Spain today, following his 3-week stay in China and North Korea.

"China is not seeking to ally itself with the United States against the Soviet Union," Carrillo asserted, "but to achieve peaceful coexistence with all countries, including the capitalist countries, which will enable it to make progress with the country's modernization. China needs technology and credits from the United States or Japan, and nobody can be surprised by this, since various socialist countries have credits from Western countries. However, it is true that China is alarmed by conflicts such as those in Afghanistan or Kampuchea, or the deployment of troops on its border, and I am convinced that if the USSR adopts measures to rectify this situation, there would be real prospects of an improvement in the situation between the two states." In addition Carrillo denied that this lengthy contact with Asian communism implies a desire on the part of the PCE to break totally with Moscow, any more than PCI Secretary General Berlinguer's visit last spring did. "We Eurocommunist parties," he said, "would feel very satisfied if we could help reduce Sino-Soviet tension, although this would require greater understanding on the part of the Soviets for what we are doing."

With respect to the trial of the top leaders of the Cultural Revolution, the Spanish Communist leader believes that the public perhaps does not realize "the whole essence of that drama. When we toured the country we came across people who spent 10 or 12 years in prison, and we realized that many millions of people personally suffered a process which, according to the Chinese themselves, had fascist aspects. The Communist Party's role was nullified and the domination of a clique which exploited Mao Zedong's authority during the last years of his life was established."

Carrillo believes that the Spanish Government should intensify its relations with China, especially in the cultural sphere, as preparation for economic cooperation. "In this country," he said, "there is good will towards Spain, following King Juan Carlos' visit, which created an excellent impression. I believe that this should be the beginning of a far-reaching political orientation, not subject to party politics but adopted as a state policy." From the viewpoint of the PCE, that party's secretary general is confident that there is not much opposition to the step which the leadership has taken. "We were anxious to resume a friendship which had been interrupted for years," he explained, "but we were also guided by the idea that it is necessary to recover the unity of the international communist movement on the basis of each party's formulating its own line, without its being able to be manipulated by one power. And China, without entering into details about Eurocommunism, views with sympathy our efforts to achieve an original path for socialism; that country and Yugoslavia are the only ones to have published my book 'Eurocommunism and the State.'"

With respect to North Korea--in whose capital, Pyongyang, he presided yesterday over a meeting of 10,000 people which was televised live--Carrillo emphasized that this is one of the few countries in the world about which one can really speak of an economic miracle, although the phenomenon is virtually unknown in Europe. He also believes that the program for the reunification of Korea proposed by Kim Il-song "constitutes the most intelligent way of emerging from the Korean predicament," and that the United States should study the possibility of engaging in dialogue about it.

THATCHER, OTHER OFFICIALS COMMENT ON POLAND

LD031814 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1709 GMT 3 Dec 80

[Excerpts] London, 3 Dec (PA)--The international conference on human rights in Madrid could be wrecked if the Soviet Union were to invade Poland, Foreign Office Minister of State Mr Peter Blaker told MPs today.

Interference in Poland's internal affairs would be a "flagrant breach" of the accord reached at the Helsinki conference, he said during Commons question time.

"The Soviet Union is in no doubt that any foreign interference in the internal affairs of Poland would be a flagrant breach of the Helsinki Final Act," said Mr Blaker.

"It is very difficult to see how the conference could survive." Urged by a Tory backbencher to stress the threat to the conference more forcefully, he said the Soviet Union would be reminded of the position "if necessary" during the talks.

Later, the prime minister gave a statement on the European Council meeting in Luxembourg, from which she returned yesterday.

Mrs Thatcher repeated that any outside intervention in Poland would have serious consequences for international relations in Europe and throughout the world.

Leader of the opposition Mr Foot said: "It is natural that the shadow of Poland should fall across the rest of Europe during this period.

"The whole civilised world holds its breath to see what may happen following the heroic exertions of the people of Poland to establish their just rights."

Mr Foot said: "If there were any attempt from outside to interfere with that assertion of those rights, of the rights of the people of Poland to have free and independent trade unions along with their other rights, if there were any attempt to interfere with that assertion, of course it would be a tragedy and a crime against the whole world.

"I believe nodoby should be in any doubt about the serious consequences if that were to be breached."

Mr Foot said he supported Mrs Thatcher's stance that the Helsinki agreement should be applied to the present situation. Mrs Thatcher said she welcomed Mr Foot's support "on this vitally important matter." She said: "If anything happened to Poland it would be most significant, as Poland does have a unique place in Europe, and in our history and in the history of many European countries.

"Unless we keep up our defences we shall not be able to deter the strength of other nations. This government has given increased priority to defence expenditure."

Former Tory defence spokesman Mr Winston Churchill (Stretford) said that the Soviet troops on the Polish border were "a prima facie threat to peace" which should be raised at the United Nations as soon as possible.

"It is now time for Britain to embark on a major programme of re-armament in order to safeguard peace while time remains," he said.

Mrs Thatcher replied that at the moment the border between East Germany and Poland was simply a "temporary restricted area," but any movement of troops over the border would be "very different."

"It is not a new thing, but unusual to have a restriction of such a size at this time of year," she said.

Mrs Thatcher said: "At the moment we are waiting to see what further developments, if any, there will be, and hope there will be nothing beyond that temporary restricted area and that will soon come to an end."

She said that defence spend had been increased last year by 3 percent, it would rise by almost 3 percent this year, and would increase again next year.

"We have to have regard to our resources, and within our resources we have given top priority to defence," she said.

CARRINGTON CALLS FOR MORE EUROPEAN COOPERATION

LD021158 London BBC Television Network in English 2245 GMT 1 Dec 80

[Interview given by Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington to BBC's Charles Wheeler on "Newsnight" program--date and place not given]

[Text] [Wheeler] According to Lord Carrington, who will be chairman of the [EC] Council of Foreign Ministers from the middle until the end of next year, if political cooperation is to work better than it has done in 1980, then he and his colleagues have to organize themselves better:

[Begin recording] [Carrington] It started so badly. It started with the invasion by the Soviet Union of Afghanistan and, I think, a lack of consultation and coordination not just in the Community but in the West generally. It showed, I think, a lack of organization which we really are determined to remedy. I think we have remedied it. But it was a case where I don't think that the foreign ministers--and I take my share of the blame--I don't think that the Community foreign ministers met and talked about the invasion of Afghanistan for 3 weeks after it happened, and that really is not a sensible thing to do when something so serious as that happens.

[Question] Well, what prevented them?

[Answer] Well, it was partly a changeover of the presidency--you know that the presidency of the Council changes every 6 months--it happened almost in between the Irish and Italian presidencies; partly because there isn't really any secretariat or machinery which continues political cooperation; partly because there was consultation in other fora, which rather obscured the fact that we hadn't done it in Europe. In fact it was frankly a bit of a mess.

[Question] Can I put it to you that some people say that the problem is not simply a matter of organization or speedy reaction by the heads of government or foreign ministers, whoever were dealing with these things, but inevitably a certain difference of national interests and that the real trouble is that you've got nine nations each with an identifiable foreign policy finding it very difficult to pull together.

[Answer] Well, I don't actually think that it's quite true in that sense. Obviously there are differences of emphasis and interest in Europe, but not on the large issues. There was never any difference between us about the condemnation of the Soviet Union and the big moves we took. But there are obviously differences of interest in Europe--geographical, historical, political differences in Europe--which mean that the remedies we apply are not always the same ones, are not suitable. I mean, for example, if you take the actions, the economic action, we took against the Soviet Union as a result of Afghanistan, it's obvious that the Germans have a different relation with the Soviet Union because of East Germany, because of Berlin, because of the 2 million Germans behind the Iron Curtain, because of their reliance on the Soviet Union for oil. They have a very different relationship with the Soviet Union and imperatives than we have, because we don't really have any of those particular interests with the Soviet Union.

I think one's got to accept that given you have a policy of the Nine--ten on 1 January--on the large issues, you will have a shading as to what they are prepared to do.
